HOW BANK POOL WAS BORN IN A CLASH OF WILLS

Hoover vs. Gotham Financiers.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Official circles here are buzzing with "inside stories" of the genesis of the Hoover bank pool and of the negotiations between the President and the New York bankers that led up to the launching of the project.

According to a circumstantial account, the New York financiers were brought into line for the plan only after the recent stock market decline had spread alarm in Wall street and after the President had promised them to announce an extension of the Hoover moratorium on reparations and war debts. Some of the bankers are now complaining that Mr. Hoover failed to perform his part of the bargain.

Eugene Meyer Jr., governor of the federal reserve board, is credited with the conception of the idea of forming a gigantic pool to take over the frozen assets of banks and hold them until returning prosperity should make possible their liquidation at their intrinsic value.

Approved by President.

Mr. Meyer suggested his plan to President Hoover, who gave it his approval after taking counsel with Secretary of the Treasury Mellon and Secretary of Commerce Lamont. This was late in August. About the first of September the President invited four of the leading bankers of New York City to dine with him at the White House. The dinner was clothed with much mystery, the President and his guests declining to give any inkling of the purpose of the conference.

A few days later it leaked out that the President had laid the bank pool proposition before the New York bankers. It was understood at the time that Mr. Hoover had suggested half a billion if not a billion dollars as the amount that the banks might properly raise for the assistance of banks on the verge of difficulties.

Bankers Raise Objections.

The New York bankers at that time were not favorably impressed with the Hoover plan. They objected that they did not know how the leading banks of the country could raise so great an amount of money under existing conditions.

The funds that otherwise might be commanded with facility, they said, were tied up in Germany and other European and in a number of South American countries that are suffering from economic depression even more than the United States. If there were some prospect of being able to get their loans to Europe repaid at no distant date, said the bankers, they might be able to swing the gigantic project proposed by the President.

Make Counter Proposal.

Then the bankers made a proposition to the President of the terms on which they would undertake to organize the big pool. They said they would go along with the project if Mr. Hoover would agree to propose an extension for one or two years of the Hoover moratorium on reparations and war debts, which will expire July 1 next. Such an extension, if announced at this time or at an early date, would relieve tension abroad, the bankers argued, and enable them to get a large part of their money out of Europe for use at home.

Mr. Hoover rejected the terms. He did not wish to propose an extension of the war debt moratorium at this time or at any time prior to the assembling the disarmament conference at Geneva next February. He wanted to use his position in this matter as a club to force Europe into an agreement to reduce armaments. He wanted Europe to understand that if it did not agree to a disarmament program it could not expect Mr. Hoover to look favorably upon cancellation or reduction of the war debts owed America or even upon an extension of the moratorium.

His Settled Policy.

This was in line with the course the President has been charting for himself in foreign affairs for several months. He sent Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson to Europe to acquaint the chancelleries of the powers with his state of mind on the subject. The powers were to understand that the President views the war debt settlements as based on the capacity of the debtors to pay and a reopening of the settlements as justified only by a change in the capacity to pay.

If the debtors should set up the claim of incapacity to continue to pay America, he would be disposed to consider it if convinced it was made in good faith. But if the powers should

Jury Hears More of Al's Lavish Life.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

Gangland learned another lesson from the United States court yesterday. It is that a gangster who carries a gun into Uncle Sam's courtroom is liable to punishment for contempt.

Philip D'Andrea, bodyguard for Al Capone, and his constant companion during the gang chief's trial before Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson for evasion of income tax, was arrested yesterday at the close of the court session and will face a contempt proceeding before Judge Wilkerson at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning because a loaded gun was found in a belt on his right hip. He is being held without bail.

Locked Up Until Tomorrow.

D'Andrea was ordered locked up in the custody of the United States marshal until tomorrow morning, and there was no appeal from that. His defense is that he had a right to carry a gun as a deputy bailiff of the Municipal court, and he carried a star to show this. It was learned, however, that his appointment had expired with the advent of the new city administration, and that he had no right to the star.

This development of the Capone case took place just before noon as lawyers, jurors, and spectators were straggling out of the courtroom after listening to testimony of Capone's free use of his bankroll during his winter trips to his Florida estate.

D'Andrea, a serious looking, well dressed man, with a sharp and roving eye behind his gold rimmed specs, gathered up the brief case which he always carries to court and followed his chief at a few paces. Deputy marshals surrounded Capone to escort him to his car.

Seized on Judge's Order.

Just outside the doorway of the court Frank Wilson and Michael Malone, special intelligence agents of the government, who were acting on orders of Judge Wilkerson, stepped up to D'Andrea and pushed him into the judge's outer chambers. Here they searched him and found a .38 caliber revolver.

Capone, deprived of his special friend, stood in the corridor for a few minutes, not knowing what to do. He told his attorneys, Michael Ahern and Albert Fink, what had happened and they went into the chambers to do something about it. Judge Wilkerson had left the building for the football game and there was nothing that could be done.

United States District Attorney George E. Q. Johnson was notified and began an investigation. The attorneys left and Capone went away and D'Andrea was left in the cooler.

Judge Calls in D'Andrea.

At 4 o'clock, when Judge Wilkerson returned to the federal building, he ordered D'Andrea brought before him. The district attorney's staff was there, the United States marshal, and men from the intelligence unit. D'Andrea was deserted. The Capone lawyers were not there.

"Are you represented by counsel?" asked the court.

"I don't see any one around," said D'Andrea gloomily.

"Do you desire counsel?"

"I expected them at 4 o'clock," was the reply.

District Attorney Johnson said that he had notified Mr. Fink and that the attorney had said he would be there.

Cites Rule of Punishment.

Judge Wilkerson said he would wait a reasonable time, but after a few minutes he said:

"It is not necessary to have counsel here today. I do not intend to dispose of this case now. The court was informed by deputy marshals that there was an armed man in the room and ordered that he be seized and searched.

"There is a rule of the federal court of long standing, and one unquestioned, in disposition of cases of this kind. In the case of Sharon vs. Hill it is stated that any man or counsel or witness who comes into court armed should be punished. This also applies to lawyers who allowed it.

"In the future any armed man, not an officer, found in the court or corridors, or lobby or entrances of this building, will be arrested immediately.

"This case is set for 10 o'clock Monday morning and this defendant must then show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court."

Judge Wilkerson instructed Court

Chief of Police Otto Miller of Willow Springs and his only patrolman, Martin Wagner, were arrested yesterday on charges of assault and battery and assault to commit murder. An additional charge of extortion was placed against Wagner.

It was alleged that the two policemen dragged four prisoners, one by one, from their cells and beat them until they were almost unconscious. Wagner, it is charged, then demanded a total of $100 to permit them to leave the Willow Springs station, declining even to let them communicate with friends until the payment was made.

One a Disabled War Veteran.

The complainants had been arrested on a trivial charge. They are Otto Reinmuth, owner of the Midwest Motor service at 4915 South Campbell avenue; Frank McDougall, 2602 West 61st street; Walter Barnasek, 4922 South Campbell avenue, father-in-law of Reinmuth, and Frank Sklenar, 5210 South Campbell avenue, a disabled war veteran who was released from the Great Lakes hospital only a few weeks ago.

As Reinmuth told the story, he had been host at a picnic on Sept. 27 to unemployed truck drivers. It was held in the Spring Forest grove at Willow Springs. Leaving the picnic in his car, and with the other three as passengers, Reinmuth had an accident and his car went into a ditch.

Quarrel Over Towing Service.

Chief Miller and Policeman Wagner approached and a quarrel ensued, the chief telling Reinmuth, the latter said, that he could not call for any particular towing service he wanted but would have to take the one the chief wanted.

Wagner, it is alleged, began operations by knocking down the elderly Mr. Barnasek and slugging McDougall and Sklenar when they protested. The four were then marched to the Willow Springs lockup. On the way Reinmuth told the policemen that Lieut. Weber of the county highway police was his friend and asked that Weber be notified.

"So you're a tough guy and know highway policemen," Chief Miller is quoted as saying. "We'll see to that."

Tells of the Beatings.

After they had been placed in cells, Reinmuth declared, he was first called out. He claimed that both his eyes were blacked and that after he was knocked to the floor Miller and Wagner kicked him. Barnasek was next and it is claimed he suffered broken ribs.

McDougall having been similarly beaten, it is asserted that Sklenar, the disabled war veteran, was then taken to the torture chamber and that two of his teeth were knocked out by the policemen.

"Wagner said to me: 'It will cost you $100 to get out,'" Reinmuth declared. "My wife came to the station from the picnic and had some of the funds left from the picnic. I gave Wagner the $100 and the pocketed it without giving me a receipt."

The case was taken up by the Chicago Motor club and warrants for the two policemen were obtained from Magistrate Martin McGrath of Oak Park. Miller and Wagner were arrested and were released on bonds. They will appear tomorrow afternoon before Magistrate McGrath. Assistant State's Attorney Edwin Markham is the prosecutor.

It was announced that the Chicago Motor club also would push the prosecution of former Chief of Police Thomas Bartunek of Berwyn, who was reduced to a patrolman's rank after being accused of beating a citizen he had arrested for a traffic violation. The demotion was made by the fire and police committee of the Berwyn city council after a hearing.

11th Theater Is Bombed in Operator War

The Argmore theater, 1040 Argyle street, was bombed this morning and damage estimated at $200 was done to the theater building, and $400 to neighboring structures. It was the eleventh bomb blast in the war between the independent theater owners' association and the operators' union, headed by Thomas E. Maloy. Plate glass windows of Stern's drug store, 1038 Argyle street, were shattered. The entire Wilson avenue district was rocked by the explosion. Three automobiles parked in front of the theater were badly damaged.

Two bombs were hurled from an automobile that drove up to the corner, but only one of them exploded. The first bomb fell short of the theater door at which it was aimed and struck the sidewalk, in which it tore a large hole. Policeman John Welter, on guard at the theater, seized the second bomb, pulled out its fuse and tossed it into a pail of water. It was about 16 inches long and 5 inches in diameter.

Welter was in front of the theater when the bombers appeared, but so fast was their action that he could do nothing to prevent the blast. He was showered with stones and stunned, but otherwise not hurt. Policeman Michael Corrigan was on guard at the rear, but the bombers had disappeared before he could reach the front.

The theater is owned by Joseph Pastor, 4939 Kenmore avenue, a member of the executive committee of the Allied Theater Owners' association, which has been fighting the union. The double police guard was maintained because of Pastor's official connection with the theater owners.

Edison Fights Against Death as He Weakens

West Orange, N. J., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Thomas A. Edison lingered on today without food or drink, his inventive mind sunk in the stupor into which he fell yesterday, the 80th day of his illness.

Mr. Edison's remarkable vitality is keeping him alive in spite of his extreme age. At 84 he is combating the ravages of six diseases.

His physician, Dr. Hubert Howe, said after his daily visit to the inventor's home in Llewellyn Park, that Mr. Edison might lapse into a coma at any hour or that he might cling to life for several days.

He passed a restless night Friday and though his clinical condition remained unchanged, he had become so weak by today that even after he had been carried to his chair he was able to sit up only a few minutes.

Spent a Restless Night.

After his forenoon visit Dr. Howe issued the following bulletin:

"Mr. Edison had a restless night but there is little noticeable change and his clinical condition is the same as yesterday."

Amplifying the bulletin Dr. Howe said about the only change in Mr. Edison's condition was that it was increasingly difficult for him to take nourishment.

"He has had nothing in the last 24 hours," the doctor said. "In the preceding 24 hours he had six teaspoons of cocoa. He is not taking any liquids which are necessary if the uremic poisoning is to be kept from spreading through his system. Mr. Edison is in almost constant stupor, and he no longer recognizes any one with the possible exception of his wife."

Many Messages Sent.

Later Charles Edison said his father had rested quietly throughout the day and that there had been no noticeable change in his condition.

A bulletin, issued by Mr. Edison's youngest son, Theodore, at 10 p. m., said:

"Mr. Edison has been sleeping quietly for the last few hours. There is still no noticeable change in his condition."

During the day telegrams continued to arrive at the inventor's home, as they have almost daily since his illness became serious. Among the messages was one from the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, Protestant Episcopal

Among others who sent messages were Hiroshi Tanaka, president of the Electrical Association of Japan, and J. F. Owens of Oklahoma City, Okla., president of the National Electric Light association.

REPORT SEEING DIRIGIBLE FALL; SEARCH STARTED

Point Pleasant, W. Va., Oct. 10.—(AP)—A searching party organized by Point Pleasant police tonight started toward hills back of Gallipolis Ferry, W. V., behind which a blimp was reported to have fallen in flames.

The party was organized after Robert P. Henke of Gallipolis, his wife, and Dr. and Mrs. Claude Carter, also of Gallipolis, said they saw the blimp cross the Ohio river and that it fell while Henke was watching it through field glasses. Henke said the blimp was between 100 and 150 feet long and flying at an altitude of about 300 feet when it burst.

Lieut. Eckford Hodgson, pilot at the Gallipolis field, will fly over the wooded sections in search of the airship, Dr. Holzer said. The territory in which the dirigible was reported to have fallen is sparsely settled and telephonic communication with many large sections is impossible.

None Missing from Akron.

Akron, O., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Officials at the Akron air field tonight said no airship was missing. The Akron, which made a trip today, is in her hangar tonight.

CHINA DEMANDS JAPAN GET OUT OF MANCHURIA

Hands Ultimatum to Tokio Government.

The Far Eastern Crisis

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Secretary of State Stimson prepares to intervene in interests of peace.

SHANGHAI.—Japanese airplanes reported continuing bombing raids on Chinese towns.

TOKIO.—Japan outlines her demands as price for settlement of dispute.

MUKDEN.—Eye witness tells of bombing of city of Chinchow.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

GENEVA, Oct. 10.—The dispute between Japan and China over the former's occupation of south Manchuria took on a more menacing position today when it became known here that China had served what observers interpreted as a virtual ultimatum on Japan to get out of Manchuria immediately.

The Chinese demand was made known when Sir Eric Drummond, secretary general of the league of nations, informed the league council that the Chinese minister at Tokio had notified the Japanese government that Japan's troops must be withdrawn from Chinese territory immediately.

Names Men to Take Territory.

China demanded to know at once what territories the Japanese troops intended to relinquish and also demanded that instructions be sent to the Japanese military commanders "so that reoccupation can begin tomorrow." The note was dated Oct. 9, so the ultimatum would have expired today. China did not specify what steps she proposed to take if the demands were not met.

China also notified Japan that she had appointed two army men to take over the places to be evacuated by the Japanese forces.

The Chinese demand was based on the league council's resolution of Sept. 30, which accepted Japan's promise to withdraw all her trops to within the Japanese zone of the South Manchurian railway. China contends that Japan has since then had ample time to evacuate her troops from the positions they held and reëstablish the status quo.

Japan Replies with Charges.

Japan tonight replied to the Chinese ultimatum with a declaration that the Japanese military operations in Manchuria were "solely the result of anti-Japanese sentiment in China, which contravenes not only the letter but the spirit of existing treaties and constitutes a hostile act. The Chinese government will assume serious responsibility if it fails to take prompt and effective measures to suppress this agitation."

The Japanese reply charges that China, contrary to her promise to the league that she would do nothing to aggravate the situation in Manchuria, "is aggravating the situation by failing to make honest and sincere efforts to restrict the activity of anti-Japanese societies, which is endangering life and property, as well as the liberty of commerce of Japanese subjects in various parts of China."

Tokio Outlines Demands.

TOKIO, Oct. 10.—[U.P.]—The Tokio government made known for the first time today the demands it will make on China before settling the conflict in Manchuria.

The government prepared a communication making a general restatement to the world powers of Japan's position and reiterating that it has no territorial ambitions.

The communication added that Japan's demands probably will include acceptance by the Chinese of responsibility for the initial clash in Manchuria, immediately granting Japanese the right to lease land for settlement and maintaining existing territorial agreements in status quo until China is able to present "responsible authorities" capable of negotiating a full settlement.

The communication closed with a demand that anti-Japanese sentiments be removed from Chinese schoolbooks, a step in the Tokio campaign to break down resentment in China against Japan.

Planes Bombard Railway.

PEIPING, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Activity by Japanese airplanes over two Chinese towns, one of them inside the great wall, was reported today.

A report from Chinchow said a Jap anese airplane bombed and destroyed the railway junction at Taonan, Manchuria.

Another, which came from a Chinese source and could not be confirmed, said that Japanese airplanes were circling over Tangshan, a mining town seventy-five miles north of Tientsin, inside the great wall.

Manchurian headquarters said this morning that a Japanese armored train blew up a section of the track at Tungliao Junction, 200 miles northwest of Mukden, yesterday. Forty soldiers, this report said, aided by Japanese civilians, planted the explosives, which cut the line in two places. Leaflets were dropped from planes over Tungliao, it said, announcing that the Japanese army had come into Manchuria "to protect the people."

DIPLOMATS TAKE HAND

BY CHARLES DAILEY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SHANGHAI, Oct. 10.—It was reported from Peiping today that the diplomatic body is making a concrete proposal regarding Japanese expansion in Manchuria and also is preparing to make representations to Washington in connection with the reported invocation of the nine-power treaty of 1922.

In this connection, a report from Nanking states that Wang Chung-hui, leading Chinese international authority, former premier and minister of justice, is proceeding to Washington from The Hague.

The anniversary of Chinese independence today was observed with some disorder. Several attacks were made on Japanese shops. A manifesto was broadcast from Nanking declaring that the very existence of the Chinese nation is jeopardized by the Japanese military invasion and urging stout resistance. Otherwise, the manifesto declared, it would be but a prelude to complete subjugation of China.

Chiang Urges Struggle.

President Chiang Kai-shek, addressing Chinese cadets, urged a "struggle with peaceful measures to strengthen ourselves by observing the law."

The Japanese cruiser Tokiwa, with 200 marines aboard, arrived at Shanghai this afternoon. The American consul general, Edwin S. Cunningham, was formally asked by China to convene the consular body and take measures to curb the hostile action of Japanese toward Chinese citizens here.

Consular telegrams from Manchuria indicate that the Japanese have concluded secret treaties with the "puppet" government, providing for an independent state composed of Manchuria, Mongolia, and possibly Jehol, and also ceding to Japan Yingkow, Newchang, Antung, Haicheng, Chengchiatun, and Changchun, with free rights for Japanese residence and police powers in the interior and a joint operation of railways in the new state. Fengtien and Kirin would be garrisoned with 10,000 Chinese police and the railway from Changchun to the Corean gulf would also be completed.

The independence of Heilungkiang was also advocated in pamphlets dropped from airplanes at Harbin.

EYEWITNESS STORY

BY JOHN POWELL.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MUKDEN, Manchuria, Oct. 10.—Chester Rowell, California newspaper man, who came to the Far East to attend the meeting of the Institute of Pacific Relations at Shanghai, arrived here this morning from the city of Chinchow, temporary capital of Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang, Manchurian war lord. He brought the first eyewitness account of the bombing by Japanese planes Thursday of Chang's provisional headquarters. He said the Japanese bombs were all apparently aimed at the military headquarters which are housed in buildings of the Chinese Communications university, now used as government offices.

Casualties, Rowell said, included 16 Chinese killed and 9 wounded. One German university teacher, who was seriously wounded, is reported since to have died. Rowell said that practically all of the wounded were Chinese railway workers. None of the government officials was wounded.

Find Huge Holes in Ground.

Rowell made a personal inspection of Chinchow and vicinity and said the military barracks were located at a considerable distance from the university buildings housing the government offices. He inspected a large collection of bomb fragments which the Chinese had collected, and also inspected holes two and three feet deep in the hard ground. He was of the opinion that the bombs were of the high explosive variety.

Gen. M. Chun-lin, head of the provisional Manchurian government at Chinchow, claimed the Chinese soldiers did not fire on the Japanese planes. The Chinese population, and especially the railway workers, Rowell said, were terrified and are now busily digging bombproof shelters against further attacks. Chinese soldiers are posted on the hilltops ready to warn against further Japanese air raids.

Chinese Officer Seized.

Japanese authorities arrested an armed Chinese here today. He is alleged to be a military officer sent here by Marshal Chang to stir up uprisings and disturbances within the Japanese zone.

A Japanese official report this afternoon stated that Chinese officials in Kirin province have issued a declaration against Marshal Chang and have petitioned Gen. Shigeru Honjo, commander of the Japanese forces in Manchuria, to prevent a return of Chang and officials under him on grounds that they are responsible for past misgovernment.

Unofficial reports from Japanese sources claim that Marshal Chang is continuing to concentrate artillery and infantry at Chinchow and elsewhere in the vicinity of the great wall. Unofficial reports also say that the Russians are mobilizing at Blagovestchensk and Habarovsk and are establishing munition plants at Vladivostok.

Believe Russia Is Involved.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

RIGA, Latvia, Oct. 10.—Baltic observers of Russia agree that the bolsheviks have adopted a policy in Manchuria of watchful waiting. The belief is also held that Moscow has a secret agreement with Tokio concerning the Japanese occupation of Manchuria.

U. S. PREPARES TO TAKE A HAND IN MANCHURIAN ROW

Stimson Plans Notes to Japan and China.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—The stage was all set today for another American peace move in Manchuria. Alarmed by the arrival of dispatches indicating the increasing gravity of the Manchurian situation, Secretary of State Stimson spent the day preparing again to call upon the governments of Japan and China to honor their treaty obligations and refrain from a continuance of activities that threaten to lead to open war.

All indications tonight were that the notes will reach Tokio and Nanking within the next forty-eight hours. It is possible, however, that Mr. Stimson may hold his fire and time the next American step to coincide with whatever move is made by the league of nations' council following its hastily called meeting for next Tuesday.

China Asks U. S. Aid.

Today the state department received new assurance of Japan's "pacific intent" in Manchuria from Katsuji Debuchi, the Japanese ambassador. But while the Japanese envoy was informing Secretary Stimson that the bombing of Chinchow was simply an isolated incident which did not have the approval of Tokio and that Japan had no designs on Chinese territorial integrity, the far eastern division of the state department was being asked for American aid in supervising the withdrawal of Japanese forces by the diplomatic representative of China.

Yung Kwai, representing the Chinese republic, asked that this country attach two commissioners to the Chinese forces in Manchuria which the Nanking government expects will supervise the evacuation of nontreaty territory by Japanese forces, a step Japan will take if she complies with the league request.

Tokio "Deplores" Move.

TOKIO, Oct. 10.—(AP)—The war office today displayed great interest in press reports that President Hoover and his cabinet had discussed the bombing by Japanese army planes of Chinchow, the temporary Manchurian capital.

"It is to be deplored that the American government, owing to a lack of proper information, should have been misled by false propaganda on the part of the Chinese to the extent of calling a cabinet meeting on the subject," commented a war office spokesman.

"Japanese military authorities place the fullest confidence in the American government's sense of justice, and trust that Washington will appreciate Japan's position when the foreign office fully explains that the Chinchow action was entirely self-defensive, as was formally stated yesterday."

CHINA'S ULTIMATUM TO JAPAN BARED BY LETTER TO LEAGUE

GENEVA, Oct. 10.—(AP)—The following message was sent today by Sir Eric Drummond, secretary general of the league of nations council, to all members of the league:

"At the request of the Chinese government the secretary general communicates the following telegram, dated Oct. 9:

"'That Ching Tso Hsiang and Wang Shu Chang have been appointed to take over places to be evacuated by Japanese military forces and asked for telegraphic instructions to be sent to the Japanese military commanders instructing them to begin handing over.

"'No reply has been received to date. The Chinese minister is instructed to deliver a second note as follows:

"'Fulfillment of the league council resolution of Sept. 30 requires immediate transfer to the Chinese authorities of localities occupied by Japanese troops since Sept. 18. The Chinese government, having pledged itself to assume responsibility for the safety of lives and property of Japanese nationals during the withdrawal of Japanese troops and reëstablishment of local Chinese authorities and police forces, notified the Japanese government on Oct. 6 of appointments of its representatives and asked it to make immediate arrangements to enable Chinese troops effectively to take possession of the evacuated localities and thus to protect the lives and property of residents in conformity with its undertaking given at the council.

"'As no reply has been received and as the matter is extremely urgent, I am instructed to request: First, that the Japanese government indicate immediately the localities to be taken over this week; secondly, that in the course of the day instructions be telegraphed to the military commanders so that reoccupation can begin tomorrow.'"

SHOOTERS FREED; WIFE WHO WENT ALONG IS FINED

Walter A. Weber, 1245 Elmwood avenue, a commercial artist, and Cleveland P. Grant, 5749 Woodlawn avenue, an employé of the Field museum, went hunting near the village of Orland yesterday. With them went Mrs. Weber.

Their intention, they said, was to obtain specimens of bird life for scientific study. The men had state and federal permits to hunt. Mrs. Weber had none.

Shortly after sunset the trio were approached by Deputy Game Warden Peter Thanasulas, who arrested them on charges of shooting after sundown and of shooting migratory birds out of season. They were arraigned before Magistrate Henry Waje of Orland. The men were acquitted, although they admitted killing the three birds found in their canoe. Mrs. Weber, although she denied shooting at all, was find $25 and costs for hunting without a license.

Hopes for Rise to Cut Down Huge Loss.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The cost to the taxpayers of the effort to stabilize the prices of wheat and cotton already exceeds 200 millions of dollars, according to authoritative information obtained here.

At the close of trading on the grain exchanges of the country today, the loss of the Grain Stabilization corporation on its wheat operations was approximately 82 millions. This result is attained by calculating an average loss of 41 cents a bushel on 190 millions of bushels and adding $4,000,000, constituing the carrying charges for the last two months.

The loss on cotton is estimated to exceed 100 millions to date. The Cotton Stabilization corporation holds 1,300,000 bales, while 1,700,000 more are in the hands of the cotton coöperatives. The farm board has made loans on cotton at various prices up to 16 cents a pound. Cotton is now down to 6 cents a pound.

Congress appropriated 500 millions of dollars for the use of the farm board in the stabilization and coöperative marketing of farm products. This amount was to be used as a revolving fund.

The farm board has loaned 250 millions to about 60 coöperatives, exclusive of wheat and cotton. Of this amount the farm board estimates that only about 10 millions must be written off as a loss up to date. This 10 million loss was occasioned chiefly by the insolvency of coöperatives handling various farm products. The board refuses to disclose the details of these losses.

Farm board members do not deny that the result of the stabilization operations in wheat and cotton will be an enormous loss but they do not concede that it will be as much as 200 millions.

They are hoping that the present apparent loss will be materially reduced by a rising market eventually in both wheat and cotton.

Conditions in the principal wheat exporting countries, according to farm board members, give reason to expect a bull market in that cereal to develop at no distant date.

BREWSTER AND CORLISS PALMER PART COMPANY

Hollywood, Cal., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Eugene V. Brewster, one time publisher of a chain of motion picture magazines, today made known that his wife, Corliss Palmer, film actress, and he have separated. Miss Palmer was a Macon, Ga., cigar stand girl when her photograph won a prize in one of Brewster's magazines. Later, Mrs. Eleanor Brewster divorced the publisher and won a $200,000 alienation verdict against Miss Palmer. Brewster settled the matter by relinquishing control of his magazines.

Brewster and Miss Palmer came to the west coast and went through two marriages here.

Another Chip
OFF THE OLD BLOCK

We've just hewed another fair sized chip off the old block that stands between the farmer and you. We mean the expense of bringing food from the men who grow it to the women who cook it.

Last year, after buying food in the best producing sections, it cost us $35.51 a ton to get it to you—an expense which, of course, went into the price you paid.

But this year, by dint of hard work, we've succeeded in chipping the old expense block down to $32.66—a saving to customers of almost $3 on every ton of food we sell.

This is a saving to American housewives of about $300,000 every week of the year.

By keeping the difference between what the farmer receives for food and what you pay for it as small as possible, we can sell food of the highest quality at very low prices.

Average Loss Expected to Run Under $40.

An analysis of deposit liabilities in 64 state banks closed in Cook county during the last three years shows that the average account in each of these banks on closing day was only $118.22. The analysis was prepared by State Auditor Oscar Nelson.

On the generally accepted estimate that the closed banks will pay approximately 66 per cent of their deposit obligations, the average account stands to lose less than $40 if the loss amounts to that much. The $40 estimate is made without consideration of the stockholders' liability law, which compels present and former owners of bank stock to pay up any deficit remaining after other assets have been realized upon.

87% of Accounts Under $100.

"In view of the lamentation in certain quarters over the plight of closed bank depositors, it may be enlightening to the general public to learn that approximately 87 per cent of all depositors had less than $100 in the banks when they closed," Mr. Nelson said.

Tables prepared by accountants of the auditor's staff, showing total deposits tied up in the 64 banks and grading these deposits in brackets from $1 to $10,000, present a picture which, in the auditor's opinion, confutes those prophets of despair who profess to see calamity in the numerous bank closings.

In drawing up the tables the accountants analyzed the records of the three Cook county banks closed in 1929, eleven closed in 1930 and fifty closed in 1931. The total of commercial savings and club savings accounts carried in all 64 banks was 750,225, and total deposits were $88,695,118.

Summary of the Accounts.

$1 to $100 accounts	613,551
$100 to $1,000 accounts	121,235
$1,000 to $5,000 accounts	14,205
$5,000 to $10,000 accounts	904
Accounts over $10,000	330
Total accounts	750,225
Total deposits	$88,695,118
Average deposit	$118.22

The $118.22 estimate was reached by dividing the total deposits by the number of accounts. In this connection the auditor pointed out that the divisor in the calculation was increased by thousands of $1 accounts, these being mere tokens of soliciting campaigns undertaken by the banks in the past to encourage thrift.

"I have no disposition to minimize the plight of the small depositor," the auditor said. "I have no doubt that in many instances $40 means more to a jobless breadwinner than $1,000 means to a business man. But it seems to me that in few instances does the tying up of $118.22 represent the difference between distress and affluence."

"Offsets" for Larger Accounts.

Subjecting the higher brackets of the table to analysis, Mr. Nelson pointed out that in a majority of accounts above $500 the depositor was the beneficiary of an "offset," this being an arrangement whereby a customer's debt to the bank is deducted from his claim and canceled. Many of the accounts in the $500 to $1,000 bracket and practically all in the $1,000 to $10,000 brackets had the benefit of "offsets," the auditor said.

As for the 330 accounts above $10,000, the auditor said a substantial percentage of these represented public funds left on deposit by taxing bodies.

"It has been my experience in this situation that those who have the least at stake complain the loudest," the auditor said. "I have in mind a man who has been extremely active in stirring up depositors of a closed bank on the northwest side. Believing from the violence of his utterances that he must have a huge sum tied up, we examined his account. His claim, allowing for an offset, was $1.40.

Hits Hoarding Tendency.

"I would not dispute this man's right to shout for his $1.40, except for the evil he may work upon others. Far from accomplishing any constructive purpose, his activity starts distrust of other banks that are sound and incites depositors of these banks to withdraw their money for hoarding.

"Whereas the decline of the real estate was formerly the outstanding problem of the banks, the depletion of cash resources through heavy withdrawals for hoarding has now become the principal peril. I venture that if all cash now being hoarded in American cities were turned back into the banks tomorrow, failures would definitely cease."

Study of the individual bank tables disclosed a marked variation in the ratio of large and small accounts. A north shore suburban bank, for example, had practically twice the percentage of large depositors as a bank in the south side colored district. Tables of a few banks typifying conditions as a whole are presented herewith.

Wins Divorce from Opera Singer

Mme. Ganna Walska, opera singer, and her husband, Harold F. McCormick, who won a divorce in the Circuit court yesterday.

H. F. McCORMICK DIVORCES GANNA FOR DESERTION

Polish Singer to Receive No Alimony.

Harold F. McCormick was granted a divorce yesterday from his wife, Ganna Walska, famed Polish beauty and opera singer.

The decree was signed in Chicago by Judge Daniel P. Trude in the Circuit court, after Mr. McCormick, his secretary, and a friend had testified that Mme. Walska had deserted her husband.

The rapid time in which the nuptial knot of the McCormicks was severed came near to establishing a speed record for Cook county divorce courts. Following is a time table of the various steps taken:

11:00 a. m.—Bill filed in the Circuit court.
11:15 a. m.—Mr. McCormick took the stand in Judge Trude's court.
11:16 a. m.—Testimony completed.
11:18 a. m.—Testimony of two other witnesses heard.
11:19 a. m.—Settlement papers submitted for the court's approval.
11:20 a. m.—Judge Trude signed the decree.
11:21 a. m.—Mr. McCormick left the court with his attorneys.

A total of 21 minutes elapsed between the time of the filing of the action and its completion.

Absent for Two Years.

Mr. McCormick testified that his wife preferred to live abroad; that she had been in Chicago rarely since their marriage, and not at all since March, 1929. This was given as the date of Mme. Walska's desertion, and was sufficient to meet the Illinois law's requirement that the desertion must have continued more than one year.

At times, Mr. McCormick said, his wife pleaded with him to join her in living in Paris, but his business interests were here, all his friends were here, and he preferred not to desert them.

Mr. McCormick expressed the friendliest feeling for the singer he was divorcing. The following statement, signed by Mr. McCormick, was issued by his attorney, Thomas Hart Fisher:

"I am very sorry this all had to happen. Our lives were essentially along separate paths. Mme. Walska has my sincere admiration and respect. I wish her every happiness."

Receives No Alimony.

Mme. Walska will receive no alimony, Attorney Fisher revealed. A settlement of the McCormicks' property rights was presented to Judge Trude during the divorce hearing, but was not made a part of the official court record. Mr. Fisher, however, stated that no money was to be paid to Mme. Walska, and that the settlement merely made division of personal effects, wedding gifts, and real estate acquired by both parties since their marriage, which was held in joint ownership, but really was purchased by them separately.

The Polish singer is independently wealthy. She inherited $3,000,000 two years ago upon the death of a former husband, Alexander Smith Cochran, in accordance with the terms of a divorce agreement she had entered into with Cochrane. She also is said to have received a large settlement from Mr. McCormick at the time of their marriage.

Mme. Walska maintains several homes in France, including the Château de Galluis, a few miles west of Versailles, and a Paris town residence on the Rue de Lubeck.

Goes Before Judge.

The divorce bill was filed yesterday morning, and Mr. McCormick, with his lawyer and witnesses, accompanied by Attorney Victor Elting of Chicago and Phelan Beale of New York, representing Mme. Walska, went immediately before Judge Trude.

Mr. McCormick at once was placed on the witness stand and, questioned by Mr. Fisher, he related the dates of his marriage. The first, on Aug. 1, 1922, took place in Paris, and the second, which was required to legalize the marriage under Illinois laws, was solemnized in Lake Forest on Feb. 13, 1923. Mr. McCormick then told of the circumstances of Mme. Walska's desertion.

"My wife has been abroad since March, 1929," he said. "She has told me she preferred to live in Paris, and at different times urged me to live abroad with her. My business interests and all my friends were in Chicago and I felt I couldn't live abroad, so we agreed to a divorce."

On Stand Only a Minute.

That was all. The millionaire had been on the witness stand less than a minute. He was followed by Albert Morrell, who described himself as Mr. McCormick's steward, and then by Dr. John Favill, noted Chicago physician and close friend of Mr. McCormick. These two witnesses stated simply that they knew the parties, and the facts of their separation, which the witnesses said were in accord with Mr. McCormick's testimony.

Mme. Walska's counsel stood silent during the hearing. They had presented a formal replication, by which she agreed to an immediate hearing of the case and to the entering of the decree by default.

Mr. Fisher was asked whether either of the McCormicks planned to remarry.

"I do not believe so," he replied. "Certainly Mr. McCormick has no plans for remarriage."

Before his marriage to Mme. Walska Mr. McCormick was divorced by his first wife, Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick, daughter of John D. Rockefeller. Mme. Walska had had three previous husbands—Mr. Cochran, Dr. Joseph Frankel, whom she met in Berlin and who died, and Capt. Arcadie d'Eingorn of the imperial Russian army, her first husband, who was killed in battle.

KIDNAPED, ATTACKED, SHE SAYS.

DOOLITTLE LEAVES TO START DAY'S HOP TO THREE CAPITALS

Maj. James H. Doolittle took off at 8:59 o'clock yesterday at the Ford airport in Lansing in his 400 Laird racer for Ottawa, Ont., where tomorrow morning he will start a 2,500 mile speed dash connecting the capitals of three countries as an aerial feature of Columbus day. From Ontario he will visit Washington and Mexico City.

Maj. Doolittle's racing plane carried a full load of gasoline. He was followed by E. M. (Matty) Laird, designer and builder of the racer, who flew a smaller Laird racer, powered by a Ranger motor, that has a top speed of only 167 miles an hour.

Heating equipment for passenger cabins and hot spots for the Wasp and Hornet motors have been installed on eighty planes flying on the western division of United Air Lines between Chicago and the coast. Considerable snow has been reported on mountain ranges which the lines cross. Last winter the same equipment was used and the planes operated without accident through temperatures as low as 30 degrees below zero.

The airplane recently delivered to the Illinois aeronautics commission will be christened at 2 p. m. today at Sky Harbor by Mrs. Reed G. Landis, wife of the chairman of the commission. The plane will be used in the inspection of airports throughout the state.

SPECIAL FUNDS PROVIDE PAY FOR POLICE, FIREMEN

Tax Warrants Are Sold to City Deposits.

The salaries of policemen, firemen, and employés of the Municipal courts and of several minor city departments were paid yesterday by City Controller Szymczak. The police and fire salaries were due Oct. 2. The payment depleted a fund obtained through collection of license fees and the sale last week of $2,000,000 worth of 1931 tax anticipation warrants to the city's special funds.

In all of the city's funds, which are grouped together as an "aggregate of funds," there is approximately $104,000,000. Of this amount $64,000,000 already is invested, leaving $42,000,000 in cash on hand.

Opposes Further Sales.

Further sales of tax warrants to the aggregate of funds would be unwise at this time, Mr. Szymczak said. Each special fund is set aside for a designated purpose and if more of the cash is used to buy warrants work being financed by these funds might be stopped this winter.

One reason reported to have been advanced by the bankers in refusing to buy 1930 warrants was that the city has $42,000,000 in cash. Mr. Szymczak will meet the bankers on Tuesday and will explain the necessity for keeping the cash.

Included in the aggregate of funds is the traction, pension, water, and vehicle tax funds and money obtained by bond issues for the construction of bridges, installation of street lights, and other improvements. Some of this work is being carried on now, Mr. Szymczak said, and it would throw employés out of work to halt construction.

Two departments yesterday reported savings of $22,280 in their appropriations. Chief Justice Sonsteby of the Municipal court announced that he has saved $10,000 in the last four weeks through the use of six, instead of twelve, on juries. He predicted that the system will continue to save the city $2,500 each week.

Frank A. Chambers, chief city smoke inspector, announced that in his department there has been a saving of $12,280 in the first nine months of the year. The saving is 18 per cent of the department's appropriation of $68,320.

MILLIONS ASKED FOR RELIEF, NOT A CENT FOR DOLE

Samuel Insull Jr. Tells of Community Effort.

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.

Every cent and all the mills in every dollar you place with the Joint Emergency Relief Fund go to your hungry, homeless fellow citizens of Chicago.

SAMUEL INSULL JR.

"The Joint Emergency Relief Fund is an economic and economical project organized and personally operated by Chicago business men on a business basis.

"Its purpose is to raise $8,800,000 to save the unemployed of our community—not tramps from Texas—from starvation this coming winter.

Among the men who are giving many hours a day to close supervision of the work are young Samuel Insull, Stuyvesant Peabody, Russell Forgan, Ralph E. Heilman, Robert Maynard Hutchins, Bernard J. Mullaney, Charles S. Dewey, Otto C. Doering, Hal M. Lytle, Edward L. Ryerson Jr., Clifford W. Barnes, Victor A. Olander, Frank D. Loomis, Joseph E. Otis, Howard W. Fenton, D. F. Kelly, Sol Kline, James B. Forgan Jr., and Lewis E. Meyers.

No performers on paper in that list!

Young Insull's Detestation.

Young Samuel Insull said:

"Of all things I hate a paper job. This isn't. It's real. It's as real as hunger."

"But will the Joint Emergency Relief Fund get this $8,800,000, Mr. Insull?"

"We'll get it if it's there. We think it is."

Young Insull, keeping at the age of thirty the laborer's hours his father keeps at the age of seventy, is at his desk at 8 o'clock in the morning. He tries to clear away his private affairs by ten o'clock. At that hour he bolts over to 10 La Salle street and, as chairman of the Joint Emergency Relief Fund's campaign officers, he jumps into its affairs and keeps jumping until six or seven in the evening.

He has the gift of driving straight to the heart of a proposition.

As when he said:

"We are not trying to raise $8,800,000 to hand out in doles. We are raising relief to meet need caused by a bad economic situation. The difference between a dole and a relief is that a dole is a fixed sum whether you need it or not. A relief just barely meets your needs and on it you can't sit out in the sun and smoke, as in England on the dole."

The Joint Emergency Relief Fund is not just talking.

Within the last week it has raised $1,037,555, counting Julius Rosenwald's gift of $250,000 made on condition that five other gifts, each of the same amount as his, are made.

No fat, lazy, sanctimonious paid secretaries or loquacious "managing directors"—too often only a stylish name for racketeers—work for the J. E. R. F.

It has no pay roll for help.

It pays no percentage to collectors.

It pays no rent for costly quarters.

Why Every Cent You Give Counts.

It has bought no office furniture.

It does not buy so much as a postage stamp out of the money you may have given it.

When its telephone bill is due the telephone company stands the bill and promptly follows it with a check for the amount of the bill.

Ditto for electric light.

Its letter paper is a contribution.

So are pencils, erasers, pins, paper fasteners, blotters, typewriters, bookkeeping machines, filing cabinets, auditing service, and messengers.

Those contributions in kind are an honor to many a great Chicago firm.

They include printing, billboards, stenographic service, and loan of expert department managers.

The express companies are helping on the transmission of pledged sums.

The Association of Commerce turned over rent free to the fund its old headquarters at 10 La Salle street on which the lease has not expired.

The staff of 100 men and women for handling office details of money raising is all volunteer as to the high-ups. But the stenographers' wages are paid by the firms who loaned them, although there are some purely volunteer stenograpers from business colleges.

No Fleet of Autos.

The J. E. R. F. has no fleet of autos for hangers-on to go gallivanting around town in.

Its staff is not skipping over rugs bought out of your dollar.

Young Insull is not repetitious, but more than once he peered eagerly through his big spectacles, pounded his knee and said, "Cost to raise per dollar? There is no cost to raise so far as the giver is concerned. Not one cent is taken out of the giver's dollar."

Well equipped for doing its work though the J. E. R. F. is, it is not a sponge. All that it gets free is given by the men in it to the end that the Fund may show a clean, honest face to generous people.

And, though it is highly organized, it is not—in John Boyle O'Reilly's withering phrase—"organized charity, scrimped and iced, in the name of a cautious, statistical Christ."

It is organized to perform a big, wearing task expeditiously, carefully, with human feelings, and without waste.

It feels that it has a job in economics as well as deeds of charity on its hands. It has a lively consciousness of the peril to all of us in the present situation. It does not, for reasons of safety as well as for reasons of decent feeling, wish to see the squalid and menacing tragedy of Glasgow repeated in State street and on Michigan avenue.

It does not wish to behold want exasperated into crime.

Seneca Said It 1,800 Years Ago.

"Join in a movement," said young Insull, "to put $8,800,000 into circulation." He may or may not know that Seneca beat him to that practical point nearly nineteen centuries ago when he said, "Whatever we give to the wretched we lend to fortune." And Seneca was not only a philosopher but a statesman. He was a practical man.

The principal aims of the J. E. R. F. are:

1 To provide work for as many as possible.

2. To provide food, shelter, and baths for the out of work.

3. To weed out the worthless and drunken from the worthy and sober. Thorough systems of registration and checking go far toward accomplishing that.

4. To send loafers and panhandlers from out of town back to their own towns.

5. To raise $8,800,000 to perform those four tasks. The first estimate of money required was ten millions, but it was pared down to what Mr. Insull and his first aid, Mr. Frank Loomis, say is "the rock bottom figure."

For us who are not—yet—out of work the J. E. R. F.'s campaign has this extraordinarily pleasing aspect:

Instead of being bewildered and badgered by five major drives for our money, and numerous neighborhood drives, we shall face only one, because the fund—as collector—is acting for the five premier organized charities of Chicago—the United Charities, the Salvation Army, the Catholic charities of the archdiocese, the Jewish charities, and the Chicago chapter of the Red Cross—and 150 private agencies, ranging from little hospital clinics to German aid socities and similar bodies, that do very useful and intimate work.

How the Plan Works.

"The function," said Insull Jr.—as he crisply identifies himself over the phone—"of the $8,800,000 fund is to take care of the overload of the recognized and trustworthy charitable agencies of Chicago in these pressing times. At the end of every month the fund will reimburse them for each excess job they have done. We pay 'em, to put it bluntly, for the extra work they have done. We underwrite their overload created by the present emergency. In return they must stick to an agreed cost for the work and must avoid duplication. If one gets more money than another, it is because it does more work.

"The five big agencies—United, Salvation Army, Red Cross, and Catholic and Jewish charities—spent last year, I should add, about ninety per cent of the money Chicago gave to organized charities. This, in the current crisis, immensely simplifies the Fund's contacts and allotments as well as reduces the overhead expense of the old accredited agencies for collecting money.

"In return, the five great agencies have agreed to call off their campaigns for funds and not to push private drives. They can go to their regular subscribers for regular amounts but not for plus subscriptions."

Despite its battery of impressive names I approached the J. E. R. F. with guard up. I was told so to do when assigned to write about it. In half an hour I was disarmed.

For two hours and twenty minutes I listened to Mr. Insull, Mr. Loomis, and Mr. E. Frank Gardiner, and at the end of that time favorable first impressions were confirmed.

The Essential Question.

In reply to the important question, "How and on what basis was the estimate of $8,800,000 made?" Mr. Insull said:

"It's a budget running from Oct. 1 of this year to Oct. 1 of next. Two hundred charitable agencies made for us surveys of their overload needs. Those reports were combined and analyzed by a plans and estimates committee working in conjunction with the Chicago Council of Social agencies. That work was finished in July. At that time they estimated the minimum as $10,600,000. It was referred to our committee for review and was felt to be too large to be raised at one time. Too discouraging! People would not even try to meet it. We felt that the sum should be less than nine millions. So we reduced all items and reluctantly eliminated some. The result is rock bottom."

Mr. Insull said that he has the honor to be working with men who are spending—they don't call it sacrificing—time on the J. E. R. F. which their own businesses need in these parlous times.

Hutchins is out for big gifts and has 200 aids who are working on names considered good for $1,000 each.

Dewey, former assistant secretary of the United States treasury and financial adviser to Poland, has charge of the campaign for a day's pay a month for six months from full-time employés.

Doering is in charge of suburban work. "Many suburban communities," said Mr. Insull, "have their own community chests. Some have all they can do. Some can do more. Some can't take care of their own. Mr. Doering sees whether they are covering their own field. If not, we help them, or, if they are, they help us. The north shore towns are helping us."

Lytle's Speakers Battalion.

Lytle will place 179 speakers in the field, assigning them to the most sedate clubs, to noonday meetings of factory workers, and to local improvement associations, women's clubs, churches, and universities.

Peabody, with eleven vice chairmen, is reaching out among churches, Kiwanis, women's clubs, and local neighborhood organizations, and Insull says that work is "going like a house afire."

Mullaney is working through federal, state, and municipal employés and has the full coöperation of the authorities.

J. Russell Forgan is in charge of promotion and control of benefit baseball games. "His job," said Insull, "is largely to suppress rackets and well meaning people who get out of their depth."

Make Way for the Lady.

Mrs. Joseph M. Cudahy is chairman of the women's division of the campaign, and of her Insull said: "She has the charm of a woman and the dash of a go-getter. Her tasks are. [1] to organize teams of women for neighborhood work; [2] to dispose of tickets for benefits, and [3] to publicize the movement among women so that a wife will agree to let her husband give."

"Last year 138,000 families required relief," said Mr. Insull. "This winter the minimum will be 150,000. Homeless men aided last year numbered 32,000. This year there will easily be 40,000 or more. The maximum number lodged on any one night of last winter was a little les athan 7,000. This winter the maximum will be 10,000. Last winter was mild.

"Direct family relief (pure charity) costs $35 a month per family for families averaging five each. Special work relief costs $55 a family, but is far better because it preserves self-respect.

"This winter the capacity of the seventeen shelters will be 10,000 lodgings nightly and 20,000 meals daily."

Next Sunday Mr. Bennett will unfold the romance of forty years of astounding growth and achievement at the University of Chicago, this city's wonder-child. It is a tale of vivid men and majestic architecture.

ADVOCATES A STATE SYSTEM TO PLACE JOBLESS AT WORK

The third winter of unemployment should be approached with the same feeling as a physician facing an epidemic with the hope of finding clews to avert such a catastrophe in the future. That was the opinion expressed yesterday by Miss Mollie Ray Carroll, associate professor of social economy at the University of Chicago. She spoke at the meeting of the League of Women Voters in the Congress hotel.

Miss Carroll has just returned from Europe where she made a study of unemployment. She advocated in Illinois an adequate placement system to provide jobs for the unemployed with a personnel acquainted with both industry and social work.

"We need to develop employment exchanges," said Miss Carroll. "Even in bad times work can be found somewhere. We need to eliminate the constant walking of the streets of those seeking jobs. If there is anything in the world that undermines people's morale it is that."

Jacob Billikopf, director of the Federation of Jewish Charities in Philadelphia, the other speaker, advocated unemployment insurance.

YOUNG GIVES DETAILS OF DRIVE TO RAISE FUNDS FOR JOBLESS

New York, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Coöperation is widespread and whole hearted as that marking the Liberty loan drives during the world war has been obtained for the unemployment relief campaign which opens throughout the United States Oct. 19, Owen D. Young, chairman of the President's committee on mobilization of relief resources, said today. "Communities throughout the country are making provision for their own needs, and the funds they raise will be administered and distributed where they are raised," he said.

"The mobilization committee will not engage in these local campaigns. It will give them aid of a national character."

Advertising on a national scale has been arranged, Mr. Young said, and the coöperation of newspapers and periodicals, the motion picture industry and broadcasting companies has been enlisted.

"Not one cent of the money that is given to the local funds will be used to meet the expenses of this nationwide program," Mr. Young added, explaining that these facilities are being furnished without cost. The drive will last until Nov. 25.

Red Cross Aids Nearly Half Million War Veterans

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—(AP)—The Red Cross gave needed help to nearly half a million war veterans or their families last year.

The relief agency's annual report, now being printed, shows that in the year ending last June 30, the 3,000 Red Cross chapters either gave direct relief to 433,000 veterans or their families or handled the former service men's claims due to service.

Deport 100 Aliens; Many Are in Destitute Class

One hundred aliens from the Chicago district were started back to their homelands on a special train at 11:20 last night. Most of those deported were destitute persons taking advantage of the government's offer of free transportation, according to Shirley Smith, director of immigration. Only five of the number had criminal records.

ONLY TWO LEFT IN G. A. R. POST THAT ONCE NUMBERED 102

Auburn, N. Y., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—The only two surviving members of the once flourishing Murray post of the G. A. R. of Canandiagua attended what may be the post's last meeting today. Edward H. Frary, 91, and Henry F. Thomas, 88, were the remaining members of the post, which was organized in 1880 with a membership of 102. Frary was elected commander and Thomas, junior vice commander.

PHONES POLICE SHE'S ENDING LIFE, THEN TAKES DRUG

Lieut. Ollie Hoffman of the detective bureau answered a telephone call late last night. The caller introduced herself as Miss Dolly Malone, 40 years old, living at 620 North State street.

"I'm going to end my life," she warned. Then she hung up. Lieut. Hoffman notified East Chicago avenue police and a squad rushed to 620 North State street. They found her already suffering from poisoning. Several letters were found in her apartment, but were not opened.

One of the letters was addressed to the Rev. Mr. Hayes of the Holy Name cathedral. Another was written to James J. McGrath, believed to have been her employer at one time. He is said to be a park concession operator. Miss Malone was taken to the county hospital.

SHOWER OF GIFTS SWELLS HUNGRY CHILDREN'S FUND

Benefits Offered to Help Raise Cash.

BY KATHLEEN M'LAUGHLIN.

Cash contributions to the Hungry School Children's Fund will be received at the following Tribune offices: 1 South Dearborn street, 1101 East 63d street, and 4152 West Madison street.

Chicago's immediate reaction to the announcement a few days ago that children in the city schools were suffering from lack of food was—action. By mail and telephone, in person and by proxy, came the cash contributions and the offers of benefits to raise more. Custodians of the fund have been kept hopping since then, handling the messages of encouragement and suggestions for future operations for the good of the fund, which is required to give at least 15,000 children some substantial nourishment each day which they cannot get in their own homes.

Legion Sends Check.

Prompt action was taken by the Cook county council of the American Legion, which not only indorsed the movement and voted $100 as an immediate donation, but pledged the coöperation of all the posts in the county for future help. The council's check for the cash appropriated was received yesterday, too late to be included in the auditor's list of contributions today.

Numerous other offers flowed in from organizations of various types. Young Chicago, a society of young men dedicated to the bettering of civic and governmental affairs, offered "the services of our organization as a whole, and of our members as individuals, in the furtherance of your campaign," and asked for ideas as to coöperation.

"We will, of course, be of all possible financial aid," the letter concluded.

Offers Orchestra Services.

George Bastian, a young orchestra leader, called to proffer the services of his ten piece aggregation for any benefit to be staged for the fund by any organization. His suggestion was that the orchestra's services be donated for any dance or party to be held for the purpose, the proceeds to go one hundred per cent to the hungry school children's fund.

A similar offer was made by Miss Anna Joseffer, leader of a string quartet comprising two violins, a viola, and cello.

Several housekeepers wrote, declaring that although they could not afford to contribute money, they would gladly provide a noon meal for one or two children from nearby schools if the children would come to their homes. Because of the difficulties involved, these offers also were not considered the best procedure to follow. The ideal plan, it has been decided, is to feed the children at the schools.

Suggests Using Milk.

One interesting suggestion came from State Representative Richard J. Lyons of Mundelein. He points out that the taxpayers are financing the production of great quantities of milk at the model farms at the University of Illinois, which is then sold over the counter to the public in that area in direct competition with private business. This milk, or at least the surplus, should be used, he feels, to help relieve the distress among children of the state.

Inquiry of the Champaign County milk producers elicited the information that the approximate total of milk produced by the university herd is 90,000 pounds a month at present, and before the middle of November, when quite a number more cows freshen, will reach at least 140,000 pounds per month. There are about 192 one-half pints of milk in each hundred pounds.

"When that herd was started," Representative Lyons said yesterday, "there was no intention of making it the huge one it is now, or of producing more than enough milk to teach the agricultural students proper farming methods. There are children in the industrial districts of the state to whom the surplus of milk could be distributed to a great advantage. At present we have the taxpayers supporting a business in competition against themselves."

ELEVATOR MAN OUT OF A JOB AFTER 38 YEARS

One of Chicago's oldest elevator men, who operated a hydraulic lift in the Home Insurance building at La Salle and Adams streets for 38 years, is out of a job. The building is being torn down to make way for the new 42 story Field building. Despite his 65 years, Tollak Peterson, 5912 West Superior street, is eager to get to work again, even if he has to do something else than run an elevator.

Peterson estimates that he traveled a distance of 65,000 miles in the old elevator he operated, as he made an average of two trips every five minutes from the first to the eleventh floors, a distance of about 150 feet. In all of his years' experience he never had an accident. He recalls many leaders of business in Chicago of two and three decades ago, and knew P. D. Armour, the first tenant in the building.

Warners to Produce 70 Films; Many to Get Jobs

Hollywood, Cal., Oct. 10.—(AP)—J. L. Warner, vice president in charge of production for the Warner Brothers-First National studios, tonight announced immediate launching of a production program which will put 14 companies to work in the next two months at an outlay of about $2,500,000. The schedule calls for from 400 to 900 extras daily, with about 140 players under contract. Seventy pictures are to be made.

ST. VINCENT'S IS HAVEN FOR CITY'S HOMELESS TOTS

Many Thousands Cared For in Last Fifty Years.

BY KATHERINE KELLEY.

The great iron gates slightly ajar, the open door, the quiet welcome that asks no questions — a haven for a foundling. That is St. Vincent's Orphanage and Infant asylum.

The city throbs past 721 North La Salle street toward the shadowy cavern at the thoroughfare's end where big business buys and sells and trades. But little citizens without name or home stop at St. Vincent's. They find it a house by the side of the road capable of supplying both name and home and plenty of mothering thrown in for good measure.

The first St. Vincent's opened its arms to all races and creeds in a little frame house on Orleans street fifty years ago. There were forty children cared for by four Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul. In order to care for the thousands of charges St. Vincent's on the eve of its semi-centennial last December completed a six story structure occupying the block on La Salle street between Huron and Superior streets.

Should you chance into the orphanage on a sunny fall afternoon and follow the sister as she makes her rounds to see that all is well among the small guests, the old drab picture of the poor little orphan hungering for a mother's love will fade from your eyes.

"Vincent, please, leave the window curtain alone," cautions Sister Catherine. Her eyes are smiling but she means business. Vincent knows it. Sister Catherine takes the boy in her arms. Vincent reaches for the stiffly starched white cowl and laughs as he gives it a few pats. Once more everything is right in his small world.

The sister stoops to ruffle the kinky hair of a year old Negro baby.

During the last ten years 482 children have been placed in the orphanage by parents unable to care for them, 632 babies have been brought to the orphanage by the police, and 394 have been sent there by the Juvenile court. The number of unwed mothers totaled 2,331, with a corresponding number of children. This makes a total of 6,171 children and mothers cared for during the last decade, and a grand total of more than 40,000 during the life of St. Vincent's.

The depression did not pass by St. Vincent's, however worthy the institution, and gifts are welcomed now a never before. The orphanage is dependent upon much of its maintenance fund from the annual football benefit. The football game this year will be held on Oct. 24 at Soldier's field when De Paul university will meet Nebraska college. Mrs. L. Robert Mellin, is chairman of the benefit committee.

PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT, EVEN IN ROBBERY VICTIM

James Reader, 6940 Clyde avenue, owner of a drug store at 1743 East 55th street, has been held up eight times in the last two and a half years, and so when two grim looking men entered the store last night he instinctively recognized them as bandits and, with a quickness born of experience, elevated his hands.

Reader was right. The men were bandits. Reader went further than merely submitting to the robbery. He called to Paul Bridgett, his Negro porter, who was in a rear room. "Come on out, Paul," he shouted, "we're held up again."

The bandits took $140 and escaped. Reader ran out the front door and called for help. Police responded. Reader eyed them dubiously. "I don't know if it's worth while to tell you about the robbery," he said. "It never seems to do any good. Last year a man who held me up was arrested, and the judge put him on probation." Reader finally gave a report of the holdup.

JUDGE LOCKS UP GUNMAN SEIZED AT CAPONE TRIAL

Gang Leader's Bodyguard Faces Contempt Case.

Clerk Chris Gunther to make out a motion slip entitled "United States vs. Philip D'Andrea," and remanded the gangster to the custody of Marshal Henry C. W. Laubenheimer.

"The offense is so flagrant and the affront to the court so serious," the judge said, "that no application for bail will be considered until Monday morning."

D'Andrea was then taken by Deputy Marshal Benjamin Goldstein to the county jail.

MORE SPENDING SHOWN

Expenditures by Capone totaling [illegible]1,664.59, made during his winter sojourns in 1928 and 1929 on his estate at 93 Palm island, Miami, were proved by the government at the half-day session of the trial which preceded the arrest of D'Andrea.

It was stipulated by the defense that [illegible]7,550 of this amount was sent to Capone under various names from the Western Union office in the Lexington hotel, Chicago, one headquarters of the Capone organization. Among those who forwarded the money were Jack Guzik, who was referred to in the trial yesterday as Capone's "financial secretary"; Bobby Barton, Guzik's chauffeur, and Charles Fishetti, gangster cousin of Capone. The money transfers were shown to the jury.

Al a Princely Spender.

Capone spent money like a prince, according to the tales of the Florida witnesses who went on the stand to face their patron. One witness said he had "a roll big enough to choke an ox," and he nearly always paid in cash.

Among the items of expenditure were telephone bills of $8,385.61 for a four year period, $1,725 for draperies for his $40,000 house, $6,500 for meats during three winter visits, $1,011 for a pier and boat house, $6,300 for garage and bathhouse, $1,176 for bread, cake, and macaroni, $490 for iron gates, [illegible]00 for linen and cooking utensils, [illegible],100 for trees, shrubs, and landscaping, and $11,000 for a swimming pool and small buildings on the well guarded estate.

Capone Enjoys the Session.

Capone enjoyed the court proceedings and frequently exchanged smiles with the Florida witnesses, his former workmen, contractors, butcher, baker and others who had supplied his large wants and taken largely from his roll.

He was annoyed once only. That was when the man who had built his pier and boathouse said that Capone still owed him $125 and he had been afraid to try to collect it, as he was afraid of the men around Capone and could not get near him.

Capone prompted his lawyer to put questions indicating that this man had been overpaid and that the gangster had been cheated on the contract. He frowned at this witness, although the witness, a rough workman, said that in his opinion Capone was "a mighty fine man."

Defense Piles Up Objections.

The Capone lawyers did little cross-examining and apparently are not prepared to question the facts of receipts of large sums by Capone and his expenditures. They are massing their defense upon legal objections to be argued later, touching the admissibility and value of all these things to prove a taxable income against Capone.

There have been indications in their questions that they will also attempt to show that Capone lost large sums in gambling and was always in debt. The government admits that there are several "novel" points of law to be settled before this case is decided.

Mr. Fink objected to evidence of expenditures yesterday on the ground it could have no potent value in the case.

"I think it may have," said the court in overruling the objection.

Trial to Go On Tomorrow.

The government case may be concluded by next Wednesday. Capone's attorneys have not disclosed how many witnesses they have. The government still has important evidence to present and promises that the case will end "with a bang." A session will be held tomorrow, as the jurors decided to work on Columbus day.

The stipulations by the defense over the transfer of money to Capone enabled the government to dispense with about fifteen witnesses and the case was speeded up during the morning so that twelve more witnesses were disposed of.

FOTRE RESUMES STAND

John Fotre, manager of the Western Union telegraph office in the Lexington hotel, resumed the witness stand when court convened at 10 a. m. Fotre, the last witness at Friday's session, had been advised by Judge Wilkerson to "think it over" when he appeared hesitant in his testimony. It was expected that the witness would continue telling of money transfers sent to Capone in Miami by various of his henchmen, corroborating other testimony of Friday.

As Assistant United States Attorney Dwight H. Green started to question Fotre, however, Defense Attorney Ahern approached the bench.

MR. AHERN—The defendant, if it pleases the court, will stipulate, with respect to all the money transfers which have heretofore been received in evidence, that those money orders and drafts match the applications accompanying them and that the money originated at the place designated.

MR. GREEN—They may be received in evidence?

MR. AHERN—Subject to the objections that have heretofore been made.

Fotre was excused from the stand, subject to another appearance if the government wishes his testimony.

More Money Transfers.

Assistant Attorney General William J. Froelich of Washington, a special prosecutor in the case, then read into the record the data of three money transfers not heretofore offered. The first two showed that a total of $7,300 had been sent to Capone in Miami from the Lexington hotel by Bobbie Barton, Jack Guzik's chauffeur.

The third transfer, addressed to Albert Costa, one of Capone's aliases, was for $1,000 and was sent from the same hotel by Charles Fishetti, mentioned often before in the trial evidence as a Capone man.

These additions to the sum already in the record as having been sent to Capone raised the total of the money that reached him in Florida to $85,850.

W. T. Harris, business manager of the Southwestern Bell Telephone and Telegraph company at Miami, was then called to the stand. It was the intention of Assistant United States Attorney Jacob I. Grossman to show all of Capone's long distance calls, principally to Chicago, which were made from the gang chief's Palm Island home.

The defense objected but was overruled and a summary of the phone bills for 1928 and 1929 was introduced. The first year's total was $955.55 and the total for 1929 was $3,141.50. Grossman also read the totals for the next two years—$3,061.92 for 1930 and $1,226.64 from January to May, 1931.

Fink Tilts with U. S.

MR. FINK—Now what in the world has 1930 and 1931 to do with this lawsuit? (They are not included in the years when Capone is charged with paying no income tax).

MR. GROSSMAN—The bill payments show that money was available to pay taxes.

THE COURT—And they used it to pay telephone bills with.

MR. FINK [smiling]—We were trying to pay the taxes, and apparently the government wouldn't take them, and had us indicted.

THE COURT [smiling in return]—Because you did not want to pay enough.

The next witness was Richard Plummer, an interior decorator in Miami, who did work on Capone's Palm Island home. His testimony was brief and uncontested. He stated that he decorated the home during 1928, and supplied draperies for it. His bills amounted to $1,725 and Capone paid them in cash, Plummer said.

Former Hotel Auditor Testifies.

Plummer was succeeded on the stand by George F. Geinzer, former auditor at the Metropole hotel, 23d street and Michigan avenue, where Capone lived for several months. Geinzer's testimony was confined to the identification of a hotel record showing that Capone had paid a bill on Aug. 4, 1927, of $2,085.88. The gangster paid him in cash, Geinzer said.

Next was Louis Karlebach, Miami Beach butcher, who testified that he sold meats to the Capone household during 1927, 1928, and 1929. His total bills amounted to $6,500, he estimated, the weekly bills running to $200 and $250. He sometimes cashed telegraphic money transfers for Capone, he said. He identified one transfer of $500 and another of $2,000. He was then turned over for cross-examination.

MR. FINK—You don't think Al ate all this meat himself, do you? A.—One man couldn't eat all that. I didn't say that Al did eat it.

Mr. Fink had a hearty laugh and the witness was excused.

Boathouse Builder on Stand.

Following him was H. F. Ryder of Miami, who built a dock and boathouse at Capone's Palm Island home in 1928. He proved a garrulous witness, taking considerable time to say that he had built the improvements for $1,011, after another contractor "got hungry and spent the money he had received for it." There were numerous "extras," including the rent Capone paid him for the use of his car, Ryder said, $50 a week for five weeks.

THE WITNESS—I was paid all but $125—through a misunderstanding, I think—and subsequently I had to pay it out of my own pocket. It was due some material supply men.

Treated "A Little Rough."

Q. [By Mr. Grossman]—Are you trying to collect it? A.—Well, there was one time I went over there and tried to collect it and Mr. Al wasn't there and his wife was there. And there were several of his employés around. I would say they were employés because they treated me a little rough, so I thought it was best for me to get out.

Q.—Did you ever see any Western Union boys around there? A.—Yes, sir, it seemed like most every hour.

Q.—See any money wrappers around there? A.—I saw them by the handful.

Q.—What were the labels on the backs of the money wrappers? A.—$1,000.

Ryder said he was once paid a bill for $250 while Capone was sick. Mrs. Capone took a key and opened a cupboard in the house and gave him the money, he said.

Q.—Did you see any other money there at the time? A.—Plenty of it.

On cross-examination by Mr. Fink Ryder said the rol of bils displayed was as "big as your wrist."

Q.—It might have been, for all you know, what some of the boys call a western bank roll; that is with a big bill on the outside and all the balance of them one dollar bills? A.—They may have been one dollar bills or a bunch of paper.

Q.—All your dealings with Al were pleasant? A.—Very pleasant.

On redirect examination of the witness Prosecutor Grossman again brought out the statement that Capone still owed Ryder $125. "I think he will give it to me eventually," Ryder said.

Capone Scowls at Witness.

At this, Capone suddenly leaned forward in his seat at his lawyers' table, flung an arm around Mr. Ahern and began to whisper. He was scowling. Ahern listened for a moment, then asked the court for an opportunity to cross-examine the witness himself. This was granted.

MR. AHERN—The defendant owes you $125. A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Well, you left your tools and your scow on his place, didn't you? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—And you left them because you didn't complete your contract, didn't you? A.—Everything was completed.

At Capone's prompting, Ahern then began a rapid fire questioning which brought out that, whereas the money had been owed to him since 1928, Ryder did not attempt to collect it last year when Capone was in Miami. The witness said he had not known Capone was in Miami in 1930.

CIGAR BRINGS GIGGLES

The next witness was Curt Otto Koenitzer, Miami contractor and builder—a short, stocky man. He walked to the stand with a jovial look on his face, fingering a cigar as he went. When he had been sworn a deputy marshal relieved him of the cigar to the accompaniment of giggles all over the courtroom.

Koenitzer built a garage and a bath house on the Capone estate, he said, receiving $6,000 for the work. He was paid by Mrs. Capone, he said.

The witness had a peculiar resonance when he answered "Yes, sir" to questions, placing the accent upon the "sir" with enormous finality—a trick of speech that more than once brought laughter. At the close of his testimony he retrieved his cigar and left, smiling.

He was succeeded by Melvin Goldstrom, Miami baker. Goldstrom has sold bakery goods to the Capone family since 1929, he said. He placed the amounts of the bills at $64 for 1929, $761 for 1930, and $351 from January to June, 1931. Frank Newton, Capone's caretaker, paid the bills, Goldstrom said. He was cross-examined by Mr. Fink as follows:

Q.—Some of that [the daily orders] was for cake? A.—For bread.

Q.—A little cake in it now and then? A.—A little cake in it, yes.

F. A. Whitehead, secretary-treasurer of Dyke's Iron works in Miami, was called to the stand. His company built an iron gate for the wall surrounding Capone's Palm Island estate, he said. It cost $490 and he was paid with a check signed by Jack Guzik.

Store Manager Smiles at Capone.

H. J. Etheridge, department manager of Burdine's department store in Miami, was the next witness. After he had given his name, Prosecutor Grossman said: "You are smiling at some one. Who is that?"

THE WITNESS—Mr. Capone.

Q.—O yes, the defendant. You know him. He selected some merchandise at your place?

Mr. Etheridge replied that Capone had bought some linens, glassware and cooking utensils to the amount of $800 at the store.

Joseph K. Brower, Miami landscape gardener, was next on the stand. He testified that he had planted shrubs, trees, and flowers on Capone's estate and had been paid, in part, with a $500 check signed by Jack Guzik.

"Naturally I looked at the check," Brower testified, "and Mr. Capone explained that it was his financial secretary who signed it." Three other Guzik checks were given to him by Capone, plus some cash, his bill amounting to $2,100, Brower said.

Frank Gallat, Miami builder who constructed a garage and other buildings for Capone, testified next that he had been paid "between $10,000 and $11,000" for the work.

He was succeeded on the stand by John Newton Lummis Jr., Miami real estate dealer and at present tax assessor of Dade county, Florida. Lummis recounted the details of Capone's purchase of the Palm Island home, which were given on Friday by Parker Henderson of Miami. Lummis was the last witness of the day.

HEAD OF OPERA SCHOOL SEIZED AS ALIEN SMUGGLER

U. S. Agents Also Quiz Lottie Brenner.

DR. FERRARO. [Tessler Photo.]

Dr. Carmen Ferraro Sr., head of the International Grand Opera Music school at 64 East Jackson boulevard, and five other persons were seized yesterday by agents from the United States department of labor in connection with an investigation into an alleged international smuggling ring. Dr. Ferraro and the others, whose names were not revealed, are charged with conspiracy to smuggle aliens into this country.

Aliens have been spirited over the lines in the guise of students at the music school, according to the charges. The immigration law permits the entry of students as nonquota aliens. The payments to the smugglers ranged from $200 to $13,000, depending on the health of the alien, it was reported.

Held in $10,000 Bond.

Dr. Ferraro was held in bonds of $10,000 for a hearing on the charges on Oct. 21. Aside from his music school, which has branches in London, Paris and Naples, Dr. Ferraro runs a steamship ticket agency, the agents said.

The arrests were made as the result of eight complaints received by the government. Murray W. Garsson, a special agent of the office of Secretary of Labor Doak, and thirty of his detectives have been investigating smuggling in Chicago and other cities on Lake Michigan.

Question Lottie Brenner.

Soon after the arrests the agents called in and questioned Mrs. Lottie Brenner, 5839 Sheridan road. Mrs. Brenner resumed the name of her first husband, a former Chicago alderman, on her recent divorce from Enrique Dechow, who posed as Count von Buelow. The government is seeking to deport Dechow.

Garsson would not disclose his purpose in questioning Mrs. Brenner, but it is reported that she has information on how her former husband entered the United States.

Meanwhile the government agents continued their hunt for those they termed "the higher ups in an international alien smuggling ring." Foreigners brought into the United States through the channels opened by this syndicate have paid from $200 to $8,000 for their illegal entries, according to Garsson. As many as 500 at a time have been smuggled across the border, it was said.

The $200 minimum payment was exacted from the healthiest of the aliens, while the higher prices were demanded from those afflicted with trachoma and other communicable diseases, Garsson revealed.

PUBLICATION IS SUSPENDED BY JEWISH COURIER

The Chicago Daily Jewish Courier yesterday announced an indefinite suspension of publication. In an editorial the paper intimates that the immediate cause of its cessation of publication is the refusal of its employes to accept a reduction in wages. General business conditions are cited, however, as the general reason. The Courier was founded in 1887 and is published by M. Ph. Ginsburg, who is one of its founders. According to the editorial, the owner hopes that a reorganization may be effected shortly which will enable the paper to resume publication.

HIS BARREL OF RUM FOR SICK COW, HE SAYS, BUT JUDGE SAYS JAIL

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Arraigned on a liquor charge, George Manlove, Augusta farmer, said that a barrel of whisky found buried on his farm was "medicine" for a sick cow, but Federal Judge Louis FitzHenry sentenced Manlove to serve two months in jail and pay a fine of $200.

"The liquor in the barrel was a mixture of whisky and oil which a veterinarian had recommended for my sick cow," Manlove protested. Prohibition agents, however, said there was a well worn path to the barrel.

HOLDUP MEN GET $800.

Three gunmen robbed the Blue Island store of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois at 12945 South Western avenue of $800 yesterday.

KIDNAPED GRAPE MERCHANT STILL GONE FROM HOME

Anthony Ialongo, 40 years old, far south side wholesale grape merchant, who was kidnaped mysteriously in Whiting, Ind., late Friday night, was still missing from his home at 9603 Avenue M early this morning.

His wife, Marie, declined to discuss his absence, but police understood the family had heard no word either from him or his captors. Detectives said they believed Ialongo was in the hands of abductors for ransom. The kidnapers, police added, probably believed him to be a rich man, especially since his purchase a month ago of a new automobile costing $5,700.

GERMAN FASCIST LEADER WARNED TO TOE THE MARK

Hindenburg Tells Hitler to Halt Agitation.

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Oct. 10.—In the name of the republic to which he has given his word as a soldier to uphold, President Paul von Hindenburg today called in the man who has given his word to overthrow that republic—Adolf Hitler, chief of the German Fascists—and gave him a soldier's opinion on how to serve and how not to serve the Fatherland to which both hold allegiance.

Falling on the eve of the extremist conference at Harzburg, at which Alfred Hugenberg's Nationalists and Hitler's National Socialists will attempt to work out a common plan of action to oust the government of Chancellor Bruening, Hitler's invitation to confer with the president was taken as a call to order.

Hitler Receives Warning.

It is reported that Von Hindenburg bluntly told the Fascist chieftain that he is "poisoning the atmosphere" and that he warned him that the Fascist campaign against the government is menacing the security of the nation.

Today was the first time Germany's president ever met Hitler. Hitler, now the leader of the second largest political party in the land, arrived at the presidential palace at 11:15 a. m. in a 100 horsepower Mercedes. There were loud shouts of "Heil, Hitler!" from several hundred of his followers who raised their right arms in a Fascist salute. Hitler was accompanied by one of his chief lieutenants, Capt. Hermann Goering, a former war ace.

The two were ushered immediately into Von Hindenburg's study where the 84 year old field marshal awaited them. With him was Secretary of State Meissner. The four men remained in conference an hour and a half, and according to an official communique the Fascist chief gave the president a comprehensive report of the aims of the Fascist party.

Hindenburg Berates Leader.

When Hitler finished Von Hindenburg is said to have alternately berated the Fascists for their ill timed agitations, which some political observers charge are one of the main reasons for a lack of international confidence in Germany, and pleaded with them to place country above party.

While the conference was going on inside the palace the crowd of Fascists without became noisy, and the police had difficulty in restraining them.

When Hitler and Capt. Goering emerged they were greeted with another uproar and the Fascist war cry, "'Germany, awake!'" The two departed in a great burst of speed, followed by Paul Goebbels, another of Hitler's lieutenants.

While President von Hindenburg and the Fascist leader were in conversation police raided and closed four "barracks" of Fascist "storm troops."

HOW BANK POOL WAS BORN IN A CLASH OF WILLS

Hoover Versus New York Financiers.

decline to reduce armaments he would be forced to the conclusion that a claim of incapacity to pay was not being made in good faith and he would oppose revision of the settlements.

His theory is that nations unable to pay their debts will economize on armaments, but if they will not reduce armament expenditures they cannot be so badly off as they profess to be.

An Impasse Reached.

For these reasons the bankers early in September were unable to force the hand of the President on the matter of an extension of the moratorium. The conference broke up in a failure to agree on the project of the bank pool.

A few days later the story of what had taken place at the White House dinner leaked out and found its way into the newspapers. Mr. Meyer immediately denied most comprehensively and emphatically that any such plan as a great bankers' pool to handle frozen assets of banks was under consideration or had been. He said the only suggestion being considered was legislation next winter to liberalize the rediscounting of paper by the federal reserve banks. The White House denied the stories of the pool project, pronouncing them wild and idle rumors.

Then Stocks Start to Slide.

Nothing more was heard of the Hoover pool project until the stock market began tobogganing downward a fortnight ago. As the market sagged day after day alarm increased in Washington and Wall street.

It was understood that no little part of the anxiety in New York was occasioned by the knowledge of the bankers that there was a considerable volume of foreclosures, chiefly on real estate, impending in that city. There were fears that the stability of some banks would be seriously affected thereby.

Mr. Hoover, no less alarmed, had revived his project of a gigantic bankers' pool. The New York bankers were now disposed to view the Hoover plan more favorably. There are conflicting stories of what led to the second conference of the bankers with the President, secretly held at the apartment of Secretary Mellon last week.

According to one version Mr. Hoover summoned the financiers. According to another the bankers sought the conference through Mr. Mellon.

Win Hoover Over.

It appears that at this conference the bankers again sought to make terms with the President. They were willing to organize the big pool, provided Mr. Hoover would announce an extension of the Hoover moratorium for one or two years. This time the President was more amenable. He was alarmed and eager to procure the adoption of his plan, which he believed would restore public confidence and turn the tide toward the return of prosperity.

After a discussion lasting several hours the President acceded to the terms submitted by the New York bankers. The financiers went back to New York with the understanding that Mr. Hoover, in announcing his plan for the formation of the pool, would also announce that at the proper time he would propose the extension of the war debts moratorium.

That this was, in fact, the understanding is substantiated by the character of the proposed announcement which the President read to the senators and congressmen participating in the conference to which he summoned them last Monday night. The announcement as Mr. Hoover originally drafted it contained a paragraph giving assurance of an extension of the moratorium.

But Borah Balks.

To this paragraph, however, several of the congress leaders present took violent exception. Among them were Senator William E. Borah [Rep., Idaho] and John Garner [Dem., Tex.]. The opposition was so pronounced that Mr. Hoover was compelled to eliminate the objectionable paragraph and substitute a vague statement to the effect that he would discuss the debt question with Premier Laval of France the latter part of this month.

The White House announcement was received by the New York bankers with mixed feelings. The announcement said the bankers had agreed to the plan. But the plan had been modified by the President with respect to the extension of the moratorium.

Some of the bankers felt that the President had broken faith with them. He had got his pool project launched, but the bankers had not got their moratorium extension.

Some Bankers Demur.

According to information filtering into the capital the bankers in some parts of the country did not receive the President's announcement enthusiastically. They were inclined to feel that it was a scheme to draw vast amounts of money from the interior to help New York banks out of a predicament caused by unsound banking. It turned out that the plan did contemplate the use of the great fund in any part of the country deemed necessary. The result would be to require a region the banks in which are sound to shell out liberally for the support of wobbly banks in another region.

Hoover Forces Make Study of U. S. Railroad Finances

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Administration forces continued to be active today in their study of the country's financial situation as it affects the railroads, railroad securities, and the holders of these securities—particularly the smaller savings banks.

President Hoover and Secretary of Commerce Lamont, who is acting with treasury department officials to push the study to a consummation, conferred this morning prior to the President's departure for his rest camp on the Rapidan.

Following the conference the administration's attitude, it was explained once more, was that the emergency relief of the railroads and the strengthening of the market value of their securities could not be accomplished by the federal government alone, but is a matter for state action and action by private interests as well.

Loan Plan Considered.

The President and his advisers have been considering suggestions that the federal government support a finance corporation to loan the railroads money at easy interest rates and that the federal reserve act be amended so that certain types of rails securities might be eligible to rediscount.

Up to the present they committed themselves to no definite course of action, and it is probable that they will forego the formulation of any definite program until after the decision of the interstate commerce commission on the railroads' plea for a 15 per cent freight rate increase.

So far as outward signs indicated today, on that other important and still unsettled question—the matter of international debts—the administration, having explained its stand yesterday, will take no further steps until Premier Laval's arrival.

Comment on Debt Stand.

Yesterday's enunciation of President Hoover's belief that there must be no cancellation, but that debts and reparations should properly be revised in keeping with altered capacities to pay, and his insistence that a reduction of European armaments and of German reparations payments accompany any downward revision of the allied debts to the United States, received comment today from Capitol hill.

Senator James E. Watson of Indiana, majority leader of the senate, declared for a program which would include a reduction of the war debts, a proportionate cut in German reparations payments, and either a ten year naval building holiday or a 25 per cent cut, on the basis of the London naval treaty, in all standing navies.

Bingham Talks on Revision.

Senator Hiram Bingham [Rep., Conn.], also close to the administration, declared: "If it were shown that the capacity of European nations to pay had altered, I should be willing to vote for revision, but only after a thorough study by an able congressional committee. Such a revision would increase the burden on the American taxpayer and we should first be assured that the taxpayer would benefit.

"There is this difficulty, as I see it, in making it incumbent upon the European nations to disarm. It seems to me that such a course would place on us the responsibility of flying to the defense of a nation so disarmed in case it were attacked by some power that had not really reduced its forces. I recognize the fact that if they would cut down armaments they would have more money to pay their debts and would not have to press their people so hard with taxes."

Senator Bingham said he was against a reduction of the American navy and that he favored full treaty strength.

President Hoover's week-end on the Rapidan will be one of rest from the cares of the past week, it was indicated. As guests he will have William Hard, political writer, and Associate Justice Stone of the Supreme court. Chief Justice Hughes will journey to the camp tomorrow for Sunday dinner.

SHERIFF TELLS WHY HE NEEDS NEW $2,400 CAR

Sheriff Meyering yesterday said that he needed the $2,400 automobile which the county board authorized him to buy last Friday. The car, he said, will take the place of a sedan which was used as an emergency squad car and kept at the county building office.

"Our present auto is broken down," he explained. "The garage people tell us that repairs would cost $400. Even then it wouldn't be suitable. It is four years old and has run more than 100,000 miles. It has no speed at all. It would be just too bad if we ever had to chase any one in that old bus."

"Anyway," he added, "the money for that car was set up in the county budget at the first of the year. We have put off buying it as long as possible. The money couldn't be spent for anything but automobiles. Under the budget law we couldn't transfer it to any other fund. I suppose it might be a pleasant gesture if we refused to take it, but it is too badly needed to be tossed away."

PUSH PLAN HERE FOR SUPPORT OF HUGE BANK POOL

Financiers of 5 States to Meet Tuesday.

BY O. A. MATHER.

Plans for organizing the Chicago federal reserve district as a unit to support the $500,000,000 bank pool arranged by President Hoover were pushed further yesterday. At the meeting called by the Chicago Clearing House association for next Tuesday not only will the Chicago banks be represented, but a dozen bankers representing clearing house associations in key cities in this reserve district will attend.

Among the outside cities to be represented will be Indianapolis, Des Moines, Milwaukee and Detroit, which, with Chicago, are the principal cities in this reserve district, which embraces Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan. One of the matters which will be considered is whether there shall be one committee to act for the whole district or whether there shall be several local organizations. Chicago bankers believe that the lending of funds from the pool to banks in this district could be accomplished better by one central organization.

One Detail Cleared Up.

One detail concerning how the funds of the pool shall be loaned to banks throughout the country was cleared up yesterday. Chicago bankers were informed by the central committee in New York that the big pool would be treated as a national fund and that loans would be made from it irrespective of districts or sectional subscriptions. It had been an earlier assumption that subscriptions would be used for loans to banks in the districts where the funds were subscribed.

This interpretation of the plan, however, was said to have been opposed by President Hoover, who insisted that the whole fund should be available for any part of the country on the theory that the stronger banks should help the weaker ones, irrespective of locality. While this plan was not entirely satisfactory to Chicago and New York bankers, it was said, still they believe that checks can be devised to prevent the possibility of one district being aided unduly at the expense of other districts.

It was suggested that one of these checks would be the makeup of the board of directors of the national organization. It will have a director from each federal reserve district and the twelve directors will decide finally on the disposition of loans recommended by the local organizations. It was suggested that this board would hardly agree to favor any one district unduly.

Differ on Plan.

Still another point of discussion yesterday among Chicago bankers was how both the central and local organizations would value the collateral against which loans would be made. It was said New York bankers favored fixing an "intrinsic value" on bonds owned by banks, while western bankers favored making loans on the basis of market prices.

This difference of opinion was said to arise chiefly from the fact that small eastern banks have much of their capital invested in bonds, whereas small middle western and western banks have more invested in real estate securities.

GLASS SAYS HOOVER PLAN USED BY SOME TO AID SPECULATION

Lynchburg, Va., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Senator Glass, charging that various interests are seizing on President Hoover's proposal for temporary expedients in an effort to broaden the field of stock and bond speculation, today advocated a searching inquiry into the necessity of broadening the base of "eligible paper" for borrowing from federal reserve banks.

"It seems to me that another attempt is to be made to clutter up the reserve banks of the country with speculative securities and thus amplify the opportunities of stock and bond operators to ply their trade and to disturb the business of the country periodically as a result of their excesses," the Virginia senator said.

Senator Glass, who is chairman of the senate subcommittee charged with recommending banking legislation at the next session of congress, expressed his views in a letter to Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, and several other prominent members of congress.

"Of course, congress should promptly, without a moment of unnecessary hesitation, coöperate in any sane and effective plan to relieve the existing depression and particularly to guard against a repetition of the disaster," Senator Glass said. "But it goes not necessarily follow that this may be done by tampering with the federal reserve banking system in order to promote the business of those largely responsible for precipitating situations of this kind."

3 Killed, 9 Injured in San Francisco Hotel Fire

San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—Three men were killed and nine injured today when an explosion of gas set fire to a four story hotel building. Charles Demange, 82, and an unidentified man were trapped in the blazing structure and burned to death. A man named Kordt was killed when he jumped from a fourth story window as firemen were rushing up a ladder to save him.

Bandits Terrorize Five; Take $1,523 from Safe

Four robbers last evening terrorized Jacob Steelman, owner, and four of his employés in the office of the Supreme Laundry company, at 2816 Addison street, and escaped with $1,523. Steelman was compelled to open a safe for the bandits. Finger prints left by the men on several pieces of furniture were taken by the police in the hope that they will give a clue to their identity.

[Copyright: 1931: By the New York Times.]

PARIS, Oct. 10.—Confidence in the dollar and its maintenance on the gold standard is being slowly undermined here by use of the same methods as were used to destroy confidence in the pound sterling.

It can be said that these methods have no official encouragement and are in no way of official origin. On the contrary, they are denounced by every responsible person, but there is no official control of the campaign of ignorance and insinuation which in this country, as probably elsewhere, is slowly undermining public confidence in the dollar and in American finance.

Buys Francs with $38,000.

The story of the Frenchman who took a roll of $38,000 to an American bank in Paris and changed them into francs is only typical of what is being done by persons who are subject to that panic which is insiduously spread by those who have been commenting on President Hoover's proposals for the relief of the business situation in the United States.

The French public is being led to believe that the United States is going in for wholesale inflation, and that in such inflation there is immense and immediate danger to the dollar. To the public what is written means little or nothing. Its memory of inflation is that of 1926 when the circulation of francs in France exceeded the legal limit of 42 billion and the publication of the news produced a catastrophe. The amount now in circulation is 81 billion, but no one thinks any more about it, the gold coverage being exaggerated to the figure of 57 per cent, while 33 per cent is not only what is legally required, but what is economically sound.

Ever since the first announcement was made of President Hoover's plan to relieve the banking situation, French comment has harped on the fact that it amounted to inflation. In practically all this comment it has become customary to describe the American situation as "critical," as if there was any likelihood of forced departure from the gold standard.

See Profit Exporting Gold.

Under the guise of commiseration with this critical situation in the United States, the panic is being surely spread more and more extensively just as was done some months ago with regard to the pound sterling. One paper today carried an article showing how, at the present rate of 25.39 francs to the dollar, instead of the legal rate of 25.52 francs, there is a profit for those who export gold.

La Liberte, in an article by its director, Camille Aymard, states: "Not knowing how to get out of its difficulties, the United States goes joyously towards inflation."

Naturally there is insistence in such comment on how this gold is coming to France, with photographs of its arrival in barrels.

Other Side of Picture.

The weekly paper, La Lumiere, gives the other side of the picture.

"There are already hundreds of directors of industries in France," it says, "who have no other wish than that England should return to the gold standard. They have no desire that others should abandon it, and that the textile industry in Normandy, in North and at Lyons should feel the full force of the catastrophe which is threatening. Abandonment of the gold standard by England has broken the artificial and perilous equilibrium of French economy."

FRENCH ATTITUDE IN FINANCE CRISIS ANGERS BRITAIN

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Oct. 10.—Lord Reading, foreign minister, who has returned from Paris, is reported to be not overly encouraged by the results of his conversations with Premier Laval there, and it is not likely that great coöperation is to be expected between the French and the British.

It is stated that among the "helpful" suggestions made by the French was that they would take over Great Britain's financial burdens in Germany by buying, at a price, British investments, or alternatively assuming the task of helping Germany by direct conversations with the Germans without interference from London.

A third offer was that if the new British tariff, which is expected as a result of the election, was pleasing to France she would not take retaliatory measures until March, 1932, when the entire question would be reviewed by Paris, whose attitude has caused extreme resentment here.

Shoots Wife, Kills Father; Pleads "Unwritten Law"

Toledo, O., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Lynn Hill, 25, will offer the "unwritten law" as his defense for killing his father, Arthur, 67, and shooting his wife, Anita, 23, county authorities said today. Hill said he shot his wife and his father when he returned unexpectedly to his home at Neopolis, near here, yesterday and found them in each other's arms.

ASA KEYES IS GRANTED PAROLE; FREE TOMORROW

San Quentin Prison, Cal., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—The eyes of convict No. 43418 had resumed their old flash today, and a beaming smile brightened his face, for Monday he will discard his number and leave San Quentin as Asa Keyes—again a free man although on parole.

The once famous district attorney of Los Angeles will leave prison in the best of health, though he has aged some.

He scorned the suggestion of friends that he "rest up" for a few days in San Francisco. "Nothing doing," he said. "I'm going to Los Angeles just as fast as I can get there."

He will shun the friends and political acquaintances with whom he was involved in one of California's most sensational cases—bribery and conspiracy to "go easy" in prosecution of those responsible for the $100,000,000 Julian petroleum fiasco.

His first job will be selling automobiles. Then he hopes he will get a job as clerk in a law office.

Drunken Driver Gets 1 to 10 Yrs. for Aged Man's Death

Spencer Jr., evidence introduced through state witnesses proving that Thompson was intoxicated.

WORLD'S BANKING HEADS SCHEME TO END DEPRESSION

Meet at Basel; Discuss Financial Woes.

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BASEL, Switzerland, Oct. 10.—Preliminary informal conversations concerning the proposed international gold, currency, and credit conference in connection with President Hoover's plan to extend the war debt moratorium began here today among the banking heads of the world.

Randolph Burgess, special representative of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, who is here to attend the meeting of the directors of the Bank for International Settlements on Monday, today held a long conversation with Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England. Burgess, with Gates W. McGarrah, American president of the world bank, will sail on Wednesday for New York to inform his colleagues of the scope of the conversations. He is also expected to be summoned to Washington to report to President Hoover.

Federal Reserve Bank Depositor.

It became known today that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York has become a depositor in the world bank. The amount of the deposit was not learned, but is said to be greatly in excess of $1,000,000 and was placed some time ago. This marks a diametric change in the attitude of the federal reserve bank towards the world bank. It is also interesting in view of the fact that there have been heavy withdrawals since Great Britain went off the gold standard.

At tomorrow's unofficial meeting of bankers Mr. Norman will make a complete exposé of Great Britain's financial and economic condition, explaining how she went off the gold standard in order to prevent a further drain on her rapidly dwindling bullion reserve, her aims for an eventual stabilization of the pound sterling, and the prospect for a revalorization compared with a possible new par value considerably lower than $4.87.

At Monday's meeting of the world bank, Directors Pierre Quesnay, French director-general, will submit a scheme of establishing an international currency, backed by gold, either deposited here or earmarked for the world bank in vaults of the various governments to guarantee the stable value of the new currency, which would have free circulation over the entire world.

Examine War Debt Proposals.

The directors will also examine the report of the Albert H. Wiggin committee on the revision of war debts and reparations. This takes special significance in view of the fact that President Hoover is reported to have proposed to extend the moratorium three more years. It is expected the whole question of writing down or cancelling the Young plan outright and of various funding arrangements made at Washington will be examined.

British directors will decide what action to take regarding the proposed extension of short term credits to Germany and Austria which expire Nov. 4 and Oct. 16, respectively. Berlin faces huge obligations and Vienna is obligated to the extent of $28,000,000. It is expected extensions will be granted.

MRS. C. H. SABIN TO ADDRESS ANTI-DRY RALLY IN WAUKEGAN

MRS. C. H. SABIN.

Mrs. Charles H. Sabin of New York, founder and head of the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform, will be the principal speaker at a massmeeting at 8 p. m. Friday in the high school in Waukegan. The gathering will be under the joint auspices of the women's group and the Crusaders, the corresponding organization of men.

Commenting on the movement for legalized 3 per cent beer, Mrs. Sabin said recently: "As an unemployment relief measure none of us who favors the repeal of the eighteenth amendment could disapprove of it, but it would be no step forward in the solution of the prohibition muddle.

"It would be merely a step toward the alleviation of the present economic depression, but it would be disastrous for us to think for a moment that we could thereby effect any real and lasting settlement of the prohibition problem. National prohibition will continue to plague, disorganize, and demoralize the country as long as it remains in the constitution."

James Jerome Trainor, Chicago attorney, will represent the Crusaders, speaking on "The Immoral Side of Prohibition." Mr. Sabin's topic will be "One Way to Help Restore Prosperity."

Kills His Brother-in-Law After Row and Then Self

Mexia, Tex., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—Two men were killed near here late today as the aftermath of a quarrel. L. O. McClanahan, 55, killed his brother-in-law, John Sprockett, 30, and turned the gun on himself.

TOWNS GOVERNED BY RECEIVERS IF THEY GO BROKE

Several States Enact Law to Protect Bonds.

Legislation by which the financial affairs of municipalities unable to meet their obligations are taken over by state commissions has been adopted by several states during the last year.

In two instances, an inquiry has revealed, a city and a town have been taken over and their financial affairs managed by state boards.

Perhaps the widest powers granted are those provided in the law passed by the last general assembly in North Carolina. The law, entitled the local government act, created a "local government commission," and provides that whenever a county, city, town, or taxing subdivision defaults in interest payments on any bonds the director of the commission may appoint a receiver to take charge of the fiscal affairs of the defaulting municipality.

May Discharge Officials.

The North Carolina law empowers the receiver, who is designated under the law as "administrator of finance," to discharge any officials or employés of the tax or finance departments of the municipality when he deems it in the best interests of all concerned, especially the bondholders.

Although so far this last section of the law has not been invoked, reports from North Carolina state that it has had a wholesome effect in inducing many municipalities to set their financial affairs in order.

Before the law was enacted, 42 counties, cities, and towns in the state were in default on bonds. At the present time only three or four are in default, and these are refinancing indebtedness with the help of the local government commission and in coöperation with bondholders.

The act also provides that no bonds may be sold and no indebtedness may be incurred by any municipality without the approval of the commission or by vote of the people, and that all bonds for subdivisions must be sold by the commission after advertising for bids. This has resulted, it is said, in better prices being obtained for the public securities.

Bay State Takes Action.

In the state of Massachusetts, special legislation was passed early this year to rescue the city of Fall River. The city faced debts of $4,600,000 and a tax rate of $75 a thousand of assessed valuation was threatened.

A bill was passed by large majorities in the legislature despite the opposition of the Fall River representatives, which provided for the creation of a finance commission of three members appointed by the governor.

The commission will control the city's finances for a period of 10 years. The chairman of the commission is paid a salary of $6,000 a year, and the other two members are paid $5,000 annually.

New Jersey passed a law last winter creating a state finance commission which is empowered to acquire financial control over any municipality which is declared bankrupt by decree of the State Supreme court. The law permits the mayor and other officials of the bankrupt municipality to function as usual except in financial matters, which must be submitted to the approval of the commission.

The commission is composed of the state tax commissioner, the attorney general, and the commissioner of municipal accounts. They are empowered to appoint an auditor to survey the affairs of any bankrupt municipality, and to report periodically on its financial status.

QUESTION 3 ON BANK RAID NEAR 'SCOTLAND YARD'

Three men were arrested last night for questioning in connection with the $16,319 robbery at the Halsted Exchange National bank, 1929 South Halsted street, earlier in the day.

They are James Roti, 31 years old, 211 West 23rd street; Louis De Lucco, 28, of 2626 Lowe avenue, and John Rinella, 29, of 8137 Ingleside avenue. Sergt Richard Johnson and his detective bureau squad seized the trio at 31st street and Wentworth avenue. They will be held for the showup today.

The bank robbery was committed by four armed men who threatened twelve customers and five employés. In their haste, the gunmen overlooked a sum equal to that which they took.

Block from Scotland Yard.

The bank is less than a block from the "Scotland Yard" headquarters of the police department at 2057 Canalport avenue.

Miss Geraldine Milsauskas, 20 years old, 5348 South Sawyer avenue, telephone operator in the bank, was approached by the leader of the quartet.

"Get away from the switchboard and be quiet," he said, prodding her with a revolver.

The customers and employés were then forced to lie down on the floor in the rear of the room.

Flee with Money Drawer.

Two of the robbers then forced themselves into the teller's cage occupied by Walter Wallace, 2237 South Oakley avenue, seized a drawer containing the money, and fled.

C. L. Jernberg, president of the institution, said that the bank is fully covered by insurance. The bank is in a strong condition, he said, and will in no way be affected by the robbery.

OWNERS OF RICH LOOP PROPERTY BLOCKING TAXES

Take Action in Court to Stay Collections.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

Among the 132,108 real estate owners who are protesting their 1929 tax bill, aggregating $54,059,860, are the holders of some of the most valuable land in Chicago.

These taxes were due last May 15, and the protesters have either obtained injunctions restraining County Treasurer McDonough from collecting the tax or have filed formal objections in court against the assessment, which has the effect of preventing a sale of property until a hearing is obtained on the complaint.

THE TRIBUNE recently printed the names of some of the largest objectors in the area immediately north of the Chicago river. The loop has other objectors.

1929 Taxes Not Paid.

Tax volume No. 487, which covers a part of the loop, shows a number of property owners who have not paid their 1929 taxes and who have sought relief in the courts.

One of the largest of the properties is the Morrison hotel property, grouped under six items. The following shows the items, the assessed valuation of the property, and the taxes due under each item:

	Assessed valuation.	Unpaid taxes
Moir Hotel Co.	$ 527,105	$ 32,416.96
Morrison htl., Chgo.	332,082	20,423.05
Morrison hotel	2,521,160	216,551.34
Morrison hotel	554,758	34,117.62
Moir Hotel Co.	766,683	47,151.01
Morrison Hotel	332,979	20,478.21
Totals	$6,034,767	$371,138.19

Each of these tax assessments is protected by an objection.

Leiter Estate Protests.

The L. Z. Leiter estate is another large objector to the 1929 taxes. The tax value of four parcels of its property and the unpaid taxes, as given in the records, are shown in the following tabulation:

Item—	Tax valuation.	Unpaid taxes.
L. Z. Leiter	$ 597,017	$ 36,716.55
L. Z. Leiter	734,970	45,200.66
L. Z. Leiter	330,193	20,306.87
L. Z. Leiter	640,590	39,396.29
Totals	$2,302,770	$141,620.37

The La Salle-Monroe building corporation has obtained an injunction against the collection of its taxes, which are as follows:

	Tax valuation.	Unpaid taxes.
	156,676	9,635.58
	1,255,279	77,199.66
Totals	$1,695,743	$104,288.22

The record shows that J. L. Kesner has obtained an injunction preventing the collection of taxes on four properties as follows:

	Tax valuation.	Unpaid taxes.
	$ 170,019	$10,456.17
	416,908	25,639.54
	538,515	33,118.68
	170,411	10,480.28
Totals	$1,295,848	$77,694.67

The Jackson-Franklin building corporation has filed an objection to its tax assessment of $69,654 on a property valued for taxing purposes at $1,131,122.

Unpaid Taxes Total $86,655.

The Adams-Franklin building corporation has also filed an objection. Its building and land are valued at $1,409,038 and is unpaid taxes total $86,655.

There is a property of the Marshall Field estate valued at $158,663, on which the unpaid taxes, according to tax records, amount to $9,757. An objection to this assessment has been filed in the County court.

Stanley McCormick, in care of the Loop Building corporation, has a property with a value of $699,800. The unpaid taxes, protected by an objection on the property are $43,037.

James W. Stevens, 1212 Lake Shore drive, has a property valued at $536,273. The unpaid taxes on it total $32,980.

Charged with $77,483 Taxes.

The Hilton Co., Inc., Newark, N. J., is credited with real estate appraised at $1,259,888. The unpaid taxes total $77,483.

Balaban & Katz, 175 North State street, have one property charged with $12,590 in taxes on a valuation of $204,719. These taxes are unpaid and protected by objection.

The Bradley estate has one item of $615,805 on which the unpaid taxes are $37,872.

Mary Virginia Dunbar is credited in the records with a property worth $208,580, on which the unpaid taxes are $12,827.

H. W., W. J., and C. W. Silver, 324 South State street, have a property valued at $156,677. The unpaid taxes on it amount to $9,635.

A. S. Schulman, 537 South Dearborn street, has real estate valued at $151,748. He has objected to the tax of $9,332.

The Pontiac Building corporation, for which Mark Levy & Bros. are agents, has real estate valued at $234,754. An injunction prevents collection of taxes totaling $14,437.

J. P. Thom and R. M. Thom, for whom Willis & Frankenstein are the agents, have $295,567 in real estate on which the unpaid taxes are $18,177.

Other Properties Listed.

Some of the other large property owners listed in this tax volume who have not paid their taxes are:

P. Anderson and H. Hendrickson, property valued at $192,075, taxes $11,812.

Mary Osborn Caruthers, property valued at $208,595, taxes $12,828.

It is uncertain when the courts will hear all of the complainants and dispose of their objections to the taxes levied.

CORNER DRUG STORE PRAISED BY HOOVER IN PHARMACY WEEK TALK

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10—(AP)—Praise of the corner drug store for taking to all the people new remedies for ills came today from President Hoover.

In a communication given out at the White House, noting National Pharmacy week, the President said:

"The observance of National Pharmacy week, Oct. 11 to 17, is an appropriate time to recognize the service which pharmacy renders to the public health. Research in scientific laboratories constantly adds to the armentarium of our health forces.

"The drug stores of the land are the channels through which these new resources for treatment of the sick and the prevention of disease are brought promptly within the reach of the people. Pharmacists are the indispensable allies of the physicians. The importance of high standards of product and professional practice in pharmacy may well be more generally recognized and Pharmacy week is a commendable educational effort to that end."

AUTO MAKER IS NAMED GUARDIAN FOR TWO SONS

E. L. Cord, automotive engineer and chairman of the board of the Auburn Automobile company, yesterday was appointed guardian of the estates of his two sons, Charles, 16 years old, and William, 14 years old. The appointment was approved by Oscar S. Caplan, assistant probate judge. The guardianship is in accord with the will of Cord's first wife, Helen Marie, who died Sept. 13, 1930. Cord and the children each received $135,000 from her estate.

CRIMINAL COURT.

Adam Gaddy and Harold Gilland, robbery, sentenced to 1 year to life each in the penitentiary; Joseph Gale, burglary, sentenced to 1 year to life in the penitentiary by Judge George Fred Rush.

Fred Kroll and Chester Cook, robbery, sentenced to 1 year to life in the penitentiary on each of three charges by Judge James J. Kelly.

Three Chicago youths were captured in a corn field near Glen Ellyn early yesterday, following their robbery of gas filling stations in the towns of Sycamore and Lily Lake, and a running gun battle with a special deputy sheriff along Illinois route 64. The bandit car was riddled with bullets and shotgun slugs.

Taken to the Kane county jail at Geneva, the bandits identified themselves as Benny Russo, 19 years old, 2213 Flournoy street; Charles Rizzo, 18 years old, 1991 Polk street, and John Accenli, 17 years old, 901 South Wood street. Their car was stolen in Chicago on Thursday night.

After robbing the Flanders & Organ filling station at Sycamore of $50 worth of merchandise, the trio sped east on route 64 to Lily Lake. There they took $20 and a radio set from the Nelson service filling station, and started toward Chicago. S. B. Lemon, a Kane county special deputy sheriff, pursued them.

East of St. Charles the bandits fired at their pursuer. Lemon returned the fire with his shotgun and revolver. Outdistanced, he telephoned to the Du Page county sheriff's office at Wheaton. Deputy Sheriff Elmer Hoffman and Policemen E. Hale and W. Hale, brothers, took up the pursuit. They caught the youths in the corn field at the junction of route 64 and Main street near Glen Ellyn.

Wife Kills Husband in Bed, Then Ends Own Life

Mrs. Ida Walsh, 45 years old, shot and killed her husband, Sylvester, 36 years old, then shot herself to death while they were in bed in their home at 9415 South Kedzie avenue, Evergreen Park, a coroner's jury decided yesterday. The bodies were found early in the day. The inquest was held at an undertaking establishment in Oak Lawn. Police expressed the belief that Mrs. Walsh was driven to the shooting by jealousy.

THE LEAGUE COURT AND EUROPEAN POLITICS.

Salesmen of the league court to the American people offer it as a purely juridical tribunal, free from all political influences, evolving a system of international law founded on the impartial pursuit of legal principle and guaranteed to survive the assaults of powerful self-interest. Those of us in the United States who cannot accept this inspiring picture of the court, who hold that in reality it is an agency to register in legal form the political forces and interests dominating the political institution from which it draws its being, the league of nations, are rebuked as blind sinners against the light.

Well, we now have been given more light, but it does not reveal the picture painted for us by the court advocates. What it reveals we do not describe for ourselves, but offer the opinions of court champions abroad. One of the most stalwart of these is the Manchester Guardian, whose correspondent at Geneva sent the following comment on the court's advisory opinion on the German-Austrian customs agreement:

"The advisory opinion of The Hague court on the Austro-German customs union produced dismay even—or, rather, especially—among the most enthusiastic supporters of the principle of international arbitration. It is no exaggeration to say that confidence in the court was critically if not finally, shaken when the opinions of Hague judges are divided visibly according to political groups. When the opinions of the United States, British, Japanese, Belgian, Dutch, Chinese, and German judges are opposed by French, Polish, Rumanian, Spanish, Cuban, Salvador, Colombo, and Italian judges even those who possess virgin minds with regard to international law cannot help being worried."

From the Guardian's Paris correspondent we quote the following:

"The French press comments on the decision of The Hague court about the proposed Austro-German customs union are remarkably illuminating and instructive. It appears to be the general opinion, which, to judge from the various press comments quoted here, seems to be widely shared in other countries, that the decision will impair the authority of The Hague court and shake public confidence in its impartiality. . . . Most, if not all, lawyers will probably agree with the general French opinion that it is a legal absurdity to hold that the Austro-German proposal is incompatible with the protocol of 1922, but compatible with article 88 of the treaty of Saint Germain. Clearly, as everybody here seems to think, the seven judges in the minority are right in saying that the protocol did not in any way extend the obligation imposed on Austria by the treaty. But it does not follow that, as everybody here assumes, they were wrong in holding the proposal compatible with both documents. What does perhaps follow is that the judgment of the majority was one of policy rather than law, especially as seven of the eight judges in the majority dissented from it on this point. Indeed, it is openly declared here that it is a political rather than a purely legal judgment, but the complaint of most papers is that it is not sufficiently political. The judges in the minority are blamed for taking a purely legal point of view."

Editorially the Guardian remarks that "it is clear the judges of The Hague court have had to stray from legal considerations in arriving at their varying conclusions about the proposed customs union. They have had to enter the field of political debate, and in the case of Sig. Anzilotti even to embark on a discussion of free will and determinism. This is not usually considered to be the function of The Hague court." It is certainly not the theory on which the advocates of America's adherence are urging it upon us. On the contrary, we are invited to accept what the Guardian admits is the popular supposition, that "the court is supposed to confine itself to technical juristic details in the interpretation of treaties"—also to the evolution of a system of international law.

Interesting to us also is the Guardian's remark that "the permissibility of the customs union seemed eminently a matter for the court. It was a question merely of the interpretation of two legal documents, but so limited is the range of international law at the moment that The Hague court could find no legal principles applicable, and therefore had to fall back upon opinion."

This is sophistry of court partisanship. The court, as everybody recognizes, even its friends, did not fall back upon opinion. It fell back, or rather it stood, on politics. If international law is now so narrow and destitute of principles that in a case eminently a matter for its consideration, involving "a question merely of the interpretation of two legal documents," the court "had to fall back upon opinion," an opinion controlled by politics, its existence is premature, as we have repeatedly pointed out. At any rate, to submit ourselves to its processes and support them during a period in which, for lack of legal principles to apply, it is registering political decisions in the pretense of legal judgments, is certainly premature for a nation which must expect to find itself overruled by the political considerations which the court has substituted for legal in this test case.

In short, opponents of our adherence to the court could hardly ask for more conclusive proof of the validity of their objections than the advisory opinion on the customs union. The protocol should be brought up in the senate while this demonstration is fresh and defeated.

LUNACY IN TAXATION.

Illinois to a considerable extent makes real estate the tax collector. Real property is to find, collect, and pay the public revenue into the treasuries. The assessors keep the books and the public collectors receive the money, but the real estate owner goes among the people and finds the cash, if he can. If he rents commercial property he spreads the taxes on his tenants, they spread it on their patrons, and the meat and grocery bills carry their percentage of the tax collections of public funds. That system, with variations, is in operation in all the states. If the owner is not using his property for profit he must try to collect the taxes in his occupation. If the owner puts his own labor on his property, as a farmer does, he must collect the taxes in the prices of his product.

In flush times the owner may carry his duties of tax collector rather lightly, without being aware that the state has him hustling to raise the revenue of its public bodies, but when times are pinched and hard the real estate owner has to scramble. The state presents its bills and the owner must go among people hard pressed, as it may be, to sustain themselves and get the public revenue from them. Sometimes he cannot do it. His rents fall off. His tenants, with their business failing, cannot make the spread which they must make to pay him. If he evicts he is antisocial. If his property stands vacant the state does not press tenants into his service. If his property is his home and he loses his job he cannot collect anything for the state, but must nevertheless pay. If he is a farmer and his crop or his market fails he is empty handed, but nevertheless he has his obligations as tax collector.

Thousands of these tax collectors here in Chicago cannot do the job. Some are being sold out for their failure. Some have pawned their possessions to pay over the collections they were unable to make. Some are seeking protection in the courts to save themselves from the consequences of not being able to get the state's money from other people. Some, of course, have taken advantage of conditions to escape doing what they could do, justifying themselves, no doubt, with the reflection that government has been so rotten that taxation has been robbery. That reflection is unpleasantly true, but it does not, for instance, pay the school teachers.

Hard times test faulty systems and may wreck them. When everything is in full stride and fairly roaring the defects are carried along with the current, but in a test they will become fixed and stick up as rocks. The relief, in this state, which real estate is supposed to get lies in the personal property tax, which roughly is a tax upon other means of earning an income, upon necessities of life, and upon articles of luxury, a tax of jumbled theory and impractical enforcement. When the state tries to collect from profit making securities they hide or run. Otherwise they would not be profit making but merely tax paying. When personal property is the means of making a living or of domestic economy the tax on it is directly or indirectly on means of support. Even as a luxury tax upon expenditures for adornment or household display the personal property levy is unsuccessful and full of inequalities which amount to fraud.

An attempt to make personal property take a larger part of the load off real estate undoubtedly would result in the flight of taxable wealth and the serious injury of the community which the wealth had served. Along with the ill balanced, illogical tax system goes the theory that taxation in itself is an admirable social factor and that great public expenditures are great public benefits. Thus taxes are to be leveling, distributive, and punitive. Public works are to be colossal and extravagant. This completes the madness. It requires that the state be not the simplest form of government for public necessities but the chief factor in human prospects for better things. The state is quite able to be the most reckless spender, that being inherent in the nature of political undertaking, but quite incapable of producing benefits in proportion to the revenue it collects.

Prevailing theories unload upon the backs of the owners of one or two classifications of property the obligation to press out of the people in whatever manner they can the funds required by elephantine government always wasteful and frequently corrupt. We have seen these theories crash along with the tax system which was supposed to sustain them.

SPEAKING AND WRITING.

Every one knows that an address read from manuscript loses a large part of its effectiveness. It is hard to follow and likely to bore even when the subject matter is interesting. This loss of effect is greatly reduced when the speech is memorized. Reading, of course, tends to monotonous delivery, but probably its chief fault is that it deprives us of a sense of direct and spontaneous contact with the speaker.

There is, however, another consideration that is likely to be overlooked. Spoken and written English are different, and what may be effective to read is usually less effective in speech. The process of writing is very different from that of speaking. We say things differently; even thought proceeds differently. Our care for literary propriety is a restraint upon the emphasis which makes uttered speech effective, the rhythm is different, and we are tempted by the leisure of writing to overexpand our thought.

A speaker who expects either to read his speech or memorize it for delivery would do well to try to diminish these disadvantages by following as closely as he can his own spoken style. As a literary exercise this is not easy, and probably for most would be impossible. But it might be accomplished by dictation. Most speakers who do not speak from notes probably do this, and if they do not try to polish the result in the interest of literary style may escape some of the disadvantages even of reading from manuscript.

We are thinking here of contemporary taste. Famous orations of the past much more nearly resembled written style. As they come down to us they may have been edited to eliminate some of the marks of spoken utterance, but these changes cannot account for the whole style. Nowadays successful speakers are more informal and avoid elaborate periods and the grand manner. One of the most effective speakers of the day speaks in a conversational tone and without any more gestures than he would use in discussing the weather with a neighbor. Yet he can hold the attention of an audience of five or six thousands and play upon it as a skillful pianist plays upon his instrument, winning laughter or tears, and, what is more significant from such simple means, exciting his hearers to strong emotion which the older style sought by showy rhetoric and the careful building up of climax.

We are not saying that Demosthenes or Burke would not move a modern audience, but they would do so by force of character, clarity of thought and impassioned sincerity of feeling rather than by any art of elocution. Lesser men must yield to the preferences of their own day. We are a democratic people, a bit skeptical of heroes and heroics. We want to be talked with, not at.

EVERYTHING—EXCEPT.

Necessity, distress, pessimism, profit and whatever other market factors are at work to drop stocks from one level to another are taken as signs that recovery is still hunting bottom. The situation provokes the feeling that the closing of the stock exchange would not be the worst thing which could come to pass. The price list is such a false barometer. It flies panic signals in a country which has not lost any wealth in two years of hard times.

The American real situation remains the best in the world. Its government is still competent financially. It has indulged in folly, but not as yet, as elsewhere, to a destructive extent. It has a deficit and it is being urged into more folly, but prudence still can protect its stability. The British and the Germans, for instance, have feared the fall of government, credit and currency. They have even feared for the permanence of their order of society. The British have been subjected to taxation which has driven wealth out of the country. They cannot raise their own food supplies. Party government has failed them and they are now under an emergency form with elections approaching.

Americans, even if apprehensive of political tendencies and prospective hysterias, have not been worried by dread of a collapse of federal stability, credit or currency. Last year and the year before flood and drought alternately produced some crop failures and an actual lack of food in the districts affected. This year nature has been almost mercilessly bountiful. The soil has poured its products into the national lap.

When the Thanksgiving proclamation is written it may have a sour note to many citizens, but if its recital of the bounties upon which national welfare is supposed to be founded seems extravagant it probably will be only a statement of known facts. The nation has avoided all the real disasters and it has its real wealth undiminished. That has not been destroyed or impaired and it has not fled.

The country has not been drained of gold, but has the greatest share of it. Its materials are great in volume and at low cost levels. Everything in the world needed for booming times is available except—well, except what? Character? Courage? Convictions? Self-reliance? Initiative? Determination? Intelligence? There is hardly an orthodox element of logical depression in the country.

Editorial of the Day

MILITARY PROPAGANDA.

[Bismarck, N. D., Tribune.]

Recent reports indicate that, of all the forts slated by the war department for abandonment, the most vigorous fight has been made on behalf of Fort Lincoln, located here. The protest which went up from North Dakota was heard in Washington and the order to abandon the local post was countermanded.

But this is only one step in the battle which must be staged if this state is to obtain justice. High officials apparently have started a movement to get Fort Lincoln labeled as a "useless" fort in the minds of citizens outside of North Dakota.

Evidence of this is seen in the publication by a great Chicago newspaper of a special dispatch from Washington which says, in part:

"Constituents of Gerald P. Nye [Rep., N. D.], one of the radical Republican group in the senate, thus far have blocked abandonment of Fort Lincoln, N. D. This is one of the most flagrant examples of surplus posts which are worthless from a military point of view."

If the public understood the facts in the case, proposal to abandon Fort Lincoln would meet with disapproval everywhere, for if military posts have any use at all in these piping times of peace, Fort Lincoln certainly is one of the most useful on the list.

It serves as summer training quarters for the young men of North and South Dakota and the fact that it is located where it is tends to increase the enrollment in this camp. Its opponents will find it hard to get past the fact that the registration here was the best in the Seventh corps area.

Presumably the real reasons for a standing army in the United States are to constitute a national police force and more especially to serve as the nucleus for a citizen army in time of stress. The boys who attend these citizens' camps will be the soldiers of the U. S. army in the next war, if one comes. Does the war department wish to march them off, unprepared and unknowing, in the next war as it did in the last, or does it feel that the youth of the Dakotas would be neither wanted nor needed in the event of hostilities?

If there is any real danger of an attack on New York, Chicago, Omaha, or any other great city, the war department should mobilize its troops by all means, but it should be frank enough to give the reasons. If the purpose of the standing army is to bolster the possibilities for national defense in time of war, the troops should be left here.

The "economy" plea has long ago been exposed as a subterfuge and has been admitted to be such by high army officers. It costs no more to maintain troops here than in any other place.

THERE IS NO JUSTICE.

Georgia lawyer (to colored prisoner)—Well, Rastus, so you want me to defend you. Have you any money?

Rastus—No, suh, I hain't got no money, but I got a 1922 model Fo'd cah.

Lawyer—Well, you can raise some money on that. Now let's see—just what do they accuse you of stealing?

Rastus—A 1922 Fo'd cah.—Lehigh Burr.

KEEP THE HOME FIRES BURNING.

"I suppose there are many problems which polar explorers seek to solve?" said the unscientific man.

"Yes," replied the intrepid traveler, "a great many."

"What is the most important one?"

How to Keep Well By Dr. W. A. Evans

HEALTH WEALTH

To the limit of space questions pertaining to hygiene and prevention of disease will be answered in this column. Personal replies will be made to inquiries under proper limitations when return stamped envelope is inclosed. Dr. Evans will not make diagnosis or prescribe for individual disease.

PREVENTING BOTULISM.

BOTULISM is declining steadily and it should disappear before many years. Since 1925 there has been no case of this disease caused by eating commercially canned foods produced in America. There was one small outbreak a few years ago caused by eating shallots packed in Italy. In the fifteen years prior to 1925 there were 42 outbreaks due to commercially canned goods. This experience shows that commercial canners now know how to make their products safe, and as long as they continue using proper methods the industry will not be subject to setbacks due to scare.

The home preserved products are also improving, though they are coming on more slowly. Of the 191 outbreaks tabulated by Dr. K. F. Meyer 129 are charged against home preserved products. The peak was reached in 1922, with 17 outbreaks due to home preserved products, while in recent years three or four a year is about the average, and this in spite of better diagnosing and reporting.

The products that have given trouble most often in the twenty-one year period, stated in the order of frequency of outbreaks, are: String beans, corn, olives, pork products, asparagus, sea food, beets, beef, cheese, apricots, pears, and chili peppers. The range is from 50 outbreaks in twenty years to 2 in the same period. The foods with a record of 1 or 2 outbreaks in twenty years are: Figs, sardines, chicken, potted meat, sausage, milk, celery, turnip greens, home brew, okra, pimento, yellow beans, salad dressing, succotash, tomato catsup, tomato relish, green tomatoes, squash, peas, turnips, pickles, apricots, butter, persimmons, and shallots.

The outstanding measure of protection is the application of enough heat for a sufficient length of time. The heating must be adequate to kill all bacteria and all spores.

The measure which ranks next in importance is acidification. If the food is not sour enough to protect itself it must be acidified by the addition of citric acid, or mixtures of citric acid and acetic acid. The fruit juices are rich in citric acid, and vinegar is the best source of acetic acid. The degree of acidity required is specified as a pH of at least 4.5. Foods that have been acidified properly require less heating than those that are not sour. Making use of acidification has made it possible to can artichokes, chili, and mushroom sauces.

The element of moisture is also a factor. A dry food, such as chipped beef or ham, is safer than one that contains considerable moisture.

String beans have been dangerous because the taste, odor, and appearance of the infected product do not cause the consumer to beware.

This classification of requirements for safety has omitted one that is accepted by all as of prime importance. That is the necessity of using none but good material for canning, rejecting all spoiled and soiled foods, and exercising cleanliness in all stages of the process. Agricultural authorities go so far as to say that if the rules of care and cleanliness are obeyed it is safe to heat less.

WHAT THEY MEAN.

W. B. asks what the meaning is of:
1. Cholecystitis?
2. Cholecystectomy?

REPLY.

1. Inflammation of the gall bladder.
2. Removal of the gall bladder by operation.

PROBABLY INFECTED GLAND.

Mrs. C. M. G. writes: My husband has a swelling as large as an egg back of his right ear. It is not sore and does not bother him in any way. He had a blood test, which came back marked perfect. What would you say this was and what should be done about it?

REPLY.

My first guess is an infected gland. My second is tumor. The guesses are far apart. One with more information would quickly rule out one or the other.

MORE FACTS NEEDED.

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 1.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—A son has been helping his father for fifteen years with no recompense except his living. He now wishes to seek other employment and requests a settlement from his father, which the father refuses to give. Can the son collect his wages? How?

I. R. D.

You do not state the age of the son, his capacity, the nature of the employment, nor other facts which might be material in determining whether there was an implied agreement to pay him.

MERCHANTS SHOULD CLEAN.

Chicago, Oct. 1.—[Friend of the People.]—What steps must be taken to have the sidewalks on Kedzie avenue in our neighborhood cleaned up? The old papers, garbage and dirt blowing in your face are not particularly invigorating for a morning walk.

N. L.

Sidewalks on business streets are supposed to be cared for by the merchants, and they are instructed not to sweep the refuse onto the street pavement but to deposit same in street boxes.

PHYSICIAN'S SERVICES.

Chicago, Oct. 1.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—I worked for a large corporation some time ago. I fainted while at work and the company doctor was called. Since then I have been getting statements from him for services rendered and taxi fare. 1. Do I have to pay this bill when I did not order the doctor? Can he charge me for his transportation?

G. L. B.

"Where a physician renders services to a person injured by an accident rendering him unconscious, or otherwise rendered incapable of making a request for or expressing consent to the services, the law will imply a promise from him who received the benefit of the services to pay for them. The rule has been held not to apply to physician's services rendered to one accidentally injured, even if rendered unconscious, if immediate attention is not required, particularly where there is free ambulance service and free hospital treatment is furnished by the municipality. It has been held that there is no distinction as to the right of recovery between a case where the physician is called by a stranger or spectator and one where he proceeds to treat such a case without being asked to do so."—48 C.J. 1158.

THOSE LOOSE PLANKS IN OUR PARTY PLATFORMS

FROM THE TRIBUNE'S COLUMNS

16 YEARS AGO TODAY

OCTOBER 11, 1915.

CHICAGO.—Chicago's first dry Sunday in forty-three years passed off with hardly a ripple of excitement and unattended with any dire results predicted by the "wet" leaders. Only 28 violations, most of them of a minor character, were reported up to 10 o'clock last night. "Capt." George Wellington Streeter claimed that Streeterville was not Chicago and declared there was no lid on there. He sat in the rear of his ice cream and soft drink saloon at the foot of Chestnut street and said: "Have something?" And a TRIBUNE reporter with two fair companions said they would. And they did. And they paid 25 cents a bottle for it. It was the beer that made Milwaukee famous. Chief of Police Healey, after an automobile tour of inspection of the city, said the day was the best record in the history of the Chicago police department.

LONDON. — The Austro-Germans now are in full possession of Belgrade and the heights surrounding the city and have begun an advance eastward toward the mountains which the Serbians last year so stubbornly defended against the Austrians. The Bulgarians, so far as is known, have not made any advance in Serbian territory and it is believed they will withhold their hands until they know how matters go with the Austro-Germans. London newspapers this morning are alarmed at the German march through Serbia. The Express sees India, Egypt, and the Suez canal menaced.

CHICAGO.—In the trial of Luke P. Colleran, chief of detectives, before the civil service commission, he was accused by witnesses of having used official powers and his office in the interest of James Dunlap, bank robber and notorious criminal, now serving twenty years in Joliet. This evidence came in the testimony of former Chief of Police Joseph Kipley, Lieutenant of Detectives Andrew Rohan, and Detective Sergeant John E. Culhane.

KANAB, Utah.—Hundreds of wild horses stampeded in terror over hill and plain, pursued by mounted ranchmen, urging their mounts to the utmost and now and then taking a shot at one of the fleeing animals. The mustang hunt was on. Ranchmen from all northwestern Arizona, southwestern Utah, and some from Nevada engaged in the hunt. Many mustangs were killed and others captured. Two years ago 300 mustangs were shot and 1,500 captured, and it is expected the present hunt will exceed that record. The animals are believed to have sprung from horses owned by victims of the Mountain Meadows massacre in 1857. When the party was attacked a large number of horses escaped.

OCTOBER 11, 1881.

SYCAMORE, Ill.—The committee, or jury of fifteen, to which the Methodist conference here referred the charges of heresy against the Rev. Dr. H. W. Thomas of Chicago, has determined on a verdict of guilty and will so report to the conference this morning, recommending that Dr. Thomas be expelled from the ministry and membership in the Methodist church. On the announcement of the verdict it is expected that Dr. Thomas will enter an appeal to the judicial court which will be called together within sixty days.

CHICAGO.—The Rev. W. P. Coddington of Syracuse, N. Y., it is understood, has declined the call of the congregation of the Second Presbyterian church of Chicago to become their pastor.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—President Arthur has accepted the resignation of Secretary of the Treasury Windom to take effect on the qualification of his successor. It is understood that Secretary of State Blaine will insist on his resignation being accepted immediately after the Yorktown centennial celebration, as will Attorney General MacVeagh. It is definitely settled that Secretary Lincoln will remain in the cabinet, and it is pretty generally believed that Judge Folger of New York will succeed Secretary Windom.

THE BASIS OF CREDIT.

Chicago, Oct. 3.—The article in your column of Oct. 2, "Putting Gold to Work," emanates no doubt from a well meaning gentleman, but however prompts me to the following reply:

The billion dollars consigned to the three or four different sources designated by Mr. Baker would tend in no way to enhance confidence in everything that is represented by our gold system and would possibly further aggravate a condition carried already to extremes which threaten the very existence of the entire structure.

A few figures follow which may appear somewhat dazzling in magnitude, but must be looked at in the simple proportions which they bear to one another.

It must be definitely understood that if confidence is completely destroyed in all capital and the present attempt that is being made to convert securities and paper of all descriptions into cash, which includes stocks, bonds, mortgages, balances in saving bank books and checking accounts is continued, the utter collapse must come which would in itself make worthless the very thing which persons are attempting to hoard.

There is approximately fifty-seven billion dollars in deposits in state and national banks throughout the United States. At the end of August, 1931, there was outstanding in currency 5 billion dollars, which is the sum total of all money in the United States of every description. Now how far or how much longer can our system stand up if bank depositors to the extent of 57 billion dollars are trying to secure United States currency against these deposits to be secreted away when all the money in the United States is less than one-eleventh the total bank deposits?

There is also in the United States approximately 5 billion dollars in gold, but there is, however, 16 billion dollars' worth of government bonds outstanding, which command the highest price of any security in the United States because of the fact that our gold reserve is adequate. Destroy this and you immediately destroy the credit of the United States as far as gold standard is concerned, as well as the value of the United States government securities.

We will estimate there has been over 125 billion dollars capital destroyed in the United States in the last two years. On the New York Stock exchange alone the market value of all listed stocks declined from 89 billion dollars on Sept. 1, 1929, to 44 billion dollars on Sept. 1, 1931, or a shrinkage of 45 billion dollars. Add to this the depreciated value of all other securities throughout the United States not listed on the New York Stock exchange, including real estate bonds and mortgages and all else, it would not seem that the 125 billion dollars estimate would be an exaggerated figure. How unimportant in comparison does our 5 billion dollars in gold seem when compared to this capital shrinkage? To the value of 44 billion dollars of New York stocks remaining as of Sept. 1 last add a market value of 46 billion dollars representing bonds listed on the New York Stock exchange; you have a total of 90 billion dollars. Now, assume that the owners of these securities, as well as the owners of all other securities not listed on this market, want to join with the throng to convert all capital into cash; you see the hopeless situation toward which they are striving. Money, be it gold, silver or paper, is worth no more than the credit behind the government whose name it bears, aside from the value that the gold might have in the markets of the world, which is arbitrarily set by the governments who assume it as their standard of currency, and should the United States fail in this standard, gold no doubt would cease to have any value outside of what it might command for commercial purposes, the same as lead, iron, copper or any other metal.

It is estimated that the total amount of monetary gold in the world is but 11 billion dollars, there being approximately 11 billion dollars additional in all other forms.

If one could romance to the extent of imagining our entire system upset, as the action of some would indicate, they would be much better possessing something that is representative of ownership in some of the material things of the nation which they could appropriate, rather than worthless paper in vaults representative of a promise to pay by a capitalistic government completely collapsed.

The foundation of our whole structure is credit and confidence, as these figures plainly indicate; destroy them and the structure must tumble.

WILLIAM F. MOORE.

HANDBILLS.

Chicago, Oct. 1.—I feel that your article in this morning's TRIBUNE by Chesley Manly regarding the distribution of handbills by hobos is unfair to an organized and efficient business.

It is practically impossible for a hobo to take handbills and burn them as stated in the article. Every reputable handbill distributor has an efficient staff of supervisors who cruise the territories in cars and see that every man works a full eight hours and distributes every handbill allotted to him. In addition there is a foreman with every crew.

In our own case we have many men in our employ who are ex-soldiers and a larger majority have families. Most of the men have been in our employ for many years.

BURTON STONE.

FROM JUDGE ERICKSON.

Chicago, Oct. 1.—I heartily commend THE TRIBUNE upon its timely editorial, "The Extermination of Illinois Pheasants." It is an outrage the way so-called sportsmen violate the game laws. There will be no birds in Illinois if the flagrant disregard of the law continues.

Nestling within the oak woods and hills on the Fox river, not far from THE TRIBUNE camp, I have a country home. In this territory hunters roam at will bagging the beautiful ring-neck pheasants in and out of season. One youngster carried off 11 hens in a bag, and this during the hatching time.

This summer, while cutting grass, I heard a cock pheasant's crowing within a few feet of me. Not wishing to disturb him I kept on working. Soon I heard the bang of a gun and the crowing ceased.

ALFRED O. ERICKSON.

$2,088.60.

Joliet, Ill., Oct. 1.—In yesterday's TRIBUNE A. L. wants to know how to write out a check for $2,088.60. Brother, you are the living wonder of 1931. I wouldn't write it out; keep it.

LICENSE WAITS, BUT OPERA PAIR FAIL TO ARRIVE

Office Open Overtime, but All in Vain.

New York, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The pressing desire of Hilda Hopkins Burke, soprano, and Desire De Frere, baritone and stage manager, both members of the Chicago Civic Opera company, to obtain a marriage license—vigorously pursued by them in this city, Newark, and West New York on Thursday without success—apparently had undergone some metamorphosis by today.

The couple failed to appear this afternoon at the office of the registrar in West New York to obtain the license for which they finally made a 48 hour application Thursday. A license could have been issued any time after 1:25 p. m. and the office remained open overtime to accommodate them in case they called.

Some speculation as to the whereabouts of the singers was inspired, and the possibility that they had departed for a more amiable state when their petition was temporarily withheld in this locality was broached.

Minister Applies for It.

However, the fact that the Rev. John Lehnert, pastor of the West New York Baptist church whom the couple had designated as the clergyman who would officiate at their nuptials, applied at the registrar's office this morning at 10 o'clock for the license and was told to return at 1:25 p. m. or after, led the authorities to suspect the application in West New York would eventually be utilized.

The Rev. Mr. Lehnert, who was arrested in New Jersey several years ago for performing marriage ceremonies irregularly, denied that he had already married the couple and apparently was unfamiliar with their whereabouts.

Although a license would have been issued to Mrs. Burke and Mr. De Frere today they would have been compeled to wait another twenty-four hours before the marriage ceremony could have been performed legally.

Meet with Two Refusals.

Application for a license had been denied the couple in this city when it was learned that Mrs. Burke, who received a divorce from her husband, William S. Burke, on July 13, had not notified him of the proceedings. Then they applied in Newark and were told they would have to wait three days. Thence they went to West New York, where the application was filed.

Mrs. Burke, who was formerly a choir singer in Baltimore before joining the Chicago Civic Opera company, gave her age as 26 on the application and Mr. De Frere said he was 40. Both gave their address as the Hotel La Salle in Chicago.

Aged Recluse Hears Radio for First Time.

New York, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The long hoarded fortune of Mrs. Ida E. Wood, 93 year old widow of Benjamin Wood, publisher of the one time New York Daily News, continues to grow as more cash is found among her papers or concealed in her clothing. Today $3,000 was added to her wealth when her daughter's will, leaving her that amount, was filed.

The daughter was Miss Emma Wood who died on Sept. 30, 1927. This bequest brings the total of Mrs. Wood's wealth close to the million dollar mark in cash and securities alone. In the Harriman National bank now is $912,000, but the probabilities are that at least $100,000 more remains to be accounted for in precious stones and in the value of rare old lace.

Enjoys a New Thrill.

For the first time Mrs. Wood today had a taste of the magic of radio. Never in her life had she heard a phonograph play or listened to the echoes of the air. But this afternoon her nephew, Otis F. Wood, who was recently appointed by Supreme Court Justice Irwin Untermyer to be her custodian, installed a radio in her new apartment at the Herald Square hotel.

Next week an examination will be made of the fourteen trunks which are in a storage warehouse. It is surmised that Mrs. Wood may have placed some of her valuables in these trunks—laces, possibly, or other fine fabrics collected many years ago in her travels about Europe.

Doesn't Believe in Banks.

When her nephew endeavored to persuade her that a bank was the safest place for the $500,000 in $10,000 bills found in a belt beneath her voluminous skirt on Thursday she exclaimed:

"What good are banks? What about the Bank of the United States? I've still got my money but where are the banks?"

HONOR MEMORY OF PULASKI AT EXERCISES TODAY

A patriotic demonstration will be staged in the rotunda of the Federal building at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon in accordance with President Hoover's proclamation designating Oct. 11 as Pulaski Memorial day, in honor of the memory of Gen. Casimir Pulaski who died 152 years ago while fighting for American independence.

The ceremony will be attended by city and federal authorities and thousands of Chicagoans of Polish descent, according to Anthony Czarnecki, United State collector of customs and chairman of the executive committee in charge of arrangements.

Gen. Gustave Orlicz-Dreszer, inspector general of the Polish army, who arrived in the city yesterday for a three day visit will be a guest at the celebration.

Among the speakers will be Maj. Gen. Frank Parker, commandant of the Sixth corps area; Titus Zbyezewski, consul general of Poland; John Romasskiewicz, president of the Polish National alliance; State Commander Ivan Elliott of the American Legion, and John Clejniczak, president of the Polish Roman Catholic union.

Mayor Cermak, City Controller M. S. Szymczak and delegations of various posts of the American Legion joined in a welcome to Gen. Orlicz-Dreszer yesterday. Following a reception at the Polish consulate, the general placed wreaths on the Lincoln monument in Lincoln park and on the Kosciuszko monument in Humboldt park. He then received the official greeting and welcome of the United States army at Fort Sheridan.

Gen. Orlicz-Dreszer is a guest of the American Legion.

"Funerals by Hursen" Of Course

Hursen Chapels are today recognized as the finest institutions of the kind in this country. The North Side chapel, particularly, is a masterpiece of beauty, massiveness, facilities and arrangements. It has recently been remodeled. The South Side and West Side Chapels are palaces, convenient for the smaller or the largest funerals.

All Hursen automobile equipment, the finest things on wheels, was built for Hursen along Hursen special designs. Yet the charge is no greater than for equipment far less desirable.

There is no charge for the use of any of the three Hursen Chapels, each equipped with organs of unmatchable tone and size. The charges for Hursen funerals are less than the charges usually made elsewhere. So call Hursen, of course!

TABLET TO SHEPHERD, JOHN BROWN RAIDER VICTIM, IS UNVEILED

Harper's Ferry, W. Va., Oct. 10.—(AP)—A memorial tablet to Heyward Shepherd, Negro, the first person killed in the John Brown raid here in 1859, was unveiled today.

Shepherd was a free Negro employed at the Baltimore and Ohio railroad passenger station. The raid in which he was killed was followed by the trials and execution of Brown and followers who were with him in a movement to free slaves.

The movement to erect a memorial to Shepherd began at Asheville, N. C., in 1920 at the general meeting of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Mrs. L. M. Bashinsky, Troy, Ala., president general of the U. D. C., delivered the memorial address today. Mrs. Mary Dowling Bond of Kentucky, chairman of the Heyward Shepherd memorial committee, presided.

PURCELL ESTATE OF $1,250,000 TO GO TO RELATIVES

The late Charles A. Purcell, for years before his retirement a familiar figure in the grain pits of the old Board of Trade, left an estate of $1,250,000. This was revealed yesterday when the inventory was approved by Nuncio Bonnelli, assistant Probate judge. Under his will, which already has been probated, Purcell left his estate in trust to his son, William, of Portland, Ore., and several grandchildren. He died on March 21 at the age of 70.

No stocks were listed in the inventory. Bonds, however, with a value of approximately $1,000,000 comprised the largest part of the wealth. Included in the list are twenty bonds of the Argentine republic which have a par value of $20,000 each. Others were ten bonds of the Insull Utility Investment company, each with a $10,000 par value; and numerous issues of Ohio public utilities companies and municipalities.

FARM RELIEF BOBBING UP AS ELECTION ISSUE

"Equalization Fee" Being Discussed Again.

BY ARTHUR EVANS.

Lines seem forming for another battle over farm planks next year in the national political conventions. The old "equalization fee" idea which was the basis of the agricultural controversy in 1928 at the Republican convention at Kansas City and of the Democrats at Houston has been revived.

Demands that the old McNary-Haugen theory of price control be placed in the federal marketing act were voted at the recent meeting of the directors of the American Farm Bureau federation, one of the early sponsors of the "equalization fee." The policy declaration will be acted upon at the annual meeting of the federation to be held at the Sherman hotel Dec. 7 to 9.

Act Found Lacking.

The directors proposed to open a movement when congress meets in December for an equalizing fee amendment to the marketing act on the ground that after a fair trial the act has been found lacking.

The argument is being advanced that to interpolate the McNary-Haugen idea would also be a step in the direction of taking the government out of business by placing the stabilizing operations on a fee basis instead of dipping into the federal treasury.

Against it the contention is raised that the fee would amount to a tax and would be an unconstitutional delegation of taxing powers by congress. If congress fails to act the politicians look for the old controversy that was one of the headliners in the campaign of 1928 in the corn and wheat belt to pop up in the national conventions.

Brings Messages of Approval.

The effort of the federation officials to renew the demand for the equalization fee has brought messages of approval from Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas and Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois, who withdrew as a candidate for the presidential nomination at Kansas City after the convention had tossed out the farm plank presented by midwest agriculture.

Under the fee plan, as advocated by the Farm Bureau federation directors, a governmental agency, probably the farm board, would determine how much of the crop in a season may be greater than domestic requirements. This surplus would then be purchased either through the governmental agency or through the coöperatives and disposed of outside the United States at bargain prices.

The difference between the sales price of the surplus and the price paid the producer would be spread over the entire crop in the form of a tax collected on each unit of the commodity sold in domestic trade. This would be the "equalization fee."

Under the old McNary-Haugen plan, which has been altered somewhat to fit the marketing act, the fee would be collected at the mill or elevator.

A New "Iowa Idea."

The usual crop of farm relief ideas appears in prospect as the elections draw nearer. Gov. Dan W. Turner of Iowa, has recently expounded a new "Iowa idea" before the federal reserve bank authorities at Chicago and the farm board at Washington. The governor's proposal is to attempt to raise the price of corn in the corn belt by getting the farmers to store their corn in the crib and to obtain cheaper loans for farmers who need the money and who hold their crop from market until the prices advance.

This movement started at a meeting of 1,500 Iowa farmers a few weeks ago. Some other Iowa farm groups have indicated opposition to the Turner plan, and sentiment in the agricultural area seems quite divided among the farmers themselves.

Nebraska Takes It Up.

In Nebraska the Gov. Turner corn movement has been taken up by Mark W. Woods of Lincoln, who was a speaker for the western farm plank at Kansas City.

Indications are that the new "Iowa idea" has received a chilly reception both at Washington and in Chicago. Gov. Turner after presenting his arguments remarked that the reaction had been "not too encouraging."

Bandit Gangs Get $700 in Two South Side Holdups

Two early robberies, in which two gangs of bandits made a total haul of $700, were reported on the south side this morning. The first victim was Hyman Siegel. He was menaced by three men in his drug store at 726 East 63d street and robbed of $250. The second victim, Jay H. Naumann, a butcher, and two sons were forced to the curb by a car containing four bandits and robbed of his store receipts, amounting to $450. The holdup occurred at 65th street and Homan avenue while the Naumanns were on their way to their home at 2510 West 66th place.

RUPTURE

Don't submit to avoidable operations or the use of antiquated trusses, as they all set where the lump is and not where the opening is. The opening is seldom larger than a dime, no matter the size of the rupture, and all cases can be retained with the end of a lead pencil. The Spermatic Shield-Complex (Patent No. 747247, No. 1237700 and other patents pending) is a scientific achievement in a highly specialized art. It will not only retain any case of rupture perfectly, but contracts the opening in 10 days on the average case. Infinitely superior to any instrument method of operations and produces results in no other way obtainable. All cases are secure a lifetime as against any further trouble or expense. Large or difficult cases or incisional rupture (following operations) specifically solicited. The instrument received the only award in England and in Spain, producing results without surgery, injection, medical treatments or prescriptions, with distinguished personal patrons of all nations. See booklet on "The Fallacy of Surgical Procedure."

BORAH TO TESTIFY AT FRAUD TRIAL; TO DENY ANY IMPLICATION

New York, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Senator William E. Borah today notified Assistant United States Attorney Rosenblum that he would appear Wednesday to testify in the trial of Louis Pirelli, the Franklin Plan corporations of New York and New Jersey, and others indicted for fraudulent use of the mails in selling stock of the corporations.

Senator Borah will be questioned concerning representations to investors that he had obtained a national bank charter for the corporations and that he had been interested in their project. Rosenblum said that Senator Borah would "flatly deny" having any interest in the corporations; that he had ever sought a charter in their behalf, and that he knew the defendants. There is no connection between the companies involved and the Franklin Plan corporation, incorporated in Delaware and headed by George S. Groves.

POLICE GET THEIR MAN — BUT, GET WET GETTING HIM

While the rain was beating down in torrents last night, Clark Kidd, 1439 North Mayfield avenue, attendant at the oil filling station at Illinois and La Salle streets, opened the door of the station office to admit a drenched stranger who sought shelter.

Across the street Sergt. Richard Patton sat at his desk in the traffic division police station, watching the rain. He noticed Policeman Edward Cowling running to get out of the wet. Then he glanced across the street and saw the wet stanger holding up Kidd in the filling station.

Sergt. Patton stuck his head out of the open window and called to Policeman Cowling: "Get that robber."

Cowling dashed to the filling station. Patton was close behind him. They caught the stranger after chasing him a block in the rain. He identified himself as Theodore Morgan, 26 years old, of 415 North Leavitt street. In his pocket was $27 which he had taken from Kidd.

The two policemen took their prisoner to the lockup and then went to their own station to get dry.

FALL FATAL TO AGED MAN.

GIRL FINDS BABY BOY, 10 DAYS OLD, LEFT IN HALLWAY

A plaintive cry sent Katherine Calabrese, 16 years old, into the hallway of her home at 727 South Ashland boulevard late last night. There she found a tiny bundle. Inside it was a baby, 10 days old. Pinned to the blanket in which the infant was wrapped was a note. It read: "If you please, help my baby. My husband is in the hospital. Mrs. Gladys ——." No last name was given.

Maxwell street police were notified and took the child to St. Vincent's orphanage, after 16 year old Katherine had dressed the tiny caller in a dress which she wore when she was a baby. According to Miss Lillian Mackey, a nurse at St. Vincent's, the abandoned baby is dark eyed and dark haired and of fair complexion.

STEALS WOMAN'S PURSE.

A thief grabbed a pocketbook containing $6 from Mrs. Anna Moffett, 25 years old, 1409 West 80th street, as she was waiting for a street car at 79th street and Essex avenue yesterday and escaped in an automobile.

HUNT SLAYER OF POLICEMAN IN ROADHOUSE ROW

An inquest opened yesterday into the death of Policeman Joseph Isaacs, 28 years old, who died early yesterday of a bullet wound he received on Friday morning, when he tried to intercede in a roadhouse quarrel, was continued until Oct. 30 at the Kensington police station. The police asked for further time to enable them to apprehend the slayer, who is believed to be Thomas Scupino, 1610 South 51st court, Cicero.

The shooting occurred in the Spanish Tavern café, 11851 South Michigan avenue, where James Russo, the owner, was entertaining a number of friends in celebration of the café's recent opening. Policeman Isaacs, who was attached to the Kensington station and was on a furlough, had entered the place for a late meal. He was shot with his own revolver when he tried to restrain a man who was threatening a woman.

MILNOR DENIES HE ATTEMPTED TO COERCE EDITOR

Farm Board Grain Chief Replies to Magazine.

BY PAUL POTTER.

G. S. MILNOR. [Bureau Photo.]

George S. Milnor, president of the farm board's grain stabilization corporation, yesterday denied having made any efforts to threaten the circulation or advertising revenue of the Northwestern Miller, Minneapolis trade paper, for its editorial criticisms of farm board policies.

Milnor was accused in an open letter the trade paper printed on Sept. 30 of having sought to influence millers to withhold or threaten to withhold advertising in retaliation for editorials on the farm board and stabilization corporation. The letter was signed by Robert E. Sterling, editor.

Sends Letter in Reply.

Yesterday Milnor declared his position by referring to his reply to Sterling's charges, a letter which the milling magazine printed this week.

"It is quite evident from your letter that either you have been misinformed or that your informants have misstated the facts or placed a wrong interpretation thereon," Milnor stated. "You might be interested to know that in no case have I made any suggestion to any miller, or group of millers, in regard to their patronage of the Northwestern Miller as advertisers or subscribers.

Finds Articles Hinder Relations.

"I have frequently been embarrassed in my negotiations with the farm board, when discussing our relations with the milling industry, because some members of the board were under the impression that the Northwestern Miller, as a trade journal, reflects the opinion of the members of the milling industry as a whole, and that certain editorials and articles published in it from time to time seem to constitute unfair criticism of the farm board and stabilization corporation.

"In talking with millers, I have told them of such embarrassment, stating that what seemed to be the hostile attitude of a trade journal, which in the minds of many more or less represents the milling industry, has not made it any easier for me to carry out the wishes of many millers in connection with the exportation of flour, instead of wheat, and other matters."

Milnor added it had been difficult for him to "explain to the farm board that it (the magazine) does not in reality officially reflect the ideas of the milling trade." He also added he had been "very careful to avoid criticism of such policy, realizing full well your right as editor to express your views freely and fully."

Sterling in a footnote to the letter indicated he would "drop the controversy" and "accept Mr. Milnor's courteous explanation in a spirit of tolerance."

AKRON SO HIGH ITS BUOYANCY FAILS TO LIFT

Akron, O., Oct. 10.—(AP)—The navy's new airship Akron spent 12 hours and 11 minutes in the air today performing feats new to the history of lighter than air aviation.

It rose to heights where its buoyancy no longer held it up, Dr. Karl Arnstein, chief engineer of the Goodyear-Zeppelin corporation, reported. This was about 6,000 feet. With the elevators tilted, and going at 60 knots, the ship showed no inclination. At that height it was 22,000 pounds heavy.

Dr. Arnstein said this was accomplished with the use of the swivel propellers, which also operated for lifting the ship on the takeoff and bringing it down on mooring. The ship was made to rise so rapidly on the takeoff this morning, he added, that the temperature dropped eight degrees.

The airship was moored to the mast at 7:33 p. m. This was the seventh flight, to test the Akron's climbing and diving ability and its dynamic lift.

The afternoon was spent over Lake Erie. During the morning it passed over Akron, Norwalk, Tiffin and Toledo, O., and Detroit. Navy officials announced the eighth flight will not be before Monday.

3 PRISONERS SLUG DEPUTY; CAUGHT.

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Slugging the deputy warden who brought them headache medicine, Steve Jozwiak, alias Alfred Vagle, of Chicago, and Ralph Hope of Cass county attempted to escape from the Sangamon county jail early today. Hope was tackled and downed by the deputy, but Jozwiak fled two blocks before he was recaptured.

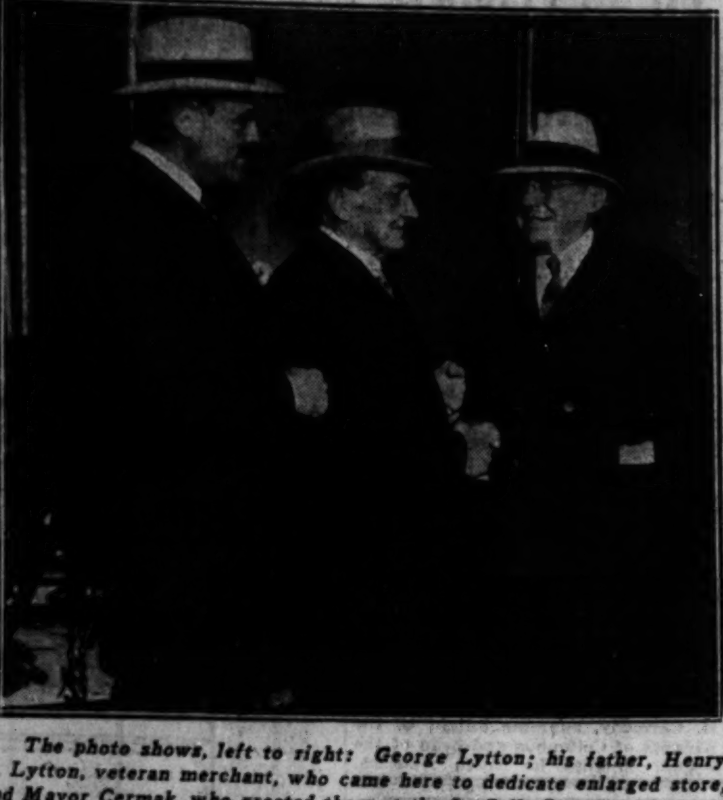
MERCHANT GREETED BY MAYOR



The photo shows, left to right: George Lytton; his father, Henry C. Lytton, veteran merchant, who came here to dedicate enlarged store, and Mayor Cermak, who greeted them at the La Salle Street station.

To Dedicate Store

Henry C. Lytton, veteran State street merchant and founder of The Hub, returned to Chicago yesterday for the dedication of the reconstructed and modernized store. Mr. Lytton, now 85 years of age and retired from active business, started his initial Chicago mercantile house 55 years ago.

Mr. Lytton, who has just returned from Europe, expressed confidence in the general recovery of business and severely criticized prohibition as a moral and economical deterrent to American progress.

"Conditions are not as bad as we are led to believe," he said. "Our main trouble is that we are making comparisons with the boom periods and not with normal times. Naturally things are not as good as they were during the time of inflation but a comparison with normal times would show less difference."

Favors Beer and Wine.

In the opinion of the pioneer merchant the return of light wines and beer would do more than any other single thing to bring back prosperous times.

"I think," he said, "that prohibition has created more immorality, depravity and depression than any other thing."

"I certainly would never favor the return of the corner saloon, but I am confident that a system similar to that in Canada would employ thousands of persons, save millions of dollars to the government, and would decrease drunkenness. In 30 years travel and residence in Europe I have never seen a drunken person."

Predictions in Corner Stone.

Tomorrow Mr. Lytton will supervise the dedication in the new arcade and corner entrance of the store at State street and Jackson boulevard. His predictions of the trend of the next 100 years in architecture, style, and habits, accompanied by newspapers, books, and pictures, will be placed in a corner stone to be reëxamined in 2031.

On Tuesday Mr. Lytton will be the guest at a luncheon in the directors' room of the Century of Progress exposition building which will be attended by fifty of his old friends and business associates. He will return to the east the latter part of the week.

A. F. OF L. HALTS PARLEY TO TAKE WEEK-END REST

Vote on Prohibition Due in a Few Days.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Oct. 10.—(AP)—With an arduous week behind but a still busier week ahead, the American Federation of Labor paused today in the midst of its fifty-first annual convention to observe the five day week.

Planks in labor's platform for the coming year were laid during the first week of the convention, but the troublesome problems of prohibition, Philippine independence, labor conditions at Hoover dam, and unemployment insurance are among those listed for settlement during the coming week.

Delegates Take Holiday.

Committee hearings on various vexing questions continued today, although most of the delegates took a holiday. Tomorrow many of the delegates will attend churches in the city. Labor leaders will occupy several pulpits. Monday also is a holiday, being the Canadian Thanksgiving day, so sessions will not be resumed until Tuesday morning. The convention may be concluded by Thursday night.

Among the pronouncements which have been accepted by the convention for its platform have been resolutions voicing opposition to a sales tax as a burden on those least able to pay, advocacy of universal adoption of the five day week, with the government taking the lead by granting postal employés two days off in seven; demand for extension of the prevailing wage scale to all federal projects, and demand for investigation of the labor policies of industries requesting changes in tariff laws.

Vote Near on Dry Law.

The first week also saw the crystallization of sentiment on the prohibition question and, although the recommendation of the resolutions committee will not be known until next week, convention leaders, both wet and dry, expressed conviction that labor's stand for 2.75 per cent beer, taken several years ago, would be reiterated.

This despite the resolutions, one demanding repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the other repeal of the Volstead act and severe and open denunciation of prohibition by many delegates. These resolutions, it was felt, would be sidetracked and the executive council's stand for beer would be given preference.

Speakers during the week both praised and condemned the idea of unemployment insurance subsidized by the government.

Norwegian Ship Brings Wood Pulp to Michigan

Benton Harbor, Mich., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The Scandinavian freighter Reinunga from Bergen, Norway, arrived in South Haven, Mich., today with a cargo of wood pulp of more than 3,000 tons. Great interest all over southwestern Michigan attended the docking of the freighter. The Reinunga is the first of nine foreign ships scheduled to bring cargoes to South Haven before Christmas. The pulp wood will be stored at South Haven and trucked to Michigan points.

BALM SUIT AGAINST MA KENNEDY'S MATE ENDS; 'ALL FORGIVEN'

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 10.—(AP)—The $250,000 breach of promise suit filed recently against Guy Edward Hudson, husband of Mrs. Minnie [Ma] Kennedy, Los Angeles evangelist, was dismissed today at the request of Mrs. Ethel Lee Parker Herbart, who said all had been forgiven and forgotten.

Mrs. Herbart charged in her suit she and Hudson had traveled more than 2,000 miles for nearly ten months on a pre-nuptial honeymoon and that she loaned him considerable money. Later, she charged, he jilted her.

Hudson first married Mrs. Kennedy, mother of Aimee Semple McPherson Hutton, in Longview, Wash., but Mrs. Kennedy had the marriage annulled when it was found Hudson had not been divorced from his first wife. He later obtained a divorce in Nevada and remarried Mrs. Kennedy in Nevada.

HEIRESS WIFE ILL OF ALCOHOL AND DRUG, SAY POLICE

It was a combination of sleeping potions and liquor that caused the violent illness of Mrs. Florence O'Shea Foley, the $500,000 heiress, the police decided yesterday.

Mrs. Foley, who is 24 years old and resides at the North Park hotel, 1937 North Park avenue, is recovering from her illness at St. Joseph's hospital. Her physician, Dr. Otto Schultz, 25 East Washington street, diagnosed the ailment as the result of the toxic effects of alcohol and a sedative

Learning that her husband, Charles Foley, 17 years old, was held in the Hudson avenue police station together with her chauffeur, Armond Parquin, 19 years old, and a friend, Walter Krohs, 27 years old, 2245 North Halsted street, Mrs. Foley telephoned the police, requesting that all three be released. The police acted upon the request and set the trio free.

Young Foley asserted he had not seen his bride since last Sunday when, after one of their frequent quarrels, she quit their apartment at 1033 Loyola avenue for the hotel.

The couple were introduced to each other a month ago through Krohs, the young husband said. They eloped to Valparaiso, Ind., and were married, Foley asserted. A relative of Mrs. Foley is said to have complained to the police some weeks ago that she was dissipating her fortune, most of which is invested in Niles Center real estate and in a 16 apartment building at Glenwood and North Shore avenues.

INDIANA MAN, 70, DROWNS SELF.

OUSTED PASTOR'S CASE IS BEFORE METHODIST BODY

Conference Considers Warren Appeal.

BY THE REV. JOHN EVANS.

Behind closed doors yesterday morning, the Rock River conference of the Methodist Episcopal church discussed the case of John A. Logan Warren, deposed pastor of the Durand Methodist church. Sessions of the conference will convene today and tomorrow at the Chicago temple, Clark and Washington streets.

Warren was ousted from his charge in 1927 for alleged improper relations with a maid of his household. He was tried by the conference and by the ecclesiastical court was found guilty.

Wins in Civil Courts.

Warren took the case before the civil courts and won slander suits against members of his former congregation and three ministers of the Rock River conference.

If the Rock River conference refuses his appeal for reinstatement his final hearing probably will be before the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church which meets in 1932 in Atlantic City.

After the executive session, the conference discussed memorials to be brought before the general conference. A resolution was adopted unanimously asking the general conference to return Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes as the resident bishop of the Chicago area. A similar resolution was passed by the conference laymen.

"Love Feast" Today.

This morning will be marked by the conference "love feast," which is an historic Methodist rite. The love feast will be led by the Rev. William E. Grose.

Tonight the Rev. Noel E. Hutchcroft of Blackburn, England, fraternal delegate to the Methodist Ecumenial or world-wide conference, will be the preacher at the Chicago temple.

MOONEY PARTISANS URGE A BOYCOTT ON CALIFORNIA GOODS

New York, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—A boycott of California goods was advocated at the labor massmeeting on behalf of Tom Mooney in Union Square today. The meeting, addressed by prominent Socialist and labor leaders, was held under the auspices of the Tom Mooney molders' defense committee, with several hundred labor organizations coöperating.

More than 1,500 were present and the crowd contained a group of more than a hundred communists, many of whom busied themselves throughout the meeting in starting arguments with the Socialists present. The police kept a vigilant eye on the uninvited guests and when the arguments waxed too hot dispersed the little discussion groups.

Here Is This Season's First Snowplow Accident

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 10.—[U.P.]—Six persons were injured seriously when a northbound street railway snow plow sideswiped a southbound trolley car on Main street here today. About 30 other persons suffered minor cuts and bruises and shock. It wasn't snowing in Buffalo.

CITY PREPARES TO CELEBRATE COLUMBUS DAY

Meetings and Banquets to Start Today.

Celebration of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus 439 years ago tomorrow will start today in Chicago. In meetings and banquets and in the general holiday tomorrow homage will be paid to the explorer who come across the waters undaunted by the unknown.

The public schools, the city hall and courts and county building will be closed tomorrow, as will the banks in the metropolitan area.

Knights Plan Celebration.

Tonight the Calumet council of the Knights of Columbus will hold a celebration at the Southmoor hotel. The honor speaker will be Martin H. Carmody, supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus and head of the 700,000 knights in North America.

While the affair is primarily in tribute to Christopher Columbus, patron of the order, it will also focus attention on Chicago as the logical place for the order's 1933 national convention.

Welfare work of the Knights of Columbus will be discussed at a business meeting preceding the entertainment and plans considered to alleviate the present economic plight. All supreme, state, and local officers, as well as all knights living in Chicago, have been invited to the celebration.

There will be other council meetings of the Knights of Columbus, the Lafayette council, No. 361, gathering at delegate to the Methodist Ecumenical evening, where David Shanahan, the speaker of the Illinois house of representatives, is to speak. The University council will have ladies' night and will congregate in the auditorium at 1554 Devon avenue.

Lawyers' Society to Meet.

Another impressive celebration will be that of the Justinian Society of Advocates, an organization of lawyers of the Illinois bar of Italian extraction, who will hold a dinner tomorrow night at the Palmer house. This group was organized in 1921 by Attorney John De Grazia, five times president and now honorary president.

The principal speaker will be Lieut. Giulio Figarolo, naval attaché of the Italian embassy at Washington, who will represent the ambassador. Other speakers are to be Mayor Cermak, State's Attorney John A. Swanson, Dr. Antonio Ferme, vice royal Italian consul here, and John B. Meccia, president of the society. Judge John L. AMERICANIZED BIBLE WILL BE RELEASED SOON

Clarifies Terminology of King James Version.

BY REV. JOHN EVANS.

An American translation of the Bible is soon to make its appearance from the University of Chicago press. The editors of the new translation are Dr. J. M. Powis Smith, who is in charge of the Old Testament books, and Dr. Edgar J. Goodspeed of the New Testament. Dr. Goodspeed's translation of the New Testament, incorporated in the new American Bible, has been published separately for several years.

In defining their meaning of "an American translation" the editors state that the language used "cannot be allowed to fall to the level of the street." The Old Testament, Dr. Smith explained, with little exception, is on a high literary plane, and that the translation tries to be American in the sense that the writings of Lincoln, Roosevelt, and Wilson are American.

Biblical Science Progresses.

The new Bible reveals the vast development of biblical scholarship during the last quarter of a cecntury. It is stated that biblical science has made comparable progress with physical sciences in that period. At the present time a new standard American revision, to replace the version of that name published in 1901, is now being prepared by American scholars. Dr. Smith, a member of the international council of religious education, under whose auspices the standard version is being prepared, stated, however, that the new version will not be completed for several years.

People at large are still prone to resent changes of Bible wording, in spite of the fact that modern scholarship has discovered and translated the original meanings of the writers of the Bible far more accurately than earlier translators. This conservatism is revealed in the American standard version of 1901, when it is understood that the marginal renderings of text usually are the more accurate. This was a concession to people "who want to read the Bible the way they've always read it," whether their renderings are accurate or not.

Significant Changes.

Many significant changes will shock the readers of the new American Bible. For instance, instead of "In the beginning God created heaven and earth," the reader discovers, "When God began to create the heavens and the earth, the earth was a desolate waste, with darkness covering the abyss and a tempestuous wind raging over the surface of the waters."

The 23d Psalm is discovered to hold comfort only for this life, as its phrases now read:

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want;
In green pastures he makes me lie down;
To refreshing waters he leads me.
He gives me new life.
He guides me in safe paths for his fame's sake.
Even though I walk in the darkest valley
I fear no harm; for thou art with me.
Thy rod and thy staff—they comfort me.
Thou layest a table before me in the presence of my enemies.
Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup overflows.
Only goodness and grace shall follow me all the days of my life;
And I shall dwell in the house of the Lord down to old age."

From Promise to Question.

The most famous evangelistic text of the Old Testament, Isaiah 1, 18, changes from a promise to a question mark. "Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow," in the new translation asks:

"If your sins be like scarlet,
Can they be as white as snow?
If they be red like crimson,
Can they become as wool?"

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," in Ecclesiastes XII., becomes:

'Remember your creator in the days of your vigor,
Before the evil days come
And the years approach of which you will say,
'I have no pleasure in them;'
Before the sun becomes dark,
And the light, and the moon, and the stars;
And the clouds return after the rain;
In the day when the guardians of the house tremble,
And the strong men are bent,
And the grinding maids cease because they are few,
And the ladies peering through the windows bedarkened,
And the doors into the street are closed;
When the sound of the mill is low,
And one rises at the voice of the bird,
And all songs sound low even when in high tones;
They fear and terrors are on the road;
And the almond tree blossoms, and the grasshopper is burdensome,
And the caper berry becomes ineffectual;
Because man goes to his final home,
And the mourners go around the street;
While the silver cord is not severed,
Nor the jar shattered at the spring,
Nor the wheel broken at the cistern;
Nor the dust return to the earth as it was,
Nor the spirit return to God who gave it.

Expect Adverse Criticism.

While the new translation will receive much adverse criticism, yet it is not likely that the bones of Dr. Smith and Dr. Goodspeed will be disinterred and publicly burned 100 years after their deaths, as was the fate of Wycliffe, a 14th century English translator. The translators, however, in their preface, offer the same apology for the new translation as was offered by the translators of the King James version of 1611. The 300 year old document reads:

"We are so farre off from condemning any of their labours that trauelled before vs in this kind . . . and that they deserue to be had of vs and of posterities in everlasting remembrance . . . Therefore blessed be they, and most honoured be their name, that breake the yce and give the onset vpon that which helpeth forward to the saving of souls. Now what can bee more auailable thereto, than to deliuer God's books vnto God's people in a tongue which they vnderstand? . . ."

When the Old Testament was first translated from the Hebrew, many years before Christ, it was necessary to clothe its appearance with a miracle in order to gain its acceptance. The story of that miracle is that 70 translators were imprisoned in 70 cells between which there was no communication. In due course of time the 70 were released and all 70 translations agreed down to the last dot. This miraculous agreement proved the translation from the sacred Hebrew to be God's will and preserved the peculiar inspiration of the sacred books.

The Latin Bible.

The first attempt to translate both Old and New Testaments in the "common language" of the day was made during the last years of the 4th century and the beginning of the 5th, when Pope Damasus asked St. Jerome to undertake the task. St. Jerome reluctantly set about the work, and after 14 years, the "Vulgate" or Latin Bible was completed. This Bible, as have practically all others, met great hostility, for St. Jerome, a great Hebrew scholar, had gone to Hebrew texts instead of the miraculous Greek text of the 70. Gradually it was accepted and has remained ever since the accepted text of the Roman Catholic church.

When English texts are considered, Bibles representing almost every stage in the development of that language can be found. There were, for instance, the "Wicked Bible" and the "Breeches Bible." The latter was published in 1579 and distinguished by the verse in Genesis describing Adam and Eve's style review as follows:

". . . they sowed figge-tree leaves together and made themselves breeches." But Wycliffe's version—for which that scholar paid the penalty of having his bones disinterred 100 years after his death and publicly burned—also referred to "breeches."

Many Words Obsolete.

And so, when language changes, word meanings become obsolete and are lost. To this fact Prof. Smith refers in his preface to the Old Testament. He points out many words in the King James version whose meaning have been completely lost.

"'To ear,'" Prof. Smith says, "in the sense of 'to plow' or 'to till,' is obsolete; as are 'marish' for 'marsh,' 'scrabble' for 'scratch,' 'in the audience of' for 'in the hearing of,' 'all to' for 'altogether.' Time has wrought changes in the usage of words. The word 'prevent' once meant 'to anticipate,' but is now used in the sense of 'to hinder.' Facts like these make Bible reading a scholarly rather than a religious exercise and clearly point toward the need of a new translation."

Another argument offered by the translators of the American Bible is that every character in the King James' version sounds like every other. They point out that Peter is made to speak like Paul, and James like John. The only distinction made is in the content of what the various characters say. But in the present translation translators state that they have tried to reveal the personality of each writer or speaker as indicated by the way he speaks or writes in addition to the content of his utterance.

MacDONALD NEW TORY CHIEFTAIN BY TWIST OF FATE

Baldwin Steps Down in Favor of Premier.

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Oct. 10.—All seven political parties are now buckled down to work to elect a new British parliament, but each day makes it clearer that there are only two real parties in the field, the Conservatives and the Liberals.

The Conservatives, who have rallied behind Prime Minister MacDonald, are frankly out to destroy what is left of the old Liberal party, which is now split three ways. In some constituencies the Tories have been prevailed upon to withdraw in favor of some of the Liberals who have accepted the tariff shibboleth, but in most cases this has only happened where a fight would give the seat to a Labor member with a Tory a bad third. In other places even the Liberal ministers of the national emergency government, like Sir Herbert Samuel, are being opposed by a Tory.

Tories Rebuked by Leader.

Liberals are loud in their complaints of bad faith against the Tories, and even Stanley Baldwin, Conservative leader, uttered a mild rebuke yesterday against his followers for "not playing the game," and Mr. MacDonald's position becomes, therefore, still stronger than ever.

He maintains that he is still as much a Socialist as ever and none who knows him doubts it. He has, however, become the effective leader of the Conservative party, Stanley Baldwin, the old leader, having stepped down in his favor.

There is no reason to believe that the Tories enjoy Mr. MacDonald's leadership, but they have been forced to accept it, for without him they realize they cannot win. With him—so great is his personal popularity—election experts predict a majority of 100 to 150 members for the so-called National party.

His personal strength is shown by the fact that he alone possesses campaign funds. The Conservatives, of course, have money, but not too much. The Liberals admit they are broke and Arthur Henderson's Laborites are very hard up. Mr. MacDonald, however, is promised the financial help of 30 or 40 of Fenner Brockway's national Labor candidates in districts where they have a good chance of winning.

MacDonald Has a Fund.

The average cost of an election campaign for a parliamentary candidate is about $5,000 at the old rate of exchange and $3,800 at the current rate of exchange. Mr. MacDonald has been pledged a fund of $200,000, which will be contributed by personal admirers.

One of the minor mysteries is where all the communists get the money from to run the 17 candidates they are putting up. It is true they need not spend anything like $5,000, but each candidate must deposit $750, which is forfeited if he fails to poll one-eighth of the total vote.

There is not a communist in England, except possibly Shapurji Saklatvala, a Parsee merchant, who ever saw $750 at one time.

DOCTORS ACCUSED OF LOOTING AN INDIANA COUNTY POOR FUND

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—A report revealing alleged irregularities in claims made by physicians doing poor relief work in Vermilion county under direction of a local relief organization was filed with Lawrence F. Orr, chief examiner of the state board of accounts, by field examiners tonight.

Of $58,027 spent in the last twelve months for poor relief in the county $25,843 was for physicians and hospital care. Vermilion is in the Indiana coal mining belt.

In Highland township $1,233 of the $9,148 went for physicians and hospital care; in Eugene township, $2,002 of the $4,732 was paid physicians and hospitals; in Vermilion township $3,745 of $9,352 went for similar care; in Helt township $7,220 of $10,850 was for physicians and hospital treatment, and in Clinton township $10,642 of $31,161 appeared on the records to be for the same purpose.

Physicians named as receiving payments on claims which according to field examiners were illegal are: Drs. W. A. Johnson, S. C. Darroch, W. C. Myers, James Robinson, W. E. Sabin, W. D. Gerrish, E. A. Evans, and C. M. Zink.

COSGRAVE FACES DEFEAT IN FIGHT ON TERRORISM

Pushes Bill to Punish Foes of Government

BY HUGH CURRAN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

DUBLIN, Irish Free State, Oct. 10.—The meeting of the Dail Eireann on next Wednesday may mark the end of President William T. Cosgrave's government. Should this happen a period of grave uncertainty is possible and sanguinary upheavals might follow.

This situation is due to alleged treasonable agitation by communistic and republican elements, which has developed to a point where repressive action must be taken. The opposition is openly giving military training to its followers and a terroristic campaign has been launched by gunmen, which is considered by the government to be a menace to the existence of orderly government.

Plan Wider Police Powers.

Ordinary law seems to be insufficient to cope with the situation. The jury system has been broken down by intimidaton of jurors and this has forced the government to take stronger measures.

On Wednesday legislation will be introduced in the Dail giving wider powers to the police to arrest and question suspected persons. Under the plans of the government the following measures would be put in force: Unarmed guards will be strengthened by armed forces; military courts, with powers to inflict capital punishment, will be established; societies hostile to the establishment of law will be proscribed and the carrying of arms will be made a capital offense.

The promise of this legislation has aroused considerable protest from the people. Armed men have menaced deputies and senators in an attempt to intimidate them from supporting the measure.

Cosgrave Is Determined.

President Cosgrave's government is fully determined to put the bill through or otherwise be defeated. While strongly believing that the bill will be carried, a stormy debate is anticipated. Eamon de Valera's party will certainly oppose the measure, and probably the labor party also, but the Independent party which holds the balance of power is expected to support the government.

It is intended to push the bill through the Dail by Friday next, and through the senate during the following week.

It is possible that the Catholic hierarchy, which meets on Tuesday at Maynooth, County Kildare, will issue a pronouncement on the situation. It is known that the serious growth of communism severely perturbs the Catholic bishops.

$61,432 INCOME TAX ABATEMENT GRANTED VALENTINO ESTATE

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—(AP)—An abatement of $61,432 to the estate of the late Rudolph Valentino, movie actor, for overassessment of income taxes and interest was announced today by the internal revenue bureau.

Of the overcharge $53,732 was caused by elimination from the net incomes of 1925 and 1926 of amounts added to them in a prior audit, which was found to have been closed in another case. The remainder represented interest assessed on deficiencies in tax.

HOOVER MOVED BY PEACE PLEA OF 500 WOMEN

Public Opinion Ties His Hands, He Replies.

By GENEVIEVE FORBES HERRICK.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—President Hoover will carry his fight for peace just as far forward as public opinion in the democracy he heads will permit, he today pledged Jane Addams and 500 other peace seeking women who crowded into the east room of the White House with their disarmament petitions.

"Miss Addams"—the President smiled at the founder of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom—"and ladies, I am grateful to you for the effort you have made to arouse public opinion."

He looked down at the low gilt bench heaped high with squat little beribboned bundles of paper, containing the 125,000 signatures secured in a 9,000 mile pageant of peace throughout the country.

"You realize as well as I that my attitude in this matter needs no urging. But it can move only as fast as public opinion."

Taft's Daughter Understands.

At this point Mrs. Helen Taft Manning, whom several White House employés greeted as "Miss Helen," nodded understandingly.

Referring to his position with regard to the limitation of arms President Hoover said slowly:

"No head of a government can go beyond the support that can be gained from public opinion in a world where democracy rules. There is no statesman at the head of any government in the world today that has not expressed himself as desirous of attaining these ends."

The particular end toward which the petitions are directed is that the United States send delegates to the Geneva disarmament conference who "shall be not experts in the machinery of war, but experts in the machinery of peace."

Women of Forty Nations in Plea.

Miss Addams, who is the founder and honorary president of the Women's International league, under whose auspices this disarmament caravan toured the country, explained to the President that similar petitions were being circulated in forty countries, that England had 1,350,000 signatures; Japan well over a million.

Then Mrs. Manning urged the opportuneness of this time for peace talk, "with men and women in every walk of life facing destitution and starvation as a result of the economic dislocation following in the wake of the war."

Miss Katherine Devereux Blake of the caravan hailed Mr. Hoover as a world leader whose courage and daring the world was in need of today, and Miss Mabel Vernon urged him to "go as far as you like in this peace movement; you have public sentiment behind you."

When the ceremonies were over, the woman with the Illinois badge wiped a tear from her eye; the woman with the California ribbon boosted a child by the armpit, "to see the President" and the woman from New Jersey whispered that her crowd had driven all night in order to get to the meeting.

At the door President Hoover tarried, unmindful of the fact that Secretary Theordore Joslin had twice peeked at his watch.

"I suppose petitions are a familiar sight to you," murmured Miss Addams.

The President looked at the pile of papers on the gilt bench, papers of which he was to be custodian until the Geneva conference. Then he said: "On the contrary, I have never seen a petition like this. It is very unusual and very interesting."

CANNON INQUIRY FINISHED; FATE UP TO GRAND JURY

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The District of Columbia grand jury today concluded its investigation of charges that Bishop James Cannon Jr., as chairman, and Miss Ada L. Burroughs, as treasurer of the Democratic anti-Smith committee in 1928, had conspired to violate the federal corrupt practices act.

The grand jury is due to report on Oct. 16. It will then be seen whether it has been decided to indict either the bishop or Miss Burroughs, or both, for their alleged failure to file proper campaign expense accounts with the clerk of the house of representatives showing the disposition made of large contributions intrusted to the bishop for political use.

William Tyler Page, the house clerk, today complied with the order of Justice James M. Proctor and brought before the grand jury the original reports which Bishop Cannon and Miss Burroughs filed, and these were explained to the investigating body by E. J. Armbruster, a department of justice auditor.

Now that the grand jury proceeding is at an end there are indications that the senate campaign funds investigating committee will resume its inquiry this month, not probably, however, before it is seen whether indictments are handed down. On resuming its work the committee will presumably concentrate on tracing the contributions which former Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen of New Jersey gave to Bishop Cannon for use against Al Smith.

Welcomed

Members of the Woman's Republican club filled a banquet hall of the Hamilton club yesterday at a luncheon welcoming Mrs. Bertha Baur, Republican National committee woman, and Dr. Irene Behnke, president of the Woman's Republican club, who have returned from a summer abroad.

"If ever there was a time when Republicans must stick together this is the time," declared Mrs. Baur. "We must put our shoulders to the wheel to work for the Republican party, and forget factions."

Alexander Fyfe, former chairman of the Cook County Republican campaign committee and former president of the Hamilton club, declared that the Republican party is "bigger than any particular leader or group within the party."

Bandit Shot by Clerk as He Holds Up Druggist

A two gun bandit was shot and wounded late last night when he was fired upon by an unseen drug clerk while he was attempting to hold up another clerk in the pharmacy at 1468 East 57th street. The robber escaped, however. The gunman threatened James Quin, 1460 East 57th street, who was behind the counter. From a rear room, John Collins, 1509 East 54th street, the second clerk, saw the procedings. He fired. The bandit staggered and fled, with Collins sending two more shots at him. The robber was driven away by a confederate.

BINGHAM BACKS JERSEY STAND FOR WINE, BEER

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—From members of congress today came comments on the action of the New Jersey legislature in calling on congress to legalize the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer.

Said Senator Hiram Bingham [Rep., Conn.], a leading senate wet:

"I am glad to see the New Jersey legislature joining such distinguished company as the American Medical association, the American Legion, and the American Federation of Labor."

Representative James Beck [Rep., Pa.], one of the foremost supporters of the wet cause in the house, was confident that the New Jersey assembly's action would assist materially in fanning the resentment against the dry laws.

Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart, radical Republican of Iowa and zealous dry, asserted: "It was what one would expect from New Jersey and will have no effect on congress."

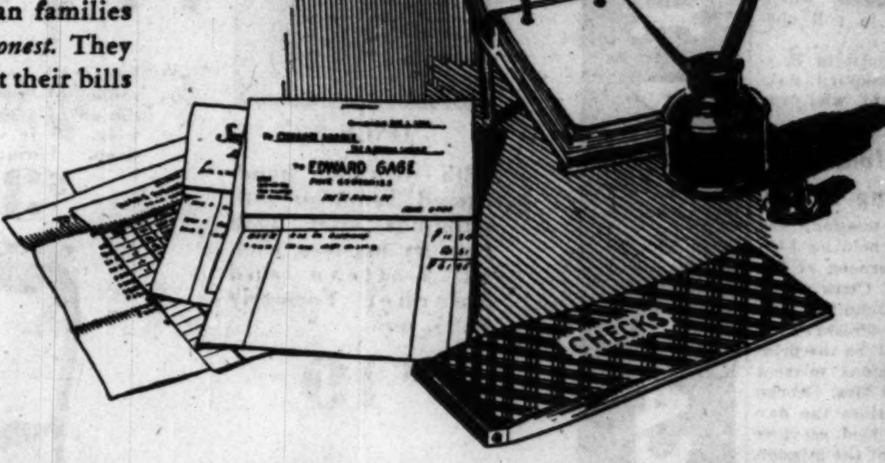
99 out of 100 families would pay bills on time . . . IF . . . .



A statement can be made about American families that has almost no exception—they are honest. They realize their obligations; they want to meet their bills on time.

: : : NOT a debt do they willingly dodge. Not a delinquent account that they aren't as anxious to have cleaned up as their merchants, doctors, landlords.

: : . THERE is a true and proud tribute to this integrity of families on the books of Household, America's foremost family finance organization.

: : . 330,000 families borrowed up to $300 from this organization last year. A total of $66,000,000 was loaned to them. The collateral was chiefly their character. And the losses were mighty small indeed.

: : : THE very fact that the great majority of these families borrowed to pay bills, is further evidence of American honesty. Temporary unemployment and other emergencies had dragged them behind, so they sought auxiliary funds to keep their credit clear.

: : . WHEN more families understand the service that Household offers, there will be even less past due indebtedness. 99 out of every 100 families would pay on time . . . if they had the money to tide them over times of stress.

: : : THE Household Loan Plan makes available to them from $50 to $300 on short notice. It does not require bankable securities—stocks, bonds, real estate. It asks no outside endorsers; the signatures of only husband and wife are required. It respects every family's independence and relies on every family's integrity. It allows up to 20 months for repayment.

: . . THE charges for this service are as low as it is possible to retail money under present conditions. In fact, three years ago the Household organization voluntarily reduced its rate on loans above $100 and up to $300, almost a third under the maximum charge allowed by the small loan laws of most states.

; . . MORE, these families receive helpful advice on getting back on their feet, on budgeting their incomes to keep out of debt in the future.

MONEY MANAGEMENT FOR HOUSEHOLDS, a helpful booklet on budgeting family income, leading to the happiness of financial security, is offered without charge to all. Telephone, call, or write for a copy.

TRY CULT HEAD ON CHARGE OF ATTACKING GIRL

Former Barber Accused by Follower, Aged 13.

Joseph Maria Abbate, who styles himself the "celestial messenger" and "bishop" of a church at 2021 De Kalb street, was put to trial yesterday before Chief Justice Harry Fisher in the Criminal court on a charge of attacking the 13 year old daughter of one of his followers. The jury was waived in the case and the judge is listening to the evidence on a not guilty plea.

Two of Abbate's parishioners were held for perjury soon after the trial opened and it was indicated that Judge Fisher might allow Assistant State's Attorneys Daniel Covelli and Elmer Edmgren to bring charges against other witnesses, including the mother of the prosecuting witness, when the taking of testimony is resumed Tuesday morning.

Reason for Delay Explained.

Lucy Vitello, daughter of a New York furniture dealer, is the complaining witness. She charges that Abbate, who was in court, attacked her in his church office on Aug. 14, 1930. The reason for the long delay in the prosecution is that the father was not apprised of the alleged attack until recently when his daughter deserted her mother and returned to him.

Mrs. Mary Vitello, the mother, was a witness for the defendant. The prosecutors said they would ask that the latter be held for contributing to the delinquency of her own daughter. Mrs. Vitello left her husband eight years ago and soon thereafter joined Abbate's church and lived in his convent with her daughter.

"I would not like to see the defendant in jail, because I know that he cannot do anything wrong," replied Mrs. Vitello to one of the questions of the prosecutor.

Two Held as Perjurers.

Miss Jacomine L. Monachino, 8210 Langley avenue, a public stenographer, and her brother, August, were the witnesses taken into custody for perjury. They testified that Abbate was with their family on a vacation in Michigan from July 20 to Aug. 18, 1930, and that, therefore, he could not have attacked the girl on Aug. 14 as was charged. Detective Sergeant Daniel Madigan of the state's attorney's office checked up and reported that the brother and sister were not on vacations from their positions at the particular time to which they testified.

"If your honor will hold these witnesses it will have a good effect on other contemplated perjured alibis in this court," said Prosecutor Covelli. "We have had too much of perjury in these courts and it is time that a stop was put to it."

The police charge that Abbate has a cult at his De Kalb street church. He formerly was a barber and says that he was "ordained by a vision of God while in his shop." He was incarcerated in the Elgin insane asylum from 1923 to 1925, according to the records, when he was charged with a similar offense at that time.

FREED IN TRIAL; ASKS $350,000 IN TWO LAWSUITS

Hugh H. Kuhl, direct mail advertising executive, has filed a suit for $250,000 against Theodore Regensteiner, president of the Regensteiner Colortype corporation, 310 South Racine avenue, charging malicious prosecution. A similar suit for $100,000 was filed against Miss Margarette La Shelle, 1137 Hinman avenue, Evanston.

Mr. Kuhl, who has been in business here for 17 years, was arrested last July in his home at 630 Maple avenue, Wilmette, on charges of operating a confidence game. The complainants were Regensteiner and Miss La Shelle.

When the case was tried before Judge Samuel H. Trude in the Felony court Thursday, Kuhl was immediately discharged. It was shown that the acts charged against Kuhl were the unauthorized activities of subordinates in the Republic Securities corporation, 11 South La Salle street, of which Kuhl was president and which ceased business in April.

Kuhl said yesterday that he believed Regensteiner and Miss La Shelle had reason to know that he had nothing to do with the sale of bonds to them.

Seize Girl with Gun

ANNA ALBRECHT.
[TRIBUNE Photo.]

The Lawndale police yesterday were holding Anna Albrecht, 18 years old, 2601 West 17th street, as a robbery suspect. She was arrested when Detectives Anthony Lalla and Stanley Bartnick found a small automatic pistol in her purse when they questioned her at 19th street and Albany avenue. The girl denied she is a robber, explaining that she took the weapon from a "boy friend" as security for a $10 loan.

CITY PREPARES FOR COURT TEST OF SUBWAY LEVY

Experts to Get Data in Philadelphia.

In preparation for the trial of the State street subway special assessment case a party of fourteen city attorneys, engineers, and real estate experts will depart this morning for Philadelphia, where they will study the subway system of that city. The party, headed by B. F. Lindheimer, president of the board of local improvements, expects to complete its investigation within a week.

One of the arguments advanced by the State street property owners whom the city is attempting to assess for a portion of the subway cost is that the subway is a general improvement and not a local one. As a general improvement, they contend, the cost should be paid by bond issue or entirely out of the city traction fund.

Seek Data to Support City.

In Philadelphia the party of experts will gather data to support the city's claim that the subway is a local improvement. They will study the effect of the subway on property along the right of way, giving particular attention to any increased property values chargeable directly to the proximity of the subway.

Mr. Lindheimer said yesterday that he expects the case to be on trial within four weeks.

"Every effort will be made to start the actual construction of the subway as soon as the court proceedings are finished," he said.

Those who will make the trip to Philadelphia besides Mr. Lindheimer are Irvin Rooks, George Mason, and Joseph Sullivan, attorneys; R. F. Kelker Jr., Charles De Leuw, and Ernest Liebermann, engineers, and Joseph J. Rice, Harry Goldstein, Robert White, Francis W. Corby, Glen Crawford, M. E. Geroult, and George F. Nixon, real estate experts.

New Attack on Ordinances.

It became known yesterday that a new brief attacking the validity of the transit and subway ordinances had been filed with the state Supreme court on behalf of owners of 2,500 parcels of land in the district that would be assessed for the subway.

HEAD OF SPAIN FIGHTS TO SAVE CATHOLIC CHURCH

Pleads to Let Republic Control Activities.

BY JAY ALLEN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MADRID, Oct. 10.—The Spanish church is facing its darkest hour. Not only has the revolutionary antagonism to it as an alleged co-tyrant with the monarchy through the centuries begun to flame again, but its defenders—rather, the partisans of moderate settlement—have lost heart.

President Alcala Zamora got up tonight to make the "greatest speech of my life." His first words revealed disheartenment.

"You will receive my discourse with glacial hostility," he said. "I may be nothing when I have finished with what I have to say today."

"A Question of Justice."

He urged the middle course of separation, but a state controlled, hand fed church.

"It is not a question of religion, but of justice," he said.

He pleaded against the adoption of the Socialist Radical and Socialist viewpoint which, he said, would endanger the life of the republic. He hinted that he and his strongly Catholic colleague, Miguel Maura, minister of the interior, would resign if they lost their cause, but he pleaded they would go on fighting for redress within the republic.

Not only within but without parliament has the old revolutionary sentiment again arisen. Madrid and many other towns were plastered with posters today by Socialist youths calling the citizenry to manifest itself against any sidestepping by the cortes. Guards, who have watched convents and churches since the burnings in May, were reinforced tonight. It is feared that in many quarters there will be new riots by the anti-clerical elements.

Nuncio Calls on Lerroux.

Papal Nuncio Frederico Tedeschini called on Alejandro Lerroux, foreign minister, tonight to see if he still intended to rise in the cortes as a champion of moderate settlement.

"Both President Zamora and Minister of the Interior Maura seem inclined, as good Catholics, to resign rather than to accept the radical solution," he said. "I have worked day and night in recent months for what now looks like failure."

Zamora tonight admitted the separation of church and state is a foregone conclusion, but the church is hoping that it will be given an official status as a corporation with the state collecting revenue for it along with taxes, that religious orders will be allowed to stay, and that its educational work will not be forbidden.

Tinley Park Justice Seized on State Warrant

Justice of the Peace Clarence Goesel of Tinley Park was seized yesterday on a state warrant charging him with falsifying public records. He is accused of changing his entries in a minor civil suit in which he is alleged to have blundered on recording an appeal. After his arrest at his home, Goesel was released on posting a $3,000 real estate bond. He will be arraigned Tuesday morning before Justice of the Peace Louis Staffel in Blue Island.

FIND FRESCO IN U. S. BUILDING IN PARIS MUTILATED

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Oct. 10.—Fresco walls of the new American building on the International university campus in south Paris, painted by Robert La Montagne St. Hubert of the Art institute, Chicago, have been mutilated and probably irreparably damaged by unidentified persons. The mutilation was largely confined to the figure of Mrs. Homer Gage of Worcester, Mass., chief benefactress of the American foundation, which built and supports the building.

The fresco measures nine by twelve feet and represents the "Spirit of the Eighteenth Century." It includes figures of Voltaire, Watteau, and Marie Antoinette. Mrs. Gage's features were used as one of the ladies in waiting for Marie Antoinette.

The mutilation, it is believed, was the work of some Yankeephobe, who considered it a presumption on the part of St. Hubert to use a 20th century American woman's face in a French 18th century scene. St. Hubert said that reparation would require the replacement of a whole section of the plaster and would take more than two months.

BUILDING IN SUBURBS MAKES GOOD SHOWING

September Has Gain Over August, 1931.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

Suburban building figures for September in Chicagoland are cheering when comparison is made with the preceding month of August and a bit depressing when one compares them with the month of September of last year. And yet when one looks back into the files at September, 1930, figures, which are so much larger than September of this year, he finds that the situation is exactly reversed so far as a note of cheer is concerned, for September, 1930, figures were considerably below those of August, 1930.

This year, however, we find September figures have increased 6.2 per cent over the preceding month of August, 1931. The total volume of building permits for September, 1931, according to the monthly survey by S. W. Straus & Co. was $1,166,474, as compared with $1,098,044 for August of this year.

Not So Cheery After All.

It's only when we begin to do what everybody does and compare the September figures with those of the same month of last year that we find this year's total for September is not so cheerful after all. For this same month in 1930 had a total of $2,561,857, or 54.4 per cent more. In other words the loss for September, 1931, as compared with September, 1930, was close to fifty-five per cent.

Following are the comparative figures for September, 1931, and September, 1930, and also for August of this year:

The five suburban communities which achieved the honor of having a September, 1931, total of building permits larger than those of September, 1930, were Libertyville, with a gain of 761 per cent; Homewood, showing an increase of 398 per cent; Cicero, with 318 per cent more; Geneva, 106 per cent, and Oak Park, with 31.8 per cent.

In the September, 1931, comparison with August, 1931, there are sixteen towns which register an increase in their building permits and several of these gains are spectacular. Geneva, for instance, which was one of the headliners in the September-September comparison, is the topnotcher, with a jump of 11,190 per cent.

Hinsdale Is Second.

Hinsdale is second in the list of sixteen with a gain of 1,478 per cent in its September figures as compared with those of August, 1931. Dolton is third, with 1,360 per cent. West Chicago comes fourth, registering an increase of 919 per cent.

Forest Park is fifth in the list with 318 per cent, and Libertyville comes sixth, with 318 per cent gain. Hammond, Ind., is seventh, with 295 per cent; then Villa Park, with 289 per cent; Harvey, with 239 per cent; Cicero, with 229 per cent, and Evanston, with 114 per cent.

WORK STARTS ON NEW CHURCH IN WILMETTE

Work was started on the first unit of the First Presbyterian church edifice, at the northeast corner of 9th street and Greenleaf avenue, in Wilmette, according to Childs & Smith, architects. The cost will be $150,000. The MacLean Construction company of Chicago, has the general contract.

The church auditorium will seat 400; the chapel 100 and the school will take care of 250 with a future capacity of 340. Special features of the building will be a woman's guild department, with reading room, coat room, and lavatories; store rooms; rooms for the Boy and Girl Scouts; a social room, with large kitchen, for banquets, lectures, and various social activities.

When the group is finally completed it will include men's clubrooms and special rooms for the pastor, choir, etc. The edifice will be on the site of the former church which was destroyed by fire. A picture of the new church was published in this department on Sunday, July 5, 1931.

REAL ESTATE BOND SERVICE

Inquiries must be accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelope for personal reply. Answers are based on information received from outside sources and beyond care in securing it The Tribune assumes no responsibility. Inquiries should be addressed to the Real Estate Bond Service, Chicago Tribune. Information should not be asked for more than one issue at a time.

Mayflower Hotel 6 1-2 Per Cent Gold Bonds.

Would you kindly give me information about $100 Mayflower Hotel 6½% gold bonds of Chicago, issued by Wollenberger & Co.? Have they gone into default? Are they still paying interest? Have they any market value? An acquaintance in desperate need of cash will sell five $100 bonds for $100. Could you advise?—W. C. G.

Wollenberger & Co. inform us that the July 1, 1931, interest and principal on the Mayflower hotel bonds were paid promptly, but they fail to supply an earnings statement. They state that the hotel is believed to be the largest link in the Zizook hotel system in Chicago.

Another official of the firm writes: "A recent survey of the building indicates that it is being properly kept up in every way, replacements are made as required and the property presents a very fine appearance."

As there is no active market for real estate bonds and as we have no statement of the hotel company, we cannot advise regarding sale of the bonds.

168 Adams Building Corporation (Midland Club).

Please give me some information about the 168 Adams Building corporation [the Midland club] bond issue, which is in default.—C. E. K.

The secretary of the first mortgage bondholders' protective committee writes that the outlook for the building is entirely dependent upon general real estate conditions and that, until the tax situation is straightened out and a great deal more space can be rented, the outlook is problematical. He failed to give an earnings statement.

The chairman of the committee states that including the space occupied by the Midland club, which is the largest tenant in the building, the property is about 74 per cent rented. Exclusive of the club the building is approximately 59 per cent occupied. The receiver announces that the club's membership has fallen off so much that it cannot pay the full rental and a reduction has been made. Other rentals are reported as satisfactory.

"Based on rentals now in effect and eight and one-half months' actual operating expenses, it is estimated that there should be $120,000 available for interest and taxes on an annual basis," the chairman states. "Any increase in rentals will be of material benefit, for these increases should occasion only moderate additions to operating expenses. This fact alone justifies optimism as to the prospects of this property as real estate and business conditions improve."

Fargo Manor Apartments 6 Per Cent First Mortgage Bonds.

The Chicago Trust company, now with the Central Republic Bank and Trust company, has just sent me a notice to the effect that the Fargo Manor apartment bonds are in default.

A New Feature

In answer to an increasing demand for information on real estate bond issues THE TRIBUNE today announces the inauguration of a separate department in the Sunday Real Estate section. This feature, entitled "Real Estate Bond Service," consists of questions and answers concerning various issues. It will appear regularly each Sunday.

Obviously, relatively few of the hundreds of letters received can be answered by published replies. In order to render a complete service, therefore, a personal letter service is maintained so that each inquirer who incloses a stamped, self-addressed envelope will receive a personal reply to his inquiry.

Service to Be Expanded.

For years THE TRIBUNE has furnished information on real estate issues through its Investors' Guide department. Each inquirer asking about a real estate bond has received a report containing all the salient facts that can obtained from the underwriter or owner and in the case of defaulted bonds, from the protective committee.

THE TRIBUNE'S "Real Estate Bond Service" will expand this accommodation. Selected questions and answers will be published in THE TRIBUNE Real Estate section each Sunday. Other inquiries will be answered by mail. Letters should be addressed to "Real Estate Bond Service," CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

Data Usually Obtainable.

Files already accumulated contain information on hundreds of real estate issues. Most bond houses, banks, and protective committees readily furnish such information. Many have formed the habit of sending current reports to the Investors' Guide as soon as they are compiled.

In some cases protective committees decline to make known any important facts, such as current earnings. When this occurs the inquirer is so informed. Inquiries should not be made concerning more than one bond issue at a time.

May I ask some information on these?—L. N.

The secretary of the bondholders' protective committee informs us that the loan originally was $175,000 and has been reduced to $165,000 as of April 1, 1931. A bill of foreclosure was filed Sept. 8, 1929, and the bank holds a certificate of sale dated June 20, 1930. The building contains fifty-five apartments and a recent report indicated thirteen vacancies. The gross income is averaging $2,100 per month, he states, and the operating expenses are averaging $800 per month. General taxes for 1928 and 1929 remain unpaid. The bondholders' committee has not yet adopted a plan of reorganization.

ARCHITECTS TO HEAR TALKS ON BLDG. MATERIALS

Building materials will be discussed at the October meeting of the Chicago chapter of the American Institute of Architects at its next meeting, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 13, at the Architects' club, 1801 Prairie avenue. Clarence W. Farrier, president of the chapter, will preside. He and Arthur Woltersdorf will speak informally on their experiences in Europe during the summer.

CLARENCE W. FARRIER.

Frederick O. Anderegg, consulting specialist on building materials, of Pittsburgh, and chief senior fellow of the cement division of Mellon institute, will tell of experimental studies of brick masonry made at the Mellon institute, Pittsburgh.

A. P. Kratz, research professor of mechanical engineering at the University of Illinois, will describe research investigations of heating and ventilation and the heat resistance properties of materials made at the engineering experimental station at Champaign. Members of the Architects' club, the Western Society of Engineers, and the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers are specially invited to attend this meeting. Dinner will be at 6:30 p. m. and the speaking will follow.

SALLY FROCKS, INC., LEASES SPACE IN COLUMBUS MEMORIAL

Two entire floors of the Columbus Memorial building, at the southeast corner of State and Washington, together with a first floor store and basement space, figured in two interesting and important leases negotiated yesterday. Sally Frocks, Inc., a chain organization retailing women's dresses on a one price basis, rented from the Stevens Brothers corporation, the store at 27 North State street, space in the basement and the entire third floor, occupied by Lebolt & Co., specialists in diamonds and pearls.

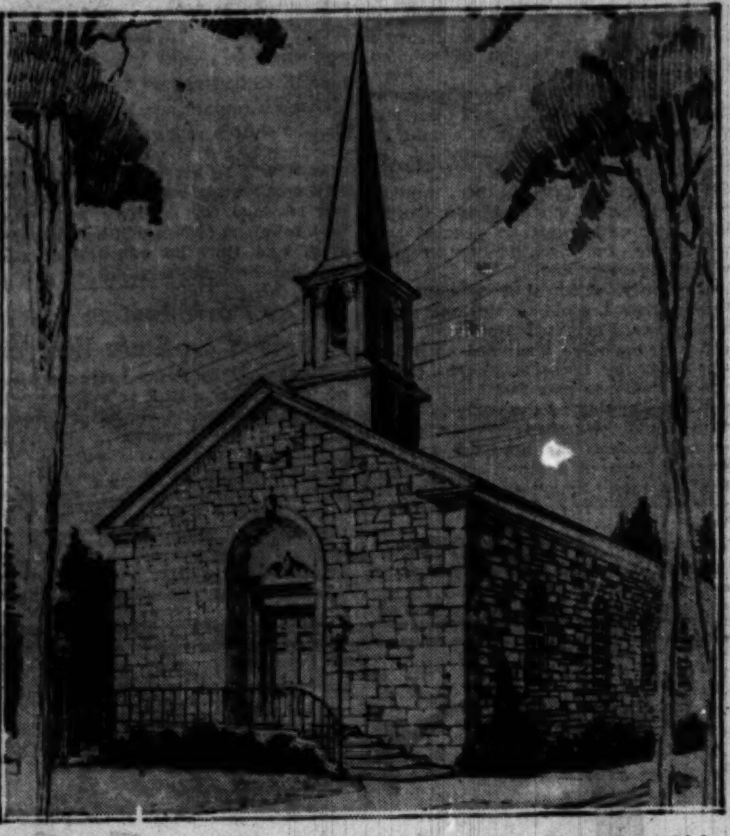
Lebolt & Co. have leased the entire fifth floor of the building which they announce will be converted into one of the most attractive precious stone shops in the country.

Frank C. Slosson of Hooker & Slosson, who with James C. Liebman of the same organization negotiated the Sally Frocks lease, declared the two leases were highly advantageous to the three principals, the present tenant, the lessee and the owners of the property.

The ground floor space rented by Sally Frocks fronts twenty-one feet on State street, with a depth of ninety feet. The third floor area comprises approximately 9,000 square feet. The new tenant will take possession Feb. 1, 1932. Plans are now under way by Sobel & Drielsma for an elaborate store front and new interior. Another private elevator will be installed connecting with the third floor.

Arthur S. Kahn, president of Sally Frocks, Inc., now entering on its seventh year, states that it has a forty-eight units, sixteen of which are in Chicago. One is at 35 South State street. He also states that in spite of the depression the corporation's August sales were 12 per cent greater than the same month last year. Lebolt & Co. will take over their new quarters on Feb. 1, 1932.

STEEPLE A FEATURE



Charles Draper Faulkner of Chicago designed the above edifice which First Church of Christ, Scientist, is erecting at the southwest corner of South Second avenue and Pine street, in Maywood. It is designed in the second period of colonial style with the dominating feature a tall steeple. The exterior will be of warm tan, brown, and russet colored Wisconsin Lannon stone, giving the effect of an old New England edifice. The interior will be paneled in knotty pine. The auditorium will seat 360. The total cost of land, building, and furnishings will be approximately $40,000, it is stated. The Armentrout-McCormac Co. of Oak Park, has the carpentry and masonry contracts.

LOMBARD CHURCH MEMBERS ERECT OWN PARSONAGE

Six months ago the Westmore M. E. church of Lombard had a building program which now has been solved in such an interesting way that we'll let the pastor, the Rev. S. Bloomquist, tell it. "A steady growth in attendance during recent years made it imperative that we do something about providing additional space for our Sunday school if we didn't want to hamper its growth," he said. "Since the church was unable to add to its budget for the year, we studied every possible solution. The congregation was determined to go ahead and to do this they declared themselves willing to do the work themselves.

THE REV. S. BLOOMQUIST.

"It was financed by the division of homes of Montgomery Ward & Co. It has eight rooms. The large basement is light and airy, and is especially designed to provide for Sunday school space. Adequate room for the increase in our Sunday school therefore has been made possible with no increase in our budget.

"The first floor will be used as a parsonage and we will rent the second floor. The rental will be sufficient to pay for the financing of the materials furnished by Ward's. Present day low material costs further assisted in making the task possible at this time.

"Over six months were required to complete the parsonage. Some worked during early morning hours and some after the close of their business day. This was true of members and nonmembers alike. Help came from the most unexpected sources and we estimate that 80 per cent of the work was done gratis."

The parsonage adjoins the church building, which is at the corner of Meyers road and Division street in Lombard.

HART GARAGES LEASE TWO MORE CHICAGO UNITS

Hart Garages, Inc., recently organized to own, operate and manage a coast to coast chain of garages, yesterday announced through Albert Hart, general manager, that leases have been closed for two more units, one at 4510 West Madison street and the other at 3611 North Crawford avenue. In each transaction the lease is for a five year term, with an option of five addtional years. The rental terms were not disclosed. The Premier Realty company was broker in both deals.

Mr. Hart states that the two properties just leased will be remodeled. The Madison street unit will care for 120 cars; the other, sixty-eight. Four other locations in the general vicinity of the Madison street unit, he says are now under consideration. He added that the company plans first to open a number of Chicago garages and then extend the chain to other communities

HOME BUILDING AND REMODELING

COTSWOLD HOME IS PLANNED FOR FOLIAGE MINDED

All but Kitchen Looks on Rear Garden.

(Proofs for floor plans of this home may be secured by sending stamped, addressed envelope to Louise Bargelt, Home Builders' Editor, The Chicago Tribune.)

BY LOUISE BARGELT.
[Home Builders' Editor.]

Due to natural inclination, enhanced by the prevalence of garden contests the country over, home owners and prospective home owners are ever becoming more aware of the value of plants, trees and gardens as mediums for the augmenting of the beauty of their properties.

LOUISE BARGELT.

With this growing development of what we might call "foliage mindedness" a modern adaptation of the Cotswold house is always a pleasure to see; a style of house that has been built for the last three centuries in the Cotswold hills of England.

Here we find harmony between rigid, formal walls of masonry and flowing, moving lines of trees and plants. Stone and brick walls melt into foliage and foliage into masonry walls without perceptible change of form, and true antiquity is gaining by the use of materials natural to their settings.

This home of 28,000 cubic feet was designed by Frederick E. Sloan, architect, 513 Oakdale avenue, Chicago. Approximate cost of construction along suggested lines, in Chicago area, $12,000.

Roof Should Be Red.

In adapting the Cotswold type to a modern American home, best results are obtained by using materials, which when finished, will show an antiqued surface. Accordingly, for this house, the walls may be of stone, or a rough, stone textured brick, or antiqued white washed brick or of cement plaster.

For the steeply picturesque roof, rough, irregular sized and shaped shingles should be used, preferably a dark red at the eaves and grading upward to a lighter red at the ridge. A saving could be accomplished by using a thick butted random sized wood shingle, but much of the Cotswold effect would be lost in so doing.

The dormers are to be covered with the same kind of shingles as the roof. All the windows are to be steel casements, the casements made draftproof and heat saving by carefully installed weather strips.

This home is designed for a lot at least sixty-five feet wide. The driveway to the garage, which is attached to the house, is shielded from the main part of the front yard by a five foot fence and shrubbery. The driveway and garage, so placed, permit the entire rear yard to be developed into a pleasant, secluded garden with lawn pool, flowers and shrubbery as desired.

Kitchen at Front of House.

In the laying out of the house interior the architect has kept the above view carefully in mind. The kitchen has been placed at the front—one may reach the garage through the kitchen. All of the other rooms, that is, the dining room and living room, and the three second floor bedrooms, overlook the garden. A terrace in the rear, along the dining room, hall and living room widths, makes an ideal outdoor summer room. Access to this terraced space is through a door leading from the hall.

The house has six rooms, not including the garage, the two baths, the large dressing room adjacent the master bedroom, and the first floor lavatory.

Much Kitchen Wall Space.

The entrance is into a long, narrow hall running the depth of the house. To the right is a large living room, 13x22. A natural fireplace has built-in bookcases at one side. The floors are of oak and the walls of antiqued plaster.

Stairs from the hall lead to the second floor, and at the left is the dining room, 12 feet 6 inches by 11 feet 6 inches, and the kitchen, 11 feet 6 inches by 10 feet. There is a generous supply of wall space in the kitchen, with nook for electric refrigeration and close for work apparatus. A door for delivery service opens to the driveway, up which all deliveries come. This room may have floor of linoleum or rubber tile, painted, washable walls, deep utility sink underneath the window, built-in kitchen ventilator, and an adequate supply of electrical outlets for service and light.

On the second floor the abundance of closet space is a delight. The master bedroom, 15x13 feet, has two closets, besides a sizeable little dressing room with window overlooking the front of the house. Another window looks out on the side, while still a third overlooks the garden and terrace at the back.

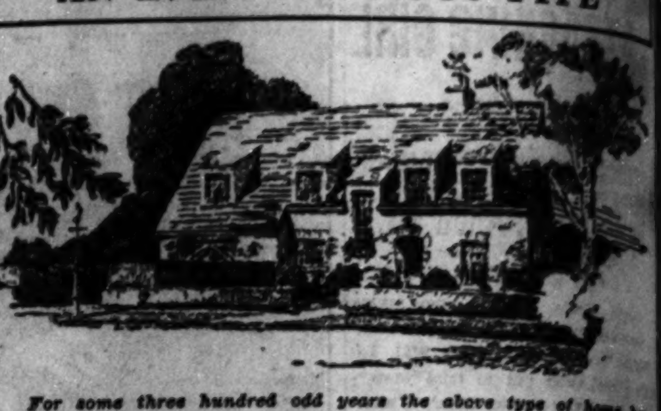
Recreation Room in Basement.

The second, middle bedroom, 13x11 feet, has a long, deep closet—a tiny window on its outside wall wouldn't come amiss!—and in the hall there are two linen closets, besides a large storage closet. The third bedroom, 11 feet 6 inches by 12 feet, has windows on three sides, as has the master bedroom, and one closet. Two tiled baths with shower fixtures attached to tub complete the second floor layout.

Incidentally it might be suggested that the space dedicated to the "storage closet" opening from the main hall and placed between bedroom 1 and bedroom 2 would be an excellent spot for one of the new shower stalls.

The basement is to be completely finished, with recreation room, all modern laundry appointments, automatic gas water heater, incinerator and water softener. Heating may be with hot water or vapor or warm air. Fuel to be oil or gas.

AN EVER GRACIOUS TYPE



For some three hundred odd years the above type of home has nestled amid the Cotswold hills of England. Here is a modern adaptation of this ever gracious type, with harmony existent between the rigid, formal walls of masonry and the flowing, moving lines of trees and plants. Walls may be of stone or stone textured brick, roof of irregular shaped shingles, dark at the eaves and grading to a lighter red at the ridge. Designed for a 65 foot lot, this home has six rooms, attached garage, two baths, lavatory, extra bedroom, dressing room and large storage closet. Heat may be hot water or vapor, or warm air, fired by oil or gas. Approximate cost in Chicago territory, $12,000. Architect, Frederick E. Sloan, 513 Oakdale avenue, Chicago.

FARM and GARDEN

DAIRY FARMERS COWS MUST PAY OR FACE BLOCK

Michigan Herd Holds U. S. Butterfat Record.

BY PAUL POTTER.

"Pay at the pail" is a slogan on one southern Michigan dairy farm where purebreds have been developed for ten years, but where they still must measure up to a certain standard of profit or they go to the butcher's block even though they could be sold to some buyer just because they have pedigrees.

KING PETERTJE.

Typical of these successful husband-wife partnerships is the farm ownership and operations of Mr. and Mrs. Doan Straub in Berrien county, Michigan, near Galien. Their success in building a Holstein herd gained national prominence last year when the Straubs established a 1930 herd butter fat production record averaging 621.3 pounds per cow, highest for all breeds in the United States.

For two years they have held the Michigan herd production record, and for five years their Holsteins have averaged 530 pounds of fat. All this with milk that sets a high test of 3.7 and 3.8 per cent of butter fat.

All of this reminds them of their humble start on the 260 acre farm ten years ago.

Half of the Udder Functioned.

The Straubs laugh heartily when they describe the first cow that started their herd. She could be milked out of but two quarters. Yet Mr Straub paid $140 for her at an auction sale because she looked healthy "Neighbors snickered and began to talk about his foolishness when a little later he brought home another cow for which he paid $170. She looked healthy and had good type, although she gave milk from only three-quarters.

That first "poor buy," however, has a granddaughter which at two years of age produced 609 pounds of butterfat. The Straubs have become convinced that the only way to produce milk at low cost is to weed out "boarders" which do not pay for feed and to maintain the herd in such production that a few cows are producing a large amount of milk.

Urges Testing of Cow's Production.

"Cow testing association work has come a long way since we started, but even in the state of Michigan there should be more of it," says Mrs. Straub, who keeps the pedigree records, figures costs of production and handles most of the sales of animals from the herd.

"We have started out quite a few boys and girls in calf club work. They are able to pay more for calves, we find, when they know that production records enhance the usual pedigree. In one year we sold eight calves to one buyer for $125 each, all of them going to farm boys and girls."

Two years ago $500 was paid for a young bull, King Bessie Ormsby Petertje, to bring new blood lines into the herd and to maintain in young stock the high production of the producing cows of the herd. Again neighbors openly voiced disapproval of what they thought was too much to pay for an animal, even if the bull did look good and have a pedigree.

But This Herd "Pays at Pail."

But now, it seems, many Michigan herds are producing milk at almost any bookkeeper can figure a loss, while the Straub herd, though small, continues to "pay at the pail."

On the 12th of May, 1931, the first twin calves were born on the farm. Both were bulls and now have been just Billy and Bob but before the year is up they will have been given a pedigree and registry appearance. Their mother has a record of 23,000 pounds of milk in 365 days, or 846 pounds of butterfat. The cows on this farm are milked three times daily, but the remainder of the year the cows are milked twice daily.

The sale of animals and milk is the main income on the farm. There is sufficient diversification, however, to add considerable to the returns on the farming operations.

As the herd is never permitted to get to an unmanageable size for Mr. Straub and a hired man, there is a sizeable surplus of hay and wheat. Potatoes, fruit, and hogs also contribute sums each year to the income.

Milk from the Straub farm is marketed in South Bend, Ind., through a membership in the Pure Milk association which represents dairy farmers in South Bend and other Chicagoland markets.

DEMOCRATS ALL "HET UP"; WANT MORROW'S SEAT

Moore's Hands Off Policy Called Heresy.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Declarations that A. Harry Moore, Democrat gubernatorial candidate in New Jersey, will take no steps to upset Gov. Larson's choice of a successor to Dwight W. Morrow as United States senator, even if Mr. Moore is elected governor next month, caused surprise and disappointment among some of the leading Democrats in Washington.

The Democrats expressed the opinion that Mr. Moore's decision not to call a special election, in the event he became governor, is a mistake. They contended that every effort should be made to increase the Democratic membership in the senate, and that Mr. Moore, if he were elected governor, should not be content to permit Mr. Larson's choice, naturally a Republican, to continue in the Morrow seat.

Robinson Is Aroused.

Statements that election of a Democratic senator from New Jersey would "impose the obligation" of reorganizing the senate under Democratic control met resentment here from Democrats who held that their party should not dodge the responsibility if faced with it.

Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Democratic floor leader of the senate, was shown a statement that the Moore decision was construed as meaning that "national Democratic leaders did not see any advantage to be gained," since election of a New Jersey Democratic senator would necessitate reorganization.

"I repudiate that statement; it is not my position," he said. "I feel that Democratic membership should be increased whenever possible."

Membership Now a Tie.

Senator Henry F. Ashurst [Ariz.] was another Democrat who took this view. He said he could not "understand the psychology" of not trying to send a Democrat to the senate from New Jersey.

At present, the senate's membership is Republicans 47, Democrats 47, Farmer-Labor 1, Morrow vacancy 1, total 96. If Gov. Larson appoints a Republican successor to Mr. Morrow, as confidently expected, that party will have 48 senators. On the other hand, should Mr. Moore be elected, and call a special election, when a Democrat would be chosen, Senator Shipstead, the Farmer-Laborite, might go for Republican organization, this would leave a tie which Vice President Curtis might be called upon to break.

Keith-Orpheum Sued for $213,000 Damages

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Earl Wayland Bowman, writer, has filed a $213,000 damage suit in federal court against the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Motion Picture company and William LeBaron, its vice president, charging infringement of copyright. The complaint alleges Bowman wrote a story called "High Stakes" and that the defendants recently produced a talking picture under the same title. An accounting of the profits and an injunction restraining further use of the story are asked.

Yola d'Avril, Actress, Sues Composer for Divorce

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Yola d'Avril, motion picture actress, filed suit for divorce from Edward Ward, composer, today, charging cruelty. A few weeks ago Ward dismissed a similar suit he had filed against the actress. It was understood a reconciliation had been effected. The actress, who said they married Oct. 15, 1930, and separated July 8, 1931, accused Ward of nagging, belittling her in the presence of friends, and threatening to leave.

Faxon Bishop of Honolulu, wife of a director of the steamship company, christened the 630 foot ship as it slid down the ways.

The Monterey draws 28 feet of water, displaces 26,000 tons, is an oil burner, will make better than 20 knots and carry 750 passengers.

VETERAN HELD AS INSANE FREED ON WRIT; QUIZ ASKED

Earl W. Hibbard, 33 years old, world war veteran who was confined in the North Chicago War Veterans' hospital as insane, was released yesterday by Judge Philip Sullivan in the Criminal court on a writ of habeas corpus. The judge suggested that the state's attorney's office make an investigation to see whether Hibbard was "railroaded" to an asylum as a result of a conspiracy.

After the hearing, Mrs. Frances Louise Hibbard, an attractive brunette, stepped forward and told the judge that she insisted on being given an opportunity to defend her character. She denied that she was friendly with the family physician, Dr. A. W. Wermuth, 3631 Janssen avenue, and said that the charges made by her husband were the result of delusions.

"I've been through hell for 7 years," she cried. "You can't tell me he is sane, I know that he is insane. He has threatened to do away with my baby and myself."

Dr. Francis Gerty, head of the psychopathic hospital, who was one of the alienists pronouncing Hibbard as sane, said that he would change his opinion if the testimony given by the wife was true. Assistant State's Attorney Euclid Taylor said that he did not believe the charges made by Hibbard and that he would not investigate.

REBELS SEIZE SHIP; LAND MEN IN VENEZUELA

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 10.—(AP)—The department of communications reported today that the Mexican steamer Superior had been taken over by Venezuelan rebels, posing as chicle workers, and was landing men on the coast of Venezuela with arms and ammunition to aid in a revolutionary movement.

The supposed passengers were led by exiled Venezuelan leaders who had been operating in Mexico, it was said, and they seized the ship on the high seas. They silenced the wireless preparatory to landing.

The Superior sailed from Vera Cruz for Yucatan Sept. 29 with 110 passengers and should have reached her destination within 30 hours, but nothing was heard from her. The first word the owners had of the seizure was a letter from a Venezuelan rebel organization in New York informing them that the vessel had been taken over but that if the owners would make no report they would be paid for the ship.

2 NEW MURDERS KEEP NEW YORK POLICE ON JUMP

Series of Robberies Also Adds to Troubles.

New York, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Two murders, apparently the work of gangsters, occupied the attention of the police today, in addition to the usual run of robberies and similar crimes.

The body of an unidentified man of about 35 years of age was found at the foot of an embankment off Randall avenue in the Bronx. There were two bullet wounds in his neck. He had been dead about 36 hours.

"Taken for Ride."

From the trails of blood in the roadway, it looked as if the body had been driven there in an automobile, taken out, and tossed down the embankment. The police set the case down as another gang killing in which the victim was "taken for a ride." The murder victim was well dressed.

Earlier in the day a man identified as Harry Cobrin, 26 years old, of the Bronx, was found slumped at the wheel of an automobile, two bullet wounds in his head. He died in Jewish hospital without regaining consciousness.

A patrolman saw Cobrin's parked car. The peculiar position of the driver attracted the patrolman's attention and he investigated.

Still Breathing When Found.

Cobrin still was breathing. The front window beside which he sat had been broken by gunfire. Whether the bullets had been fired from outside or from within the machine could not be determined.

The patrolman rushed the wounded man to the hospital, where he died two hours after being admitted.

Cobrin, police say, was engaged in the slot machine racket, and they are inclined to put his murder down to a tivity.

PARRAFIN CHOKES CHILD TO DEATH.

Dewey, Ill., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—While chewing parrafin, Delia May Shields, two and one-half year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Shields, farmers living near here, choked to death when a piece lodged in her throat. The child's body was found in a cornfield near the farm home.

FIRST NIGHT CLUB IN NEW YORK SUSPENDED UNDER NEW CITY LAW

New York, Oct. 10.—(AP)—The first suspension of a night club license for violation of the new city law empowering police to supervise the clubs closely was announced today by Edward P. Mulrooney, police commissioner.

The Little club was suspended and renewal of the Melody Band club's license was denied because, Mulrooney said, they permitted women employés to mingle with guests and had equipped doors with buzzers.

CUBA OBSERVES 63D ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE

HAVANA, Oct. 10. — (AP) — One hundred and ten inmates of the Isle of Pines prison received commutations of their sentences today as Cuba observed her 63d independence day.

Newspapers printed old photographs of Carlos Manuel De Cespedes, first president of Cuba, who led the uprising at Yara in October, 1868, which initiated the futile ten years' war for independence.

There was none of the popping of firecrackers, military parades and general festivity that, in the past, have distinguished the island's Fourth of July. The greater part of the people stayed quietly at home or stood in front of scoreboards where the last game of the world's series was depicted.

Berrien County (Michigan) to Slash Budget for 1932

Benton Harbor, Mich., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The Berrien county board of supervisors will meet Monday at the courthouse in St. Joseph. The finance committee is preparing a 1932 budget nearly $62,000 under the 1930 budget. No hope, however, is seen for a decrease in taxes. A general reduction of county employés salaries will be proposed.

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 10.—The world's baseball championship changed hands this afternoon. The St. Louis Cardinals, rallying brilliantly after their crash the day previous, whipped the haughty Athletics in a wild 4 to 2 seventh and deciding game before 20,805. The town quit on its favorites after the rout by which the Macks tied the series in the sixth battle.

Thus the American league's four year monopoly on the game's highest honors and the hope of the 68 year old Connie Mack to shatter tradition by winning three world titles in succession are at an end.

The American league, for the time being at least, is out and the world can worship the deeds of old Burleigh Grimes, George Watkins, and Andy High, who were the big guns in today's 1931 finale.

No Alibi for Macks.

There is nothing with which to alibi the end of the Mack reign, which began in 1929, over the Cubs, and continued over the Cardinals last fall. They simply passed out of the realm of topnotchers because they didn't hit consistently and because George Earnshaw, the prize member of Connie Mack's pitching stable, failed in the biggest assignment of his career.

During his seven innings Earnshaw was almost the same big right-hander whose sweeping delivery held the Cardinals to two hits in the fourth game last Tuesday. But among those seven innings of today there were two in which the National leaguers couldn't be checked.

Almost before Earnshaw got started the National leaguers had him on the ropes. A couple of hits by the first two batters to face him robbed him of his usual poise and confidence. Under the strain of those two hits he floundered around like a raw busher. Jimmy Foxx floundered with him, and before the inning closed the Cards were out in front by two runs.

Mack's Confidence Misplaced.

That wasn't all for Earnshaw. Conceding the big Swarthmore social lion to be his all important workman in the crisis at hand, Mack didn't even order anybody to warm up. If Earnshaw couldn't do it nobody could, and Mack probably was right. But in the third inning when Watkins with a mate on slashed a homer out of the park Earnshaw knew that Mack's confidence in him had been misplaced. But he kept on going brilliantly until welcome relief appeared in the eighth. The four hits that became runs were the only hits he allowed.

Grimes proved a man worthy of the spoils even though he was forced aside when the final out was within reach. Pitching in the first seventh game of a world series since Grover Cleveland Alexander staggered to the mound to save the title for the Cards against the Yanks in 1926, Grimes enacted a similar scene which dragged the hours and had the eventual result in the balance.

Pitches Himself Out.

Old 38 year old Burleigh, functioning like a cool, calm, collected worker instead of his usual snarling, barking self, was a will-o'-the-wisp for the Mack sluggers. At least he was that way through seven innings. During that time the American leaguers waved their bats frantically and helplessly in front of him and all the time moved steadily toward what seemed destined to be another shutout such as he hung on them last Monday.

But Burleigh pitched himself out in what apparently was a momentary mania for strikeouts. He rolled up five of these inside of three innings. The fifth of the game came to start the eighth and he promptly wilted. He lost control. He was plainly weary, but he stalled for time between each

BY EDWARD BURNS.

Lafayette, Ind., Oct. 10.—Purdue's vaunted veteran football team had to call on one of those green creatures, a sophomore, to beat Illinois, 7 to 0, before 20,000 here this afternoon. The Boilermaker greenhorn, who took the play completely away from his sage peers, is entitled Fred Hecker, a rip-snortin' left half back from Houston, Tex.

The Texas sophomore near the close of the first quarter replaced Ed Risk, star of last year's 25 to 0 Purdue victory over Illinois, and forthwith became the main works. In addition to becoming a running, kicking, and throwing menace, the boy from Texas seemed to pep up the entire Purdue outfit, which before his arrival had been noticeably sluggish, especially on the left side of the line.

Mr. Yunevich Fumbled.

While Hecker gained 57 yards in 20 attempts his main value was in the heaving of passes. Three long shots by the Texan early in the second period led to Purdue's lone touchdown and it was he who kicked the point after a touchdown—and a guy who can kick a point after touchdown for Purdue is a hero without any other consideration whatsoever.

Alex Yunevich, veteran Purdue full back, might have been a co-hero with Hecker, but for his propensity for fumbling. He fumbled three times in important spots, the most grievous occasion being when Purdue had the ball on Illinois' two yard line in the fourth quarter with four downs to carry it over. Alex, however, was a dashing performer most times, carrying the ball 93 yards in 18 attempts, including a 48 yard run through almost the entire Illinois team before Evans brought him down from behind.

Illini Fight Holds Purdue.

Illinois, perhaps, was as well satisfied with the outcome as any losing team could be. Though the statistics proved the Champaign lads completely outclassed in every department, their defensive courage was enough to give the seasoned Boilermakers many a severe shock. Privately, Purdue had expected to slay Illinois' sophs with utter ruthlessness. Before they had gone far they were delighted to get out with the verdict. And Illinois' fighting spirit rather than skill was the reason.

Berry and Cook, the two men Illinois had relied on most for their offensive, were stopped completely. Gil made only seven yards in nine attempts and when Dave's statistics

ST. LOUIS GOES WILD AS CARDS CAPTURE SERIES

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Pepper Martin's catch of Bishop's long fly touched off a riotous celebration that today hailed the Cardinals as world champions again after five years.

The tension suddenly let go with a bang. There were cheers which expressed both relief and joy. Whistles tooted shrilly and automobile horns blared. Racing motors backfired like machine guns and a paper snowstorm swirled lazily down from offices which still held late Saturday afternoon occupants.

Stores did a rushing business in noise making devices, and cowbells came down the streets on automobiles. Two fires occurred when paper streamers and bunting blazed.

Patrolmen and traffic officers had a hard night's work as the enthusiasm of the afternoon continued into the night, with its accompaniment of jammed streets, traffic snarls and noise.

70,000 WATCH GEORGIA ELEVEN BEAT YALE, 26-7

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 10.—It looks as though the Yale football team might have to go off the gold standard until the boys take stock of their new lessons and the situation improves. The young men of New Haven were unable to meet their obligations in the trading with Georgia this afternoon and lost, 26 to 7.

This was their first serious game of the season, the romp with Maine last week having been frankly a practice contest. Albie Booth, the diminutive, delicate head of the Yale team, tried hard to save his administration and stepped off one brave run of about 75 yards from a kickoff, through the entire Georgia team with the exception of Capt. Ausie Downs, the safety man, to fall in a long sliding sprawl 21 yards from the goal.

Georgia Intercepts Pass.

A complication of his own interference and Downs' intercepting run rather than a positive tackle interrupted Booth and the Yale side of the stands sent up a dark groan when he went skating over the sward on his face at the end of his hike. This happened in the second period, just after Tommy Taylor, Yale's southpaw passer, had fired the ball unerringly into the arms of Red Leathers, a Georgia lineman, who lit with his legs spinning and kept on going for Georgia's first touchdown.

As Leathers crossed the goal and Smith missed his drop kick for the extra point, Booth, who had figured only as a dramatic expectation up to that time, suddenly hopped out of Coach Mal Stevens' vest pocket and began prancing up and down the sidelines in a furious fidget, as several managers clawed the sweater over his bowed head. The big mass of Yales grouped on their own side of the bowl, let out a warm yelp of relief and glee like beleaguered civilians in China as the marines come ashore, and Albie scampered on to the lot to take charge of a badly jeopardized cause.

Albie Fools Southerners.

The kickoff spun down to him in a high, hump back flight, and he caught it close to the goal. The Rebels, looking very big in their white sweaters and very racy in their unquilted pants which lay close to their hides, no heavier than an extra layer of skin, swept down the park to grab him and suddenly Albie wasn't where they had aimed to go into action on him. He had tagged along with his interference for a few steps and then cut off to his right practically unattended while the Georgians were sorting themselves apart from the Yale decoys.

Albie passed midfield alone, then cut

Courageous Maroon Eleven Holds Michigan to 13-7 Score

BY CHARLES BARTLETT.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 10.—The University of Michigan football team defeated Chicago in the Michigan stadium here this afternoon, 13 to 7, but Amos Alonzo Stagg, who has been professor of football at Chicago these 40 years, can go back to the Midway feeling right proud of his boys.

Playing against a team favored for the conference championship and picked to lose by three, or at least two, touchdowns, the Maroons outdid themselves in fighting spirit, if not in football technique.

They were outweighed in the line, their backs could not compare in all around ability with the Wolverine ball carriers, but they outfought Michigan throughout the greater part of the game.

'Twas a Moral Victory.

They were rewarded in the third quarter with a touchdown, a moral victory in itself, for it was the first time in the four games played since 1920 that a Maroon had crossed a Michigan goal line.

Of course, Michigan, with a heavy conference schedule and its old enemy, Ohio State, to be played next, used considerable restrain, but it was forced to use all its power in the last half. Fielding H. Yost, maker of Michigan's point a minute teams, sat in the press box and watched another Heston add his name to the list of Wolverine heroes. He is Jack Heston, younger son of the illustrious Willie, who put on a remarkable kicking act, supplemented by some excellent ball carrying.

All Maroons Are Heroes.

It would be hard to name a Maroon here. You might as well take the lineup, include the substitutes, and admit it was the fightingest team you ever saw. There was Capt. Sam Horwitz, aided by Bert Cassells, Keith Parsons, and Jack Spearing, who made Michigan change its mind early in the game about the advisability of a line smashing attack.

And when the Wolverines did open up, Bernie Wein and Pompeo Toigo were right there to cut the pass receivers down, not to mention Pete Zimmer, the former La Grange High school star, who scored the Maroon touchdown on a pass from Bob Wallace. They took a licking, but they made Michigan realize it was in a football game long before it ended.

Michigan Line Shows Power.

The Michigan line distinguished itself throughout. Stanley Fay, who played prep football with Jack Heston, was another of the several Michigan sophomore backs to come in for attention. Though they were held to two touchdowns and scored on once by an admittedly inferior eleven, the Wolverines demonstrated that the experts made no mistake in linking them with Purdue and Northwestern as title favorites in the Big Ten.

Michigan scored both of its touchdowns in the second period. Newman's passing was responsible for both. He tossed a long one to Heston and Fay on the next play circled end for a touchdown. Capt. Roy Hudson scored the second on a pass from Newman, also going around end.

Maroons Get Three First Downs.

The Maroons could make only three first downs, but they held the Wolverines to seven. From scrimmage Michigan outgained Chicago, 174 yards to

IRISH LEAD IN FIRST DOWNS—ALSO FUMBLES

BY WILFRID SMITH.

Notre Dame and Northwestern were overwhelmed yesterday at Soldiers' field by the rain and mud. Neither eleven could throw this added starter for a loss. Worse weather conditions hardly can be imagined. If any football game ever should have been postponed yesterday's battle was the one.

It was fortunate that neither team scored by advantage gained from the other's frequent errors. Thus each finished with honors even.

Sixty-five thousand, representing nearly a quarter million dollars in admissions, sat through the pouring rain. They did not see a football game for it was impossible to play football. They might just as well have torn up their tickets and gone home.

Make 19 Fumbles.

Two score boys ran up and down the field, drenched to the skin and covered with mud. The pleasures of the game were missing. It was the players' task to entertain and they did their best. Undoubtedly they went to their hot showers after the game relieved that the ordeal was over.

Notre Dame won the fumbling contest, 10 fumbles to 9 for Northwestern. Notre Dame recovered only four of its own fumbles. Northwestern recovered five of its fumbles. Out of the 19 fumbles by both teams, Northwestern got the ball 11 times to Notre Dame's eight.

The fumble table reads like this:

NORTHWESTERN.

Player.	Fumbles.	Recoveries.	Opponents' recoveries.
Rentner	4	2	Yarr, Greeney
Olson	2	1	Murphy
Moore	1	0	Krause
Potter	2	2	None

NOTRE DAME.

Player.	Fumbles.	Recoveries.	Opponents' recoveries.
Schwartz	3	1	Marvil, Riley
Branchcau	1	0	Riley
Banas	2	1	Manske
Sheckatski	1	0	Manske
Kohrs	1	1	None
Leahy	2	1	Evans

The punting in yesterday's game was spectacular. Oliver Olson, for Northwestern, and Marchy Schwartz, for Notre Dame, repeatedly got away remarkable kicks with a ball that was heavy from mud and water.

Kick Travels 72 Yards.

Schwartz last year was noted as a passer and runner. Yesterday he proved his greatness as a kicker. One of his punts in the second quarter traveled 72 yards from the line of scrimmage.

Only one punt was blocked. One of Olson's kicks in the fourth quarter was blocked by Nordy Hoffman and recovered by Ed Krause of Notre Dame. Northwestern lost 20 yards

RAIN DRENCHES 65,000, CAUSES MANY FUMBLES

Game Is Tossup on Slippery Field.

BY HARVEY WOODRUFF.

Northwestern and Notre Dame football elevens floundered and skidded around the slippery turf of Soldiers' field yesterday to a scoreless tie. Any result other than a tie under the dismal weather conditions prevailing and the equal efforts expended by two game elevens would have been an injustice.

Neutrals and even partisans among the 65,000 spectators who braved drizzle and downpour in the name of charity and in honor of what has become a great rivalry concurred in this expression. Victory meant so much to each eleven at the start of their seasons and defeat meant even so much more to future prospects that it would have been tragedy from a purely sporting viewpoint for one of the many breaks which punctuated the affair to have determined the issue.

Few Leave Before It's Over.

Those 65,000 spectators sat through intermittent downpours and drizzles for two and one-half hours. Few of them left the tense scene before the finish. Picture any other class of sport followers enduring such discomforts for a game which from a technical view could not possibly be good football, but which carried such import to each and every individual participating.

Before the usual preliminaries, this huge crowd was slow in finding its seats, preferring to huddle under the stands. But when the white-jerseyed Wildcats and blue sweatered Irish trotted out for preliminary practice, the venturesome came forth from their retreats.

[illegible] others followed as Northwestern's band paraded the field. Then the raincoated, mantilla, oil-cloth crowd stood and took it for two and one-half hours. Papers spread to cover the wet seats were saturated in a few seconds. Hats and overcoats became watersoaked. Yet the football mad host stayed on lest it miss a late break which might decide the game.

Tribute to Rockne.

Knowing that a tribute to Knute Rockne, whose tragic death since the last football season left its impress of sorrow among Notre Dame alumni, was on the program, the South Bend band asked to be excused from the opening ceremonies. The Purple musicians, more than 100 in number, marched down the gridiron, already watersoaked within five minutes after its tarpaulin had been removed. The rain at this stage was almost a deluge. Forming in front of the Notre Dame east stands, the Northwestern band spelled "Hello" in human letters. Then "Notre," then "Dame."

Following was "The Star Spangled Banner." Two buglers played taps and the letters of Rockne's name were formed as spectators bared their heads to the rain in hushed respect.

Break 20 Victory String.

Of this game, which broke a Notre Dame sequence of twenty straight victories and which gave Northwestern its first tie against the Irish since 1903, one may say much concerning its football, or one may say little. If much, that much must be of dogged spirit which accepted handicaps and then overcame them, which refused to let mistakes spell ruin, and which in turn thwarted advantages obtained by rivals. That dogged spirit prevailed in both elevens. If little be said, it would be because opportunity for the kind of football for which these young men had been preparing for nearly a month was not possible.

There were "ifs" for either side which might have resulted in touchdowns. There were fumbles when touchdowns seemed imminent, yet one cannot censure players for fumbles when the oval was only a greasy bit of leather.

Two names, one from each eleven, stand out in the watersoaked proceedings. One was Ollie Olson, the blond topped Northwestern sophomore who took the crippled Reb Russell's place at Purple full back. The other was Marchy Schwartz, Notre Dame's veteran left half back, whose fleetness downed the Purple a year ago and later the Army.

Share Punting Honors.

This time, however, it was not Schwartz's fleetness nor Olson's line plunges which cast them for great rôles. It was their punting, the kicks of a wet slippery ball for distances which would have been regarded magnificent under normal conditions. Without Olson, Notre Dame would have had a marked advantage. Without Schwartz, the margin would have been with Northwestern.

That Olson and Schwartz occupied preëminent rôles was due to the game. It was that kind of a game. Neither team on the slippery surface could maintain a consistent attack. So strategy dictated punts and then more punts in the hope for a break.

But there were twenty other young chaps besides this pair in the fray at all times. There was Northwestern's fumble on the opening kickoff and Yarr's recovery. Then Rentner, who had fumbled, knocked down the pass which might have given Notre Dame an early touchdown and probably the game.

In the second period there were two occasions when Northwestern had the

BY CHARLES NEVADA.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Madison, Wis., Oct. 10.—Alabama Polytechnic institute today battled a heavier University of Wisconsin eleven to a 7 to 7 tie.

The Badgers were the first to score, breaking through on the first play of the third quarter. Joe Linfor, who had replaced Russ Rebholz, took Hitchcock's kickoff on his five yard line and behind a phalanx of Badgers raced 95 yards for a touchdown. Kabat added the seventh point by placement.

Auburn put over its seven points in the same quarter, using a forward pass. After coming into possession of the ball, Willis Phipps shot a 21 yard pass to Jimmy Hitchcock, which gave the Alabamans a first down on the Wisconsin 16 yard line. Another throw, Phipps to Grant, placed the invaders six yards short of the objective. Phipps got four on a smash at tackle. Hitchcock carried the ball over on a dash around end and contributed the tying point when his placement went straight between the goal posts.

Teams Miss Chances.

What appeared to be other chances to score for both teams fell short because of fumbles. The Badgers tried forward passes but Vanderbilt's defense either intercepted or knocked them down.

Alabama Polytechnic had a chance to score in the opening quarter. Hitchcock, the southern full back, placed them in position when he recovered Russ Rebholz' fumble on Wisconsin's 32 yard line. A series of line plunges and a 20 yard pass, Phipps to Hitchcock, put Alabama five yards short of the goal. There the Badgers held and when a fourth down pass fell incomplete into the end zone the opportunity faded.

Badger Pass Defense Weak.

The weakness of the Badgers' defense against passes was apparent throughout the game. All but two of the invaders' six first downs came as a result of aerials. Wisconsin's eight first downs came mostly because of plunges. The Badgers tried 15 passes, to have 11 of them fall incomplete.

On straight play the Badgers gained 144 yards through the line compared to [illegible] for Auburn.

Hoover Will Open Olympic Games in 1932

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—President Hoover today accepted the invitation of the governor of California and others to open the tenth Olympic games in Los Angeles next July 30.

The acceptance makes it certain that Mr. Hoover will go west during the early days of the 1932 presidential campaign. With the trip coming so shortly after the national conventions and presuming that Mr. Hoover is renominated, it is thought that the President will take a rest in California and then make a series of political addresses in far western and midwestern cities on his way back to Washington.

Mayer Carries Invitation.

The invitation was extended by Louis B. Mayer of the motion picture industry, as representative of Gov. James Rolph Jr. The ceremony took place on the south lawn of the White House. Mr. Mayer explained that he spoke for Gov. Rolph, the mayor of Los Angeles, the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county, and William M. Garland, chairman of the games committee. It was evident that he did not expect anything more than the answer that the invitation would be taken under advisement.

"I Accept," Says President.

But Mr. Hoover replied:

"I wish you would inform the governor of California that I accept his invitation."

Mr. Mayer was elated and declared: "That will be the greatest news the people of California have had in many years."

Here's Story of N. U.-Notre Dame Battle—Play by Play and Splash by Splash

BY ARCH WARD.

Following is the play by play story of Northwestern's 0 to 0 football battle with Notre Dame yesterday at Soldiers' field:

FIRST QUARTER.

Northwestern won the toss and defended the south goal. Notre Dame kicked off to Rentner, who fumbled on the 29 yard line. Yarr recovered for Notre Dame. Sheeketski went through left tackle for two yards. Schwartz picked up four before he was tackled by Meenan. Schwartz made only a yard at center. Notre Dame was penalized five yards. On the fourth down, a forward pass, Schwartz to Kosky, was knocked down by Rentner.

Northwestern took the ball on the 26 yard line. Olson fumbled and recovered for no gain. Olson was dumped by Harriss trying to get through the left side of the Notre Dame line. The play was called back and Northwestern was penalized five yards for back field in motion. Rentner was stopped at the line of scrimmage. Olson punted to Murphy on Notre Dame's 25 yard line. Murphy stepped out of bounds. Schwartz cut through right tackle for eight yards. He was tackled by Meenan. Schwartz was forced out of bounds after a 12 yard gain.

Marvil Recovers Schwartz's Fumble.

Banas plunged off right tackle for nine yards, carrying two tacklers with him. Schwartz fumbled and Marvil recovered for N. U. on Notre Dame's 45 yard line.

Olson made four yards through the line and then kicked out of bounds on Notre Dame's 15 yard line.

The rain was falling hard and the players found it difficult to handle the ball. Schwartz fumbled before he could punt and was tackled by Weldin for a seven yard loss. Schwartz kicked to the center of the field.

Olson ran into a wall at right tackle. Meenan got around right end for three yards. Olson punted over the Notre Dame goal line.

Banas was brought down by Meenan after a yard gain. Schwartz punted to Rentner in midfield and the Northwestern star raced back 12 yards before he was forced out of bounds on the west side of the field. Northwestern took time out.

Banas Intercepts Pass.

Olson ripped through right guard for five yards. He repeated for two. Olson's pass was intercepted by Banas on Notre Dame's 30 yard line. Schwartz failed to gain at center and Sheeketski lost a yard at left end. Schwartz kicked to the center of the field. Rentner fumbled on the catch, but recovered.

Mahony broke through to throw Olson for a five yard loss. Manski replaced Eylar at Northwestern's left end. Pierce went in for Hoffman at Notre Dame's right guard. Olson punted out of bounds on Notre Dame's five yard line as the quarter ended. Score: Notre Dame, 0; Northwestern, 0.

SECOND QUARTER.

Schwartz punted to Rentner in midfield and two Notre Dame tacklers caught him before he could move. The play was called back and Notre Dame was given the ball on its 25 yard line, where Northwestern was charged with clipping. Sheeketski lost two yards. Schwartz picked up three before tackled by Manske. Northwestern was penalized five yards for offside. Sheeketski fumbled on his 25 yard line and Manske recovered for Northwestern.

Rentner was tackled by Sheeketski after an eight yard gain. Dilley was substituted for Engebretsen at Northwestern left guard. Olson made it first down on the 12 yard line. Rentner made three off tackle and Olson got two more. Meenan was tossed by Kosky after a two yard advance. It was fourth down and three yards to go. Olson was stopped a foot short of first down and Notre Dame took the ball on its four yard line.

Brancheau replaced Sheeketski in the Notre Dame back field. Schwartz got away a beautiful punt from behind his goal line to Notre Dame's 40 yard line.

Kozac went in for Kurth and Krause for Culver at the tackles for Notre Dame. The rain was coming down in torrents.

Rentner swept around his left end for four yards. Potter fumbled and recovered without loss. Olson's punt barely cleared the line of scrimmage, but bounded over the Notre Dame goal for a touchback.

Notre Dame took the ball on its 20 yard line. Brancheau dropped the ball around left end and Riley of Northwestern recovered on Notre Dame's 21 yard line.

Olson made two and then punted to Notre Dame's 40 yard line. Koken twisted through right tackle for three yards. Melinkovich broke away for 19 yards and had a clear field ahead when Potter caught him.

Weldin and Potter threw Koken for a five yard loss as the sun peeped through the clouds for the first time during the game. Koken failed to gain, but on the next play, a reverse to the weak side of the line, Melinkovich made 10 yards.

Koken lost two and a lateral pass, Koken to Melinkovich, brought only three yards. Koken's pass to Host was grounded by Rentner and Northwestern took the ball on its 29 yard line.

Rentner Drops Ball.

Northwestern lost five yards for offside. Rentner ran out of bounds without gain. Olson punted to Notre Dame's 38 yard line. Notre Dame on the first play was penalized 15 yards for holding. Jaskwhich punted to Rentner, who dropped the ball after he was tackled. Greeney recovered for Notre Dame on Northwestern's 38 yard line.

Northwestern's secondary defense came up to stop Melinkovich at right end. Koken stepped around right end for four yards. A lateral pass, Koken to Melinkovich, was completed without gain. Jaskwhich punted out of bounds on Northwestern's 18 yard line.

Host tackled Olson before he could reach the line of scrimmage. Olson's punt went almost straight up and the Irish recovered the ball on Northwestern's 25 yard line.

Notre Dame was penalized 15 yards for illegal use of the hands. Cronin got those 15 yards back with a sprint around left end. Leahy went in for Melinkovich. Cronin failed to gain. Koken's pass to Leahy was incomplete and Notre Dame drew another 15 yard penalty for holding.

Cronin's pass to Koken was knocked down by Potter. Jaskwhich got away a bad punt that went out of bounds on Northwestern's 40 yard line.

Rentner Picks Up Nine.

Rentner raced across the field and got around Notre Dame's right end for nine yards. Olson made it first down on a plunge through center. Rentner fumbled, but retrieved the ball without damage. Olson was smothered trying to get through left guard. Olson punted to Notre Dame's 10-yard line where Riley downed the ball. Leahy fumbled the pass from center, but recovered. Schwartz replaced Koken. Leahy ran out of bounds on the next play. Schwartz punted from eight yards back of the goal line to Rentner, who returned 10 yards to Notre Dame's 40-yard stripe.

Olson, on a reverse play, made five yards. Northwestern was penalized five yards for offside. Rentner's pass was broken up by the Notre Dame secondary and Olson punted. The ball stopped rolling on Notre Dame's five-yard line.

Schwartz kicked on the first down from behind his goal to Northwestern's 40-yard line as the quarter ended. Score: Notre Dame, 0; Northwestern, 0.

FOURTH QUARTER.

Olson fumbled the ball and Murphy recovered for Notre Dame on the 50 yard line.

Schwartz followed fine interference for six yards around right end. Leahy was stopped on a reverse to the weak side of the line. Schwartz, faking a thrust at center, broke through right tackle for 16 yards. McDonald replaced Weldin for Northwestern. Schwartz found a stone wall in his path at center. Sheeketski slipped through the right side of the Purple line for ten yards. It was first down on Northwestern's 20 yard mark.

Sheeketski failed to gain at center. He got two in another attempt at the same spot. Leahy fumbled on the next play and Northwestern recovered on its 25 yard line. Olson punted to Murphy, who was downed on his 25 yard line.

Schwartz was pushed back at the line of scrimmage. On the second down he punted to Rentner, who came back five yards to his 40 yard line. Olson kicked immediately, the ball bounding out of the field on Notre Dame's 5 yard line.

Schwartz dropped back of his goal to punt to Rentner on Notre Dame's 37 yard stripe.

Krause sifted through to tackle Rentner for a four yard loss. Olson failed to gain. Rentner's pass was intercepted by Yarr on Notre Dame's 30 yard line. Schwartz punted to Northwestern's 33 yard line.

Olson's punt was blocked by Hoffman and Krause recovered for Notre Dame on Northwestern's 20 yard line. Sheeketski was thrown for a six yard loss trying to get around his left end. Schwartz picked up a yard at tackle. Schwartz's pass was wild. Murphy dropped Schwartz's pass with a clear field to the goal. Northwestern took the ball on its 30 yard line.

ball inside Notre Dame's 10 yard line as the indirect result of fumbles. Then Notre Dame's defense rose to its greatest heights as it did a year ago. By inches the Purple lost a first down at the Irish 4 yard line. On that play ten of the eleven Notre Dame players were in the pile with the carrier, so desperate was the defense. On the other occasion Schwartz knocked down a pass in the end zone on fourth down. Twice in this period big Jack Riley broke through to snare vagrant footballs which had escaped from his rivals' wet fingers.

Looking further for Northwestern's players who did things which may escape mention in the general mêlée, there was George Potter, sophomore quarter back. It was Potter who brought down Melinkovich early in the second half when the latter seemed on his way to a touchdown after that slice through his own left tackle which Schwartz is accustomed to exemplify. At other times it was Fencl, or Manske, or Meenan.

Worry N. U. Rooters.

On the other side of the picture were Notre Dame stars just as luminous. In the fourth quarter, when it was conceded a touchdown meant the ball game, Capt. Yarr again intercepted a pass when Northwestern was pressing an attack at the Irish 25 yard line. Ed Krause had forced that pass when he put the Purple in a hole by tackling Rentner for a loss. And a few seconds later it was Hoffman who blocked Olson's punt and Krause recovered the ball at Northwestern's 19 yard line in the closing minutes of the game, causing Northwestern's bedraggled rooters to groan as they recalled other Notre Dame frays lost in the last few minutes of play.

Here Northwestern's forwards, with limited replacements and wearied from a stand against two complete sets of Notre Dame linemen, made their heroic stand. Sheeketski, on the first play thereafter, was thrown for a loss of six yards with Manske and Meenan beneath him. Schwartz gained only two yards and two passes, attempted in desperation to turn the tide, were grounded. Northwestern took the ball on downs. An exchange of punts and the game was over with the ball in Notre Dame's possession on its own 27 yard line.

Comparisons Are Difficult.

Comparisons under the conditions are difficult. Northwestern's supposedly inferior line stood well and practically held its own against the veteran Notre Dame forwards. Its secondary defense gave adequate support to the line. What either might have done on a dry field cannot be told.

Northwestern's supposedly faster back field was stopped by the opposing line, which held when necessary. Again, what might have happened on a dry field cannot be told.

This writer waives all criticism of field generalship and fumbles. There was glory enough for all. As played the game ended as it should have ended, without a touchdown for either eleven.

Texas Aggies Run Wild Over Iowa, 29 to 0

Dallas, Tex., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Texas A. and M. swamped the University of Iowa eleven, 29 to 0, here this afternoon, before 7,000.

The Aggies had the ball most of the time, threatening to score several times in addition to their long touchdown marches. On each of the Aggies' scoring drives the ball came into their possession near the 50 yard line.

Heat Hampers Hawkeyes.

The Iowans, who apparently were not at their best because of the intense heat, threatened only once. This threat came in the closing minutes of the first half, after Iowa had resorted to a passing attack. It carried the ball to the Aggies' 30 yard line, where it was held for downs.

A constant stream of Iowa substitutes poured on the field, but the Texas sun wilted them, apparently, even on the bench.

Aston Leads Attack.

Aston, a hard driving full back, led the scoring for the Aggies with two touchdowns. The others were made by Graves and Williams.

The Aggies scored their first touchdown after ten minutes of play. Lineup:

Franklin College Beats Rose Poly, 18-0

Franklin, Ind., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Unable to cope with the sweeping end runs and line smashes of the Franklin college back field men, Rose Poly was defeated this afternoon, 18 to 0. There was no scoring in the first half, but Franklin showed marked superiority in ground gaining. Early in the third period Surface, Franklin full back, broke loose for a 21 yard run that carried him across the goal line. Steady marches down the field ended in two more touchdowns.

Olson	15	*553	35
Moore	1	30	30
NOTRE DAME.
Schwartz	11	504	46
Jaskwhich	3	59	20

*Lost 20 yards on blocked kick.

The distance of all kicks is figured from the line of scrimmage. Olson had one kick that traveled only 6 yards. Jaskwhich of Notre Dame also kicked for only 10 yards on one occasion. Olson's longest kick was 54 yards in the fourth quarter. On several plays he did not put full power into the ball because Northwestern was deep in Notre Dame's territory.

Longest Return, 15 Yards.

Northwestern attempted to return seven Notre Dame punts. The longest return by Rentner was 15 yards. The total return was 53 yards. Notre Dame tried to return four kicks and gained 12 yards.

Notre Dame made six first downs while Northwestern made three first downs. All were accomplished by running except one for Notre Dame on a penalty.

Neither team completed a forward pass. Notre Dame tried one in the first quarter, two in the third, and two in the fourth periods.

Northwestern attempted six forward passes. Three were intercepted, two by Banas and one by Yarr. On one interception Banas fumbled the ball and Manske recovered for Northwestern.

Recalls 1927 Game.

This play recalls the decision in the Southern California-Notre Dame game at Soldiers' field in 1927. Riley intercepted a Trojan pass in that game, ran several steps and dropped the ball and it was recovered by Notre Dame behind its own goal line for what many thought was a safety. The ruling in that instance was Riley did not have control and possession of the ball and the play was a touchback.

Yesterday when Banas intercepted a pass, he ran several steps, and without being tackled, he dropped the ball. The ruling was that Banas had control and possession and that he fumbled the ball.

Player—	Attempts.	Gains.	Losses.
NORTHWESTERN.
Olson	19	45	7
Rentner	11	30	10
Moore	6	13	0
Meenan	3	7	0
Potter	2	6	1
NOTRE DAME.
Schwartz	12	58	0
Sheeketski	8	18	9
Koken	6	12	13
Banas	2	10	0
Cronin	1	14	0
Melinkovich	7	29	3
Leahy	5	0	14

The table on penalties shows that Notre Dame lost 55 yards. Illegal use of the hands cost three penalties of 15 yards each. One offside penalty of five yards and one penalty of five yards for a second incompleted forward pass in the same series of downs accounts for the total.

Lose Yards for Clipping.

Northwestern lost 40 yards. The Wildcats were offside four times. Northwestern also lost 20 yards when Manske was guilty of clipping after Schwartz had punted from behind his goal line in the second quarter. Clipping, which is throwing the body at an opponent at or below the knees from the rear is prohibited except in the line of scrimmage. Notre Dame was given possession of the ball at the point of the clipping, and a first down.

Another play on which the ruling was not understood by the crowd was Olson's fumble in the fourth quarter. Olson plunged through the Notre Dame line for seven yards, but fumbled when he was tackled. Murphy, the Irish quarter back, picked up the ball and returned it 20 yards. The ball was called back.

The defensive team cannot run with a fumbled ball which strikes the ground. Had Murphy caught Olson's fumble before it struck the ground the run would have been permitted. The offensive team, however, could have recovered the ball and run with it.

Notre Dame's most effective running play was a reverse play from Koken, the left half back, who substituted for Schwartz, to Melinkovich, the full back. Notre Dame shifted to the right and the ball was passed to Koken. He pivoted in his tracks and gave the ball to Melinkovich, who went over Northwestern's right tackle. On two such plays in the third quarter Melinkovich gained 19 yards and 10 yards, respectively.

Northwestern's most effective play was Olson's straight line smashes. Notre Dame stopped Olson, however, on fourth down 4 yards from the goal line in the second quarter when Northwestern made its greatest bid for victory. On the last plunge ten Notre Dame men were in front of the ball.

Notre Dame attempted two lateral passes and completed both, but lost 1 yard on each attempt because of an alert Northwestern secondary defense. It almost was foolhardy to throw lateral passes under such conditions.

Just Couldn't Throw Ball.

The forward pass, of course, was a complete loss for the same reasons. It was impossible to throw the ball. Generally the passer tossed it like a weight man puts the shot.

The scoreless tie represents a fair decision under the circumstances.

Early in the game Northwestern attempted to use a new shift which it had prepared for Notre Dame. The officials' called both teams offside on two occasions, and Northwestern, probably because of the mud, did not use the play afterwards.

NOTRE DAME HAS NO ALIBIS AFTER GAME WITH N. U.

Both Teams Handicapped, Says Anderson.

Notre Dame was philosophical about its tie yesterday at the hands of Northwestern. Feeling, perhaps, that his men might have won on a dry field, Coach Anderson said only the following:

"There were two great teams in the game. Weather conditions simply made it impossible to get started. On a dry field you would have seen two great scoring machines in action, but the footing was so bad that neither Northwestern nor Notre Dame players could get under way."

Players Retain Morale.

The Irish dressing room after the game was quiet, maybe a bit gloomy, but Notre Dame's morale was not shattered. As the players dragged off their mud caked uniforms Father Charles L. O'Donnell, C. S. C., president of the university; Jesse Harper, director of athletics, and Coach Anderson passed among them, congratulating them on their excellent performance.

Soon some one started to whistle in the showers. Others, too tired from their gruelling battle to make any demonstration, smiled or merely went about the job of removing the mud.

Terrible Day, Says Harper.

Jesse Harper said: "It was a terrible day to play. It was impossible for any team to play good ball. Both teams, though, were a credit to their schools."

Marchy Schwartz, left half, whose punting kept Notre Dame in the game, had only praise for his opponents. "I want to say something nice about them," he said, "because they are a great crowd of men, fine sports, and they played a great game of football."

"I'm only sorry my eligibility is up this year," said Capt. Tommy Yarr. "Northwestern played wonderful ball from the first to the last and I have never seen its sportsmanship surpassed. I'm only sorry I can't play against it again."

Metzger Praises Both.

Bert Metzger, all-American guard for Notre Dame last year, said: "There wasn't any game. It's impossible to play football under those conditions. Both teams, though, did remarkably well."

At the half, Anderson said little. He had warned the quarter backs at the beginning of the game to kick on first down when deep in their own territory and not to attempt to handle Northwestern punts. At the half, he merely repeated this advice and told his men to play for a break.

HANLEY BEMOANS RAIN

"Wish we had met them on a dry field." Thus did players and coaches of Northwestern's football team express themselves in the dressing room at Soldiers' field last night.

As the players went about grubbing mud out of their ears they indicated by voice and action that the task at hand had been accomplished satisfactorily, conditions being what they were. The Wildcats were in no celebrating mood but neither were they downhearted over the outcome, every one seeming to feel that Notre Dame would have been defeated had the game been played on a dry field.

Hanley Bemoans Mud.

Coach Dick Hanley had only praise for his players as he walked among them offering words of encouragement.

"I was especially pleased with the way the boys conducted themselves after that kick was blocked and recovered in the last quarter," he said.

"The team showed its fighting qualities from that point on, taking the ball from Notre Dame on downs. Yes, of course, I wish we had met on a dry field. We were better suited for that type of game. It was a stubbornly fought game and the players of both teams deserve lots of credit for their performance under such terrible conditions."

Purple Emerge Unhurt.

The kicking duel between Olson and Schwartz featured the game in Hanley's opinion. The Wildcat mentor was especially pleased with the conduct of his sophomore ace in his first major contest.

Northwestern's players emerged from the conflict in good shape. Dick Fencl, who suffered a cramp in his right leg in the third quarter, was the lone casualty, and he will be ready to resume practice Monday.

Kansas Aggies Fumble, but Beat Missouri

Columbia, Mo., Oct. 10.—(AP)—The Kansas Aggies defeated Missouri, 20 to 7, in their Big Six conference football season opener here today. The Aggies outplayed the Tigers throughout and but for numerous fumbles might have rolled up a more decisive count.

PURDUE PROVES AN EXPERIENCED ELEVEN WILL BEAT A TEAM OF GREEN SOPHOMORES AS THE ILLINI FALL, 7 TO 0, AT ROSS-ADE STADIUM, LAFAYETTE. Gil Berry, one of the few tried players in the Illinois lineup, faces the danger of losing the ball on a fumble as he attempts a charge through the Boilermaker lines. Paul Moss, Purdue end, leaping at Berry and the football, seems to be more intent on the latter. It was the opening Big Ten game for both schools.

SUNTICA, SISTER OF SUN BEAU, IS VICTOR BY NOSE

Gets Up in Mud to Beat Princess Camelia.

BY FRENCH LANE.

Suntica, a little sister of famous old Sun Beau, carried the green, brown and orange jacket of Willis Sharpe Kilmer to a brilliant victory in the $5,000 added Autumn Junior handicap before 10,000 at Hawthorne yesterday.

Rallying in the stretch much like old Sun Beau, she got up in the mud in the last stride to beat Princess Camelia from Joe Leiter's stable by the narrowest of nose margins. Crystal Prince, another Chicago colt, came from far back and snatched third money right at the finish line.

Camp Douglas Leads.

The race, the last stake event of the Chicago season, brought together all the best 2 year olds left in this racing section. And few stake races have been run here this season that brought a more thrilling climax.

In the early stages Camp Douglas from Ald. John Coughlin's stable stepped out into a long lead. The longshot players had backed him and they were cheering like so many madmen. When he wheeled around the lower bend still holding a big advantage, the cheers grew in volume.

Maiben Makes Move.

But the stretch run was too much for Camp Douglas. Princess Camelia, racing extremely wide, was moving toward the front and midway in the stretch she had poked her nose in front. But she was going so wide it gave Jockey Maiben on Suntica a chance to slip up next the rail. A sixteenth out he had the Kilmer filly on even terms with Princess Camelia.

Then these two proud young thoroughbreds staged a ding dong finish. They were only inches apart until the last stride, then Suntica took one very long jump and got the decision. It was a fine riding exhibition on the part of the veteran Maiben. It was a different kind of a ride than he usually makes. Maiben has long been accused of being afraid to ride on the rail and a great majority of his victories have been rolled up when he came along on the outside, losing ground as he made the move.

Suntica ran the six and one-half furlongs over a very sloppy track in 1:21 2-5. She had many backers and paid $7.44 to win, $3.60 to place, and $2.88 to show. Princess Camelia paid $3.72 to place and $2.80 to show. Crystal Prince was at $3.38 to show.

Lewis Wins Fame.

Sixteen year old Melvin Lewis, from Montrose, Colo., came into fame during the afternoon when he rode four horses to victory. It was the first time this year a jockey has scored four triumphs in Chicago on the same afternoon.

Lewis, the youngest jockey in the Hawthorne colony, began his brilliant work in the second race and won on the heavily backed favorite, Captain's Daughter. He came back in the third race with Ald. Coughlin's Very Well at $17.14. He scored again in the fourth race on Flag Bearer, keeping him in front all the way. This was another outsider and paid $14.06.

In the sixth race Lewis climbed up on Fort Dearborn and got him home handily ahead of Charles Clarke and Inheritor. Fort Dearborn paid $7.02. Folks who backed Lewis' mounts reaped a golden harvest.

Race Track Plot Charged to Gambler

New York, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Jimmy Meehan, a gambler who was associated with Arnold Rothstein in a gambling house and played in the game at which Rothstein lost $300,000 shortly before he was shot, was arrested today in Mineola on a warrant that charged him with taking part in a race track gambling conspiracy.

The charges involved the doping of horses in the stables of Victor Emmanuel and Joseph E. Widener, two of America's leading turfmen.

Meehan and his associates are accused of giving narcotics to important horses. His arrest came after two Negroes confessed to the police that Meehan had employed them to "slow" such track favorites as Sun Mission, Curate, Morstone and The Milkman. These are all good horses. It is charged that the "slowing" was attempted by injections of digitalis.

Among the other horses named by the Negroes as having been slowed down at various times by drugs or sponges were: J. A. Wagner's Mr. Sponge, Try and Again, and Curate; Mr. Emmanuel's The Beasel and Tony Princess, and Squeaky, from the Clancy stables.

Both Negroes were sentenced to six months in Nassau county jail for disorderly conduct.

KNOX SCORES ON PASS TO DEFEAT NORMAL, 7 TO 0

Galesburg, Ill., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Scoring in the first two minutes of play, Knox defeated Normal of Bloomington, 7 to 0, here today. A 25 yard penalty against Normal for interference on a pass, a successful toss from Vasen to Burtle and the latter's 25 yard run accounted for the touchdown. Center place kicked for the extra point. Lineup:

Substitutions: Knox—Lewis for Bergstrom, Rasmussen for Burtle, Brown for Vasen, Farnsworth for Center, Spiegler for Wellman, Reid for Ashbaugh, Eaton for Kemp. Normal—Marquardt for Adams, Kuhfuss for Copeland, Graves for Harding, Dennise for Striegel, Lewis for Ruebush.

SUN BEAU'S LITTLE SISTER CAN RUN, TOO

Burning Blaze Wins $10,000 Laurel Purse

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Once again a western 2 year old proved supreme on the eastern turf as Burning Blaze, the Nash brothers colt, won the six furlong $10,000 Richard Johnson stakes at Laurel today.

The triumph, achieved over many of the east's best and George Wingfield's Hygro from the western owned Nevada Stock farm, was the second important stake victory for Burning Blaze since he made his eastern debut at Havre de Grace. Worth $13,225 to his Chicago owners, the score sent Burning Blaze's total earnings to $82,725, the majority of which was picked up in the Post and Paddock stakes at Arlington Park, the Eastern Shore at Havre de Grace, and today's race.

Carries 130 Pounds.

Although C. V. Whitney's Top Flight, generally rated as the best of the 2 year old division, was not in the field, the triumph was probably the outstanding juvenile performance of the year.

Toting the crushing impost of 130 pounds and high weight of the party of 15, Burning Blaze was forced to circle his field, after being outpaced for the first three furlongs, and stage a sensational drive to defeat Mrs. Louis M. Kaufmann's Tick On, winner of the Hopeful, by one and one-half lengths. Third went to Pair By Pair, owned by Mrs. John D. Hertz of Chicago, while Hygro, the 3 to 2 favorite, just managed to stall off E. R. Bradley's Burgoo King for fourth money. Burning Blaze ran the distance in 1:12 4-5.

Hygro Slides Back.

S. W. Labrot's Mexico and Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Rabbit Skin set the early pace, but were closely followed by Hygro, which had finished a close second to Burning Blaze in the Eastern Shore. Taking advantage of the shift in weights, Hygro stuck his nose out in front at the top of the stretch, but his advantage was only short lived as Willie Garner charged forward on Burning Blaze. Tick On and Pair By Pair also closed fast to pass the early leaders.

SOCCER CLUBS SCHEDULE THREE GAMES TODAY

Round No. 2 of the National league soccer games will be staged today, with three games scheduled for the west side.

The Maccabee All Stars and Olympias, two of the winning teams last week, meet at Kuppenheimer stadium, 19th street and Keeler avenue, Sparta and the Carpenters play at Sparta field, 21st street and Kostner avenue, and the Bricklayers battle the Jugo-Slavs at Olympia park, 19th street and 47th avenue.

The Maccabees and the Olympias have signed several new players and they all showed up well last week.

The Brickies have signed McGarry, a half back from the Ravenswood club, and the Jugo-Slavs will use Altuvich, South American star, at center. Pete Quinn, an old Brickie player, is also with the Slavs.

Meridian, Miss., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—Alabama university swamped the Mississippi Aggies today to win its second Southern conference game of the season. The score was 53 to 0.

Of the eight touchdowns scored almost at will by Alabama, Chappel and Smith made two each. Long, Hughes, Walker, and Holley accounted for the others. Five tries for extra point were successful.

Coach Frank Thomas, who succeeded Wallace Wade as head coach at Alabama and who has installed the Notre Dame system of play this year, started the game with his second team. They played the entire first quarter and scored two touchdowns. The first string eleven entered the game at the start of the second period.

English Tennis Stars Win Hot Springs Meet

Hot Springs, Va., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Mrs. Elsie Goldsack Pittman and Miss Joan Ridley, visiting English tennis stars, concluded a series of brilliant tennis exhibitions in the United States today with a victory over the Baroness Levi of Italy and Miss Florence Le Boutillier of Westbury, N. Y. The score was 6-0, 6-1. R. Noris Williams II. and J. Gilbert Hall won the men's doubles championship, defeating Cedric A. Major and Hary C. Brunte of New York, 6-3, 6-1, 7-5.

ARMY'S PASSES WIN, 20-7, FROM MICHIGAN STATE

Ken Fields Leads Cadets to Victory.

West Point, N. Y., Oct. 10.—(AP)—A substitute Army back field, led by Ken Fields, today gave the cadets a 20 to 7 victory over Michigan State in the first major test of the year for the cadets.

Outplayed during most of the first half, Army opened up a tricky attack with the entry of Fields, Bob Carver, Edward Herb, and Henry Sebastian in the second quarter and pushed over two touchdowns on half a dozen plays.

Long Passes Produce Points.

Long passes by Fields to Sebastian and then to Peter Kopcsak, substitute end, brought both touchdowns. Sebastian was caught on the five yard line and Herb bucked over from there for the first score, but Kopcsak needed no aid on the second, galloping ten yards after taking a 30 yard pass for the touchdown.

Bob Monnett gave the Michigan State rooters new hope at the start of the second half when he broke loose on the third play to run 62 yards for a touchdown behind perfect interference, but Army tightened its defense and held the visitors thereafter.

Monnett Worries Cadets.

Monnett worried Army all afternoon, almost getting away several times and being chiefly responsible for the eight first downs Michigan State rolled up. Michigan State played the full 60 minutes with only one substitution, while Army used two complete teams.

Army's third touchdown came in the third quarter when Jack Price, Army's big tackle and captain, intercepted a forward pass and ran from midfield to the 5 yard line before he was caught from behind. Thomas Kilday bucked over in two trys.

BROWN BEATS PRINCETON.

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 10.—(AP)—For the third straight year, Princeton was defeated today by a Brown university football team, 19 to 7. Princeton got its score in the final quarter, when Larsen caught Van Dyke's forward pass over the goal line.

Using an attack that consisted mainly of double and triple passes behind the line and ending up in off tackle smashes or wide end sweeps, Brown tore the Tiger line to shreds.

PITT WINS, 34 TO 0.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—The University of Pittsburgh eleven rolled up a 34 to 0 score over West Virginia university in their 34th annual football meeting here today. A crowd of 20,000 saw the game.

After failing to score in the first period, Pitt made its first touchdown on a pass, Warren Heller to Paul Reider, from the Pitt 40 yard line in the second. Heller carried the ball over for the second touchdown in the third period after successive dashes by he and Reider had advanced it to the West Virginia 10 yard line from the Pitt 20 yard line.

As the game neared its close, the Panthers' drive gained momentum and Pitt scored three touchdowns in the final period, Luch, Sebastian and Daily carrying the ball over.

MARYLAND, 6; NAVY, 0.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—(AP)—The University of Maryland eleven today beat the Navy, 6 to 0, for the first time in football history.

Before 20,000 rooters Maryland scored in the third quarter on a forward pass, Chalmers to Pease.

N. Y. U. WHIPS GEORGETOWN.

New York, Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—New York university bid for recognition as a contender for eastern football honors today by defeating Georgetown university of Washington, D. C., 34 to 0.

Bob McNamara, Hugret, Grossman, Abee and Tanguay scored touchdowns. The most spectacular of these was made by Hugret in the third quarter. Hugret fumbled a pass from McNamara, but recovered the ball as Gellis of Georgetown juggled it in midair. Once in possession, he shook off tacklers and ran ten yards to the goal.

DARTMOUTH TRIUMPHS, 14-7.

Hanover, N. H., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Dartmouth today overcame its first major opposition, Holy Cross, 14 to 7, but it probably ruined its 1931 prospects, for four outstanding linemen were injured.

Dartmouth's victory resulted from Bill McCall's 88 yard run back of the opening kickoff and Bill Morton's amazing aerial display in the second period when he tossed four consecutive passes, received a fifth for a first down on the Holy Cross 1 yard line, and then smashed the line for a touchdown.

EASY WIN FOR HARVARD.

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—Harvard's powerful football team swept to a 39 to 0 victory over New Hampshire here today.

Harvard scored in every period. White was high scorer for the day with two touchdowns while Mays, Schereschewsky and Peter made one each. Both teams were weak on passing. Harvard tried ten and completed four; new Hampshire tried four times and was successful once.

SYRACUSE SHOWS POWER.

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 10.—(AP)—The Syracuse eleven outclassed Ohio Wesleyan, 48 to 0, today. It was the first major game for Syracuse and it displayed unexpected power.

Dick Fishel, Syracuse full back, scored three touchdowns. Joe Moran accounted for two and Art Cramer and Feldman for one apiece.

Oregon End Runs 85 Yards to Beat Washington, 13-0

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—A fast drive early in the fourth quarter and an 85 yard run gave Oregon a 13 to 0 victory over University of Washington today. Bowerman, end, intercepted a pass and ran 85 yards for a touchdown shortly after Oregon had scored by way of plunges and a pass.

WILLIAMS BEATS BOWDOIN.

Williamstown, Mass., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—Williamstown football team defeated Bowdoin this afternoon, 25 to 0. The Williamstown back field men gained through the Polar Bears' line almost at will.

MAROONS VS. YALE.

YALE'S blue jerseyed football warriors will meet Chicago's Maroons at Stagg field next Saturday in the first game which gridiron representatives from New Haven ever have played west of the Allegheny mountains. Their presence is a notable compliment to Director A. A. Stagg, Yale alumnus, in his day a member of both football and baseball teams. Stagg is coaching for his 40th consecutive season at Chicago.

Yale men from Chicago and the middlewest are making the affair a gala alumni reunion, with a banquet in honor of Stagg on the evening preceding the game. Several special cars will bring Blue alumni from the east.

While this game marks Yale's first appearance in the west, it is not the first time that New Haven elevens have met squads representing colleges now in the Big Ten, way back in 1881, Michigan journeyed east for a 11 to 0 defeat, and two years later suffered a 46 to 0 beating. In 1899 Wisconsin's Badgers played a close game against Yale, but lost, 6 to 0. This was the Cardinal team which went through undefeated in the west then lost to Chicago in a post-season championship game at Madison.

Iowa is the only team of the conference which humbled Yale. That was in 1922 and the score was 6 to 0. Those Hawkeyes were the strong eleven which swept through the Big Ten for five victories out of five games played and the title.

Chicago is not a stranger to eastern competition, although it has not met Yale before. The Maroons have played 24 games against eastern elevens with a record of eight victories, twelve defeats and four ties. Pennsylvania was a particular hoodoo until Chicago recorded a 13 to 7 triumph in 1927. Here is Chicago's record:

1898—Pennsylvania, 23; Chicago, 11.
1899—Chicago, 17; Cornell, 6.
Chicago, 5; Pennsylvania, 5.
Chicago, 17; Brown, 6.
1900—Brown, 11; Chicago, 6.
Pennsylvania, 41; Chicago, 0.
1901—Pennsylvania, 11; Chicago, 0.
1903—Army, 10; Chicago, 6.
1907—Carlisle, 18; Chicago, 4.
1908—Chicago, 6; Cornell, 6.
1909—Chicago, 6; Cornell, 6.
1910—Cornell, 18; Chicago, 0.
1911—Chicago, 6; Cornell, 0.
1921—Chicago, 9; Princeton, 0.
1922—Princeton, 21; Chicago, 18.
1924—Chicago, 19; Brown, 7.

TROJANS DEFEAT COUGARS, 38-6; MOHLER STARS

Quarter Back Scores 4 Touchdowns.

BY GEORGE SHAFFER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 10.—Washington State, 1930 coast conference champion, went down to defeat today before Southern California's running attack, 38 to 6. A crowd of 42,000 saw the game.

Except for the third period, when Washington State scored six first downs in a 65 yard march to a touchdown in six plays, the Trojans' defense smothered every offensive effort.

Mohler Scores 4 Times.

After State's touchdown, Southern California retaliated with two scores in five minutes. One was a 65 yard run by Orville Mohler, 162 pound quarter back, who was the scoring star with four touchdowns.

Palo Alto, Cal., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Minnesota failed to stop a Stanford pass at a critical juncture this afternoon, and therein lies the story of the break which caused the Gophers to lose by two touchdowns. One extra point was made, the final count being 13 to 0 in favor of Stanford.

The Gophers put up a good defense against a fast Cardinal team for three periods, but with a minute to go in the third period they overlooked a receiver in the clear. Neither of Stanford's two touchdowns was accounted for directly by the aerial route, but passes in both instances paved the way.

Just before the gun in the third quarter, Quarter Back Pete Somers, who had played a beautiful game up to that time, let a Stanford punt get away from him and Hand recovered for the Cardinals on the Minnesota 21 yard line. Allen tossed a 16 yard forward pass to Caddel and the ball was on Minnesota's four yard line. Caddel then took the oval over for the touchdown on a reverse, and Moffatt made the extra point.

Cardinal Passes Work.

After the kickoff and an exchange of plays, Stanford gained the Gopher 23 yard line, chiefly by means of passes. They were set back in their goal line march by a 15 yard penalty, but Caddel's end runs on reverses and a 17 yard forward pass from Moffatt to Caddel put the ball on Minnesota's 10 yard stripe. Phil Moffatt counted from that point with an end run, but the effort at conversion failed.

Minnesota outplayed Stanford in the first quarter, which forced it to put up a sterling defense twice in the second period to prevent touchdowns, and then took the edge again in the third until that forward pass changed the entire complexion of things. Stanford was inside the Gopher 20 yard mark twice in the second period but in each instance the punch was lacking. With Capt. Munn's 217 pounds driving the Minnesota line forward, the Gophers tore in so fast they upset Stanford's back field entirely and threw them for losses sufficient to enable Minnesota to get the ball and boot it out of danger.

Somers Makes Longest Run.

Pete Somers and Jack Manders carried the offensive burden most of the way for Minnesota. They were the only men able to sift the Cardinal line. Somers made the longest run of the game, in the third period taking Moffatt's kickoff on his own 9 yard line and running it back 38 yards to his own 47 yard line.

Coaches—Ohio State, Sam Willaman; Vanderbilt, Dan McGuggin.

Columbus, O., Oct. 10.—Unfortunate—or fortunate, depending on your viewpoint—plays made in the second period decided the game between Ohio State and Vanderbilt today by a score of 26 to 21 for the southerners.

Joe Benis, a sub quarter back for Carl Cromer, regular Ohio State signal caller, commited the errors, which allowed Vanderbilt to make two unearned touchdowns.

Vanderbilt earned two touchdowns in the first period. Then Benis took the Ohio helm and, after passing into the arms of Kirwan, giant Vanderbilt end, who ran 47 yards for the score, passed twice on fourth downs, literally giving the game to the Southerners.

With only a few seconds to play in the first half, Benis passed from his 20 yard line on fourth down. It was incomplete, but Vanderbilt had time to make one play. Ohio had been penalized for the incompleted pass and the ball was on the 14 yard line. Henderson cut through tackle for the touchdown and dropkicked the goal.

Ohio Passes Fail.

During the first half, Ohio State attempted to pass the Commodores off their feet. Fourteen were attempted during this period, with one completed for a gain of 23 yards.

The Buckeyes, changing tactics during the second half, used nothing but straight football until a last effort as the game ended.

In the first period Fortune intercepted Cramer's pass and put the ball on Ohio's 43 yard line from where he and Roberts worked the ball to Ohio's 15 yard line where Fortune fumbled and Cramer recovered.

A kick put the ball almost in mid field, from where Roberts and Henderson smashed tackle and center for a score with only six minutes played.

Ohio Penalties Hurt.

In four more minutes Vanderbilt had another tally. Ohio lost valuable yardage for holding where the score threatened.

Denis elected to pass from his 21 yard line and it was incomplete. Vanderbilt took the ball and, aided by a 37 yard run by Thomas, advanced to the 13 yard line for a first down. Fortune chalked up the second touchdown by a spinner through center and Beastey's place kick again was blocked.

In the second quarter the teams played on even terms until Benis tried a long forward pass from his own 30 yard line on a fourth down. The heave was partially blocked by Kirwan, who caught the ball and raced 47 yards for a touchdown. Beastey's kick was good.

The fatal fourth down pass in the shadow of the goal line after which Vanderbilt scored their last touchdown already has been recorded.

Buckeyes Run Ends.

Ohio State came back in the third quarter and literally ran the Commodores to death, skirting first one end then the other with Carroll, Hinchman, Keefe, and Cramer carrying the ball.

Taking the ball on their 20 yard line after a put over the goal, the Buckeyes marched 74 yards, only to have two thrusts at the line stopped for a score. Henderson kicked poorly and the Buckeyes took the oval to the 32 yard line. In two end runs Carroll and Keefe chalked up Ohio's first score. Haubrich kicked goal.

Taking the kickoff, Ohio State worked the ball to the 8 yard line as the period ended. In the first play of fourth quarter, Ohio made its second touchdown. The same tactics were used in scoring the third touchdown with Vuchinich crashing through center.

CARDINALS WIN, 4-2; TAKE TITLE FROM ATHLETICS

Hallahan Saves Grimes in Ninth Inning.

pitch. He wanted to finish and his manager didn't want to deny him the honor, but the old fellow's body wasn't as strong as his heart.

In the ninth Burleigh still was staggering and he was beginning to snarl. He still was without control and he walked a couple. He had only one more out to go, but couldn't make it. The Macks stepped into the opening with a pair of hits, hammered two runs across and had two more waiting. But the A's didn't get another shot at their weary adversary. Manager Street waved him to the bench and he almost fell on it when he got there. Those 38 years had him down.

Meanwhile, sauntering leisurely from the bullpen was Bill Hallahan, the southpaw who twice had beaten the American league entry.

Hallahan threw a couple that were wide enough to indicate that there might be bad news around the corner. But he threw one that Bishop liked and the Mack infielder swung. A lazy fly went out to center and the show closed when, the sensational Pepper Martin grasped the ball and jammed it into his pocket.

Martin Again Hitless.

The ball is all that Pepper, hitting like a fool in the first five games, has as a memento of the final battle. He would have preferred a hit but, just as on yesterday, he failed, once on a ball that Williams had to turn into a sensational play. So, instead of a holder of a world series record, Martin must be content with a tie with three other men who in post-season classics have recorded twelve hits.

The luck that has been so good to them in recent years turned against the Mackmen in the first inning. That's what started the Cards on the wild tear that gave them their two run jump. High, back on third in place of Flowers, who committed the costly error behind Derringer yesterday, opened the attack with a low fly to left. Simmons raced in and Williams went out to meet him, but neither could reach the drive and it fell for a hit.

A similar hit put Watkins on base. He sent a fly high into the air close to the left field line and Simmons, who had been waved over toward center, couldn't get back to keep it from dropping safely for a single. As soon as Frisch laid down a perfect sacrifice to Dykes, the American leaguers went into a state of panic.

Earnshaw's Wild Pitch.

Earnshaw was plainly fidgety as he started to work on Martin. The Pepper fouled one, took a ball, missed a terrific swing and then let another bad pitch float past. Earnshaw's next toss was the high, wild pitch which bumped against the stand, High scoring and Watkins going to third.

Earnshaw promptly went from bad to worse. He passed Martin and the human power house didn't remain long on first. Earnshaw's first pitch to Orsatti had no sooner started than Pepper was off for second. He rolled in head first just ahead of Cochrane's throw to Bishop. Watkins made no attempt to move off third on the play.

Orsatti, understudying for Hafey, looked bad as he missed two strikes. He missed another and on this one Cochrane got tangled up in the play that has been a bugaboo for catchers since the series started. Mickey let the ball drop from his glove. Orsatti was off for first like a shot out of a gun. Cochrane recovered and whipped the throw to Foxx in time to get the decision.

Watkins Dashes for Plate.

Meanwhile Watkins had left third and Foxx wasn't ready for the emergency. He looked around in a dazed fashion, drew back to throw, and then threw so low that Cochrane couldn't grab the ball as Watkins' spikes came slipping across the plate. While this was going on Martin sprinted over to third, but he remained there while Bottomly fanned.

There were a few moments in the second inning when it looked as if the Macks weren't depressed over the impressive start of the Cardinals. Simmons came up, spurned two widely pitched balls, and when the next came over banged it on a line to right center for a single. Foxx faded out on a high fly to Watkins, but Miller singled over short, Simmons stopping at second. High grabbed Dykes' grounder and whipped it to Frisch to force Miller. Frisch wheeled and threw to first, but not soon enough to double the runner. A moment later Gelbert picked up Williams' bounder and ended the inning.

High Again Starts It.

Not much of Earnshaw's energy was used up in the scoring of the two runs which put the National leaguers out in front by 4 to 0 in the third. High again started it. He led off with a drive toward Bishop, who reached for the ball, but not in time to halt its flight. Haas picked it up out in right center. Then Earnshaw tried the thing which tempts all pitchers. He put the next one over, probably thinking that if Watkins wasn't asleep he at least would bunt.

But Watkins swung, the ball sailed far to right, and bounced off the roof of the right field pavilion. High and Watkins jogged leisurely around to the plate, the St. Louis crowd, what there was of it, paid tribute, and the chins of the Macks dropped down on their chests. They were thinking of those vanishing extra thousands in the winning purse.

The second pair of Mack hits off Grimes came in the fifth. Miller went after Burleigh's first pitch and sent it into center for a single. Dykes grounded to Bottomley, who fell but jumped up in time to beat the Mack veteran in a race to the bag. Williams bounced one high over the infield. High took it, but the throw to first lost Williams. Then Earnshaw grounded to Frisch and a lightning double play put an end to the threat.

Starts Fanning A's.

Grimes must have been kidding up to this point. He fanned Bishop to start the sixth and the next two men were easy victims on a fly to left and grounder to High. Then in the seventh Simmons went down swinging. Right after him Foxx was set down on strikes. But he let the third strike, a curve, float past unmolested. Next was Miller, and he caromed a hit, his third, off Gelbert's glove, but Grimes resumed his way by whiffing Dykes to end the inning.

Grimes added one more strikeout to the list when he induced Williams to join up at the start of the eighth. Then he began his almost fatal tobogganing. He gave a pass to Todt, who batted for Earnshaw. The only base on balls prior to this was one to Bishop in the third. He was picked off base by Wilson. Bishop was retired on a grounder to High. Then Haas walked, but Grimes knocked down a drive by Cochrane and threw him out.

Martin's Last Chance.

The Cards' eighth brought Martin back in his final attempt to get the hit which would have put him into the books as the holder of a new record. The inning opened with Grimes purposely striking out against Walberg. He didn't want to exert himself running. High bounced a single between Williams and Bishop, Watkins walked and Frisch popped out. Then Martin's hopes were dashed on strikes.

Grimes got himself into trouble in that terrible ninth by walking Simmons. Wilson dashed to the stands to get Foxx's high foul. Miller grounded to short, forcing Simmons, and the Cards complained lustily when Umpire McGowan ruled that Miller wasn't doubled on Frisch's relay.

Grimes himself got into this argument and it may have helped to wear down what little energy remained. He couldn't get the ball over for Dykes, who walked. He was well on the way to passing Williams when the youngster bounced one so high that High could only knock it down. It filled the bases.

Mack rushed up Cramer in the rôle of pinch hitter for Walberg and the extra man looped a single into center. Miller and Dykes tore home, but Williams stopped at second. This was where Grimes was called to the dugout to make room for Hallahan, who after pitching two wide ones, induced Bishop to fly to Martin for the final out.

WORLD SERIES NOTES

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 10.—The Athletics were slightly disconsolate this evening as they mounted a train for the east. Most teams take a whipping philosophically, but the Connie Mack spirit is of the collegiate order and under his tutelage a defeat is something more than a day's work.

Al Simmons and Mickey Cochrane had to grieve by themselves this evening. They said good-by to their mates and started for the coast to catch a steamer which is to take an all-star team to Japan for a series with college teams.

The Athletics A's bench for a few moments in the ninth looked like a sheriff force throwing out the furniture on an eviction paper. Bats and gloves came sailing out when Umpire Stark called a strike on Bishop after two balls had been pitched by Hallahan. It wasn't so much the strike as that it brought Mack's men closer to a realization that they weren't going to get the amount of money they expected.

Uncle Sam won the series. The two clubs will extract enough from the receipts to assure the government of better than $90,000 in taxes.

John Heydler, president of the National league, was about the happiest man in the country over the outcome. It meant nothing to him in dollars and cents, but he had seen his own league kicked around in every series since 1926, so couldn't help but give thanks. What was Heydler's joy was grief for Will Harridge, president of the American league.

When Grimes came up to bat in the eighth Walberg pitched two wide of the plate. Burleigh walked down to Manager Street, coaching at third, and when he resumed his batting he just swung at the next three pitches. He was careful not to hit them, so careful, in fact, that one swing didn't happen until after Umpire Stark had called it a ball. The other umpires corrected Stark. What Burleigh thought was that they were going to pass him intentionally and he already was tired enough.

When Watkins slid into the plate under the bewildered Foxx's throw from first base in the opening inning one ankle was slightly spiked by Cochrane.

Connie Mack now has seen his five man team get a beating and the result probably will be that he will dispose of some of his stars while they still can command good prices. In that way Joe McCarthy may be able to manage a pennant winning Yankee team next season.

GABBY STREET GOING HOME TO WASH DISHES

That's Winter Job of Card Manager.

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 10.—[U.P.]—Grinning like a happy boy, Charles [Gabby] Street, manager of the Cardinals, tonight told his friends he had "realized my life's ambition." But there was no smile on the face of tall Connie Mack, manager of the A's, who saw his hope to win three successive championships go glimmering.

Down in the Cards' dressing room at Sportsman's park, slapping backs and shaking hands, was Street, the old marine, the small time club manager, who came out of the rut to win two National league pennants and one world's series in his first two years as manager of a major league club.

Back to Washing Dishes.

And so home to Joplin, to play with his children and help his wife wash dishes [one of his admitted winter chores], the manager of the first National league club to win a series since 1926, will go in the morning.

In contrast, 68 year old Connie Mack sat behind an oak desk in the National league club office after the game was over—austere and grave.

"I hope we can play the Cards again in a world series," said Mack, "and that real soon. Of course, I wanted to make it three in a row, but I am philosophical about it. You have to be in baseball.

Won't Retire, Connie Says.

"I'm going back to Philadelphia tonight. Naturally I am disappointed, but the Cardinals deserved to win."

Mack sent Eddie Collins to congratulate Street because he wished to avoid the crowd.

Connie said that rumors about his retiring were untrue.

Burleigh Grimes, 38 year old veteran, was perhaps the most satisfied player on the winning club.

"I've said before that any pitcher that beat as great a team as the A's has to be lucky, and I still say so," Grimes remarked.

Burleigh pitched two of last year's games with the A's. He held them to five hits in each contest, but lost both.

Hides Behind Beard.

Grimes wore the two days' growth of beard that he likes to have when he takes the mound, but did no tormenting. Last year he made fun of Mickey Cochrane's ears, and Connie Mack's gesticulations with a score card.

Sirens started the minute the game was over, and the honking of automobile horns outside the park spread news of the Cardinal victory. Fans brought out firecrackers, tied tin cans to their cars and started to make a night of it.

Before the last fan had left the park, laborers began setting up soccer goal posts.

HANOVER FILLIES SET FAST TIMES IN YEAR'S TESTS

Goshen, Ind., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—One of the outstanding events of the 1:30 trotting season was the spectacular performances of two full sisters, Hanover's Bertha and Miss Bertha Hanover, the former trotting in 1:59¼ and the latter in 2:00, thus making their dam, Miss Bertha Dillon, 2:02¼, one of the greatest of brood mares.

Another full sister, Charlotte Hanover, when a 2 year old, had taken a record of 2:04 in a winning race, and was regarded as a likely candidate for 2:00 honors when she reached maturity. Although Charlotte Hanover was the champion money winning 2 year old trotter in 1930, and was made favorite for the 3 year old futurities this year, she raced disappointingly.

On the final day of the Lexington meeting Tommy Berry, trainer for the Hanover stable, decided to start Charlotte Hanover for a new record and she was timed in 2:00¼, within a half second of the coveted 2:00 circle. Should she enter the select list later her dam will be the first mare to produce three two minute trotters. At present the records of her three famous daughters average just 2:00.

Only one other mare, Roya McKinney, holds a comparable record, and while she has produced three with records better than 2:00, one of them is a pacer.

RED CAGLE LEADS GIANTS' ATTACK ON BEARS TODAY

Garland Grange Regains Top Form for Battle.

The Chicago Bears will face the New York Giants, led by Chris [Red] Cagle, former Army star, at Wrigley field this afternoon. The kickoff is scheduled for 2:15 o'clock.

All of the Bears, with the possible exception of Zuck Carlson, guard, are in top condition. Although Carlson appears to have recovered from a wrenched back and was able to take part in recent workouts, Coach Ralph Jones is inclined to think a day's rest may do him good. Jones named Schuette in the starting lineup, but will make a final decision just before the game.

Watch Out for Flaherty.

The Bears have a private argument to settle with Flaherty of the visitors. Ever since he joined the Giants he has been a jinx to the Chicagoans, grabbing passes and breaking up plays in his territory.

On the right side of Pearson, who is back in good trim and who is sure to start at center, Jones will have McMullen, Steinback, and Garland Grange. It will be Grange's first real action this season. He has recovered from a sprained shoulder received in the Cleveland game.

Larry Walquist will call signals at the start. Later Jones may send in Brumy Brumbaugh. Red Grange, Bronko Nagurski, and Joe Lintzenich round out the starting backfield.

Cagle Comes to Town.

Red Cagle will make his first professional appearance in Chicago. Doug Wykoff and Johnny Kitzmiller will perform in the back field with Cagle and are regarded as almost as dangerous.

Only one member of the Giants' squad is a noncollege man. He is Stein, a 200 pound lineman, who is also a professional wrestler.

The starting lineups:

GIANTS.		BEARS.
Badgro	L. E.	Johnson
Grant	L. T.	Lyman
Stark	L. G.	Schuette
Hein	C	Pearson
Gibson	R. G.	McMullen
Powell	R. T.	Steinback

Lewis Bout to Start Charity Sports Series

Launching an athletic campaign from which it is hoped to raise thousands of dollars for the unemployed, the athletic division of Gov. Emmerson's unemployment commission announced yesterday that it is in full charge of the Ed [Strangler] Lewis-Wladek Zbyszko championship wrestling match at the Chicago Stadium Monday night, Nov. 2.

"All of the proceeds above actual expenses will go to the fund," said J. Russell Forgan, chairman of the athletic division. "This is only a starter. If it is successful, we expect to arrange other big sports events.

"Ed Lewis will not receive a dime for his services. He is paying his own training expenses. We have had offers from other wrestlers to appear without cost.

"The Illinois athletic commission has given assurance that the winner of the Lewis-Zbyszko match will be recognized as world champion. Zbyszko was selected from a list of ten leading wrestlers as the logical opponent for Lewis."

Lewis is training daily at Howard's Arcade gymnasium. Zbyszko has posted a forfeit to be in Chicago at least a week ahead of the match.

BRONOWICZ AND STEELE MEET ON COLISEUM MAT

Promoter Doc Krone will stage his first wrestling show of the indoor season Wednesday night at the Coliseum.

Frank Bronowicz of New York and Ray Steele of California will meet in the main go, two out of three falls to a finish.

Two newcomers are on the program, Earl McCready, Oklahoma collegian, who meets Jean La Deaux of France, and Hans Kampfer, 225 pound German, who is paired with Charley Fox of Cleveland. George Calza meets Joe Mondt in the other bout.

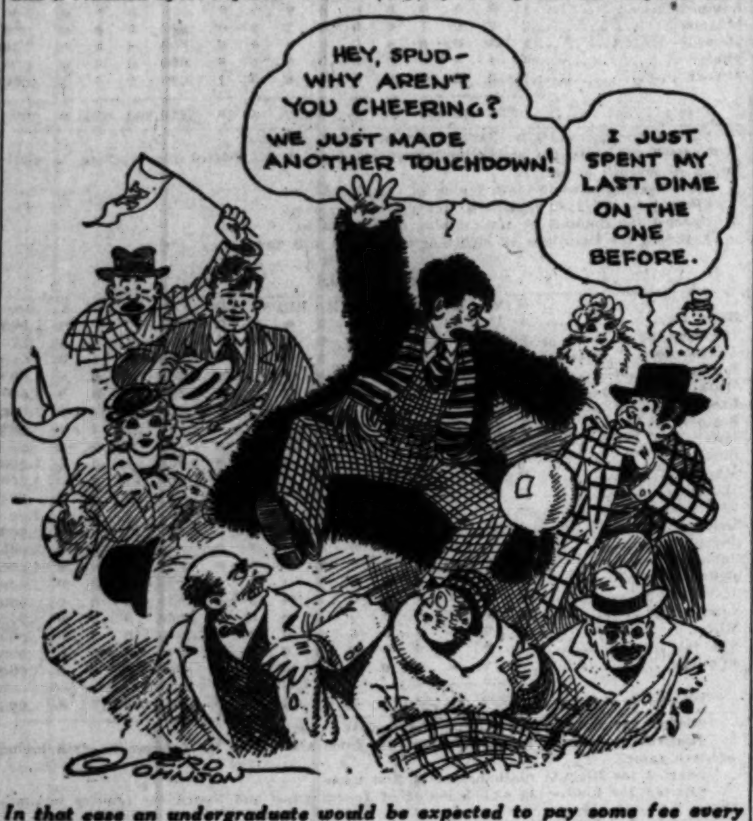
NOBODY'S BUSINESS
by Westbrook Pegler

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 10.—Unless one has a fine legal understanding of the copyright laws it is going to be very hard to cover the football situation at some universities this fall without invading the property rights of the coaches and athletic directors. For that matter, it may soon be illegal to mention the names of the universities at all without special permission of the copyright owners.

The syndicate influence is very strong in the athletic departments of several of the big schools nowadays, and a common sport reporter wandering into a coach's or athletic director's office is in somewhat the same situation as though he were to walk into an opposition shop and eavesdrop for news.



In that case an undergraduate would be expected to pay some fee every time he wished to let go a burst of enthusiasm for his alma mater.

It might seem a brazen stroke for a syndicate firm to step in at this late date and slap a copyright onto the name of Notre Dame, Chicago, Illinois, or Harvard, with all rights reserved, including the Scandinavian. Certainly this would come under the heading of an afterthought, for the schools have been doing business for a long time.

They'll Copyright the College Yells Next.

The founding fathers did not imagine that the time would ever come when a syndicate manager, wishing to sell the writings of certain paid employés of the schools, might be tempted to copyright something which was original with them and which they thought was safe from legal preemption. But since a copyright was taken out on the all-America idea by a group which has nothing to do with the invention of the idea, ten years after the death of the man who did invent it, it does not seem safe to leave anything laying around uncopyrighted.

Since that happened I have been momentarily expecting some genius to copyright the Ten Commandments and charge a small royalty fee for their use in the churches. Naturally, the churches would consent to pay this fee, as they could not morally make use of any man's copyrighted property without paying the man his honest dues.

It will go hard with the students of the universities if, in the development of the copyright business, some syndicate gets around to copyrighting the college yells and football songs. In that case an undergraduate sitting at a football game or attending a pep meeting would be expected to pay some fee, possibly as little as a dime, every time he wished to let go a burst of enthusiasm for his alma mater.

Get Your Tickets Ready, Folks, We're Going to Cheer.

I suppose there would be some system of fifty-yell tickets to be punched by the syndicate's royalty collector every time the student uttered a yell or song. This would put a high price on college spirit and place it in the luxury class beyond the means of the poorer students. They would then be compelled to sit silent at the games and rallies or go somewhere and sing and cheer in secret, which would be cheating and bad for their moral character.

Of course, a student might sing or yell silently, but this, too, would be an evasion, inconsistent with the spirit of the copyright law and strict honesty and likely to foster a general disrespect for law.

I know it irritates the journalistic coaches to be reminded that the name of the college is, after all, the main thing which they have to sell when they go literary in the fall. But, after all, this must be the case because there is no syndicate market for the writings of a coach serving with a professional team or a coach without any job at all. The coaches argue that they are business men with a by-product for sale, and that argument would be all right if there was a single instance of a coach who was able to do a good business in this by-product without using the name of some university as a trademark to dignify his goods far beyond their intrinsic value as literature or journalism.

Hey, Coach, Why Not Sell Advertising on Sweaters?

However, if it is a perquisite of the coaching job to exploit the long and honored name of the university which happens to employ him, for his own profit and the profit of some prometer who is not even an alumnus, why should the exploitation stop there? The possibilities have not been touched and certain developments ought to be highly profitable.

Why, for instance, hasn't some coach interested in the by-product business seen the great advertising opportunity in the football players' sweaters? The space on a football player's back would be admirable ground for an advertising sign mentioning some liniment or food product or even a good, healthful cigaret. Now that the player spends so much time bent over in a huddle he could give great prominence to a sign lettered in bright relief on the sole of his pants and the rental for this space naturally would accrue to the coach and the athletic director, who seem to own the teams for commercial purposes.

Again, the college songs could be rewritten slightly to include mention of various commodities, a great advertising medium and a legitimate by-product for the coach and director. It would not matter if the new words should not happen to make a very smooth poetic fit, for it will be remembered that college songs as a rule are not very poetic anyway.

Quick, Copyright Answers to Classroom Questions!

But, for constant earning power, there would be nothing like a copyright on the answers to the lessons of the undergraduates in class. The royalty fee on these answers would have to be small because the average wealth of the college student is small. But this copyright would yield money in a constant grind, like a slot machine, if a student had to pay as little as a nickel to some syndicate back in New York every time he gave an answer.

Undoubtedly some hardship would result. A broke student would have to make credit arrangements or tell his instructors, "I know the correct answers, but I will have to draw a blank today as I do not happen to have any nickels for the syndicate."

Athletic funds could be drawn upon to provide nickels for the varsity men so as to keep them scholastically eligible for the team, but I am afraid the Carnegie Foundation would look askance at that. But, whatever the source of the nickels, the coach and athletic director would be sure to get theirs in a fifty-fifty split with the syndicate.

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Carnegie Tech's stars, Kavel and Armentrout, conspired here today to defeat Georgia Tech, 13 to 0.

It was the consistent ground gaining of this pair, plus some running assistance from Dueger, and the excellent kicking of Capt. Armentrout that brought Tech its second successive victory over the southerners.

Late in the first period, Carnegie got its first touchdown and then was held until the final period when Armentrout needed only three plays to score from the 45 yard line.

Either George Rogge of Iowa or Milan Creighton, former Arkansas player, will be at left end for the Cardinals in place of John Vesser, who suffered a fractured leg in practice this week.

Cards to Juggle Back Field.

Finding the right combination of backs has been the big problem confronting Coach Ernie Nevers the last week. He is considering several shifts in the Chicago back field.

Les Malloy, the former Loyola star, is favored to start at one of the back field posts. Nevers will be at full back, but it appears a tossup for the two half back positions among Walter Holmer, Gene Rose, and Bill Glasgow. Belden, the latest addition to the Cardinal force, will probably see action during the battle.

Cards Need Blockers.

The Cardinals are facing a strong offense with such ball carriers as Bruder of Northwestern and Lewellen of Nebraska in the Green Bay lineup. Three great ends, Nash, Dilwig, and Gantenbein, are available to the Packers, so the Cardinals are certain to need expert blocking in the back field to make their running attack successful.

The probable lineups:

CARDINALS.		PACKERS.
Rogge	L. E.	Dilweg
Williams	L. T.	Stahlman
Kiesling	L. G.	Comstock
Erickson	C	Don Carlos
Diehl	R. G.	Michaleske

Kassel	R. E.	Nash
Malloy	Q. B.	Grove
Rose	R. H.	Bruder
Holmer or Glasgow	L. H.	Wilson
Nevers	F. B.	McCrary

Carroll and Lake Forest Play 0-0 Tie

Lake Forest college football team was held to a scoreless tie by Carroll, Wisconsin State champions, yesterday at Lake Forest.

It was the second time in two years that the two schools have fought to a scoreless decision. Carroll never seriously threatened Lake Forest's goal, but braced every time Lake Forest threatened to score.

Lake Forest made thirteen first downs to Carroll's one, Capt. Peter Stralko, quarter back, and Les Dohr, full back, making most of the yardage for Lake Forest. A strong Carroll line stemmed the Foresters' attack at crucial moments. The work of Swede Gallup and Howard Calvert, Carroll tackles, was largely responsible for Lake Forest's failure to score. Lineup:

CARROLL [0].		LAKE FOREST [0].

Substitutions: Carroll—Aker for Hemp, McCown for Dillingofski, Bonham for Mehl, Zinn for Jansen, Jacobsen for Bonham, Rothan for Aker, Dann for Mehl, Hinckley for Jansen. Lake Forest—Dwinnell for Adams, Hodgekinson for Hardt, Hammond for Lutz, Skopec for Goodman, Loeffler for Maske.

PROVIDENCE WINS 6-0 IN 4TH PERIOD FROM FRANKFORD

Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 10.—(AP)—A last period touchdown gave the Providence Steamrollers a 6 to 0 professional football victory over the Frankford Yellow Jackets at the Phillies' park today.

After three scoreless periods, during which Frankford had all the best of it, the Steamrollers came back as the game was closing with two passes, Oden to Pape and Oden to Rose, the latter going over for the winning points. Oden failed to add the point.

Frankford lost several opportunities to score in the first period, losing the ball on downs once on the 4 yard line and once again on a fumble at the 5 yard line.

Mr. Chesser M. Campbell
Classified Advertising Manager
Chicago Tribune
Chicago, Illinois

Dear Mr. Campbell:

You will no doubt be interested in the results of a survey we have just completed among our most recent purchasers of used cars. Our purpose was two-fold; first, to learn the newspaper reading habits of our customers and second, to determine which newspaper's classified advertising section they would voluntarily turn to when buying a used car.

The final analysis brings out these two interesting facts:

82% of our used car purchasers are readers of the daily and Sunday Tribune.

66% of our customers said that when buying a used car they would consult the Chicago Tribune classified advertising section first.

As all the people who bought used cars from us during the first 7 months of this year were included in this survey, the analysis presents a very representative cross-section of their newspaper reading habits. The insight given us by the survey into the standing and acceptance of various classified advertising media will also prove of great value.

Incidentally, our recent classified advertising campaign in the Chicago Tribune on Gambill Motor Company "Blue Ribbon" used cars proved to be more than satisfactory. We were able to dispose of more than 80% of the automobiles advertised.

We are sending this information on to you in the belief that it will be of as great interest to you as it was to us.

Yours very truly,

"82% of our Used Car Purchasers Are Readers of the Tribune"

RECENTLY the Gambill Motor Co., Inc., Chicago distributors of Hupmobile, sent a questionnaire to every person who had bought a used car from them during the first seven months of this year.

The purpose of the inquiry was to find out the newspaper reading habits of the people who actually bought used cars from this company.

"The final analysis brings out these two interesting facts," writes W. Q. Lundmark, retail salesmanager:

"82% of our used car purchasers are readers of the Daily and Sunday Tribune.

"66% of our customers said that when buying a used car they would consult the Chicago Tribune advertising section first."

The Tribune Want Ad Section reaches nearly twice as many actual used car prospects for the Gambill Motor Co. as all other Chicago papers combined.

Other surveys made among the customers of other automobile dealers all have shown this high preference for the Tribune. It was the same among the customers of a dealer who sold used cars averaging $175. It was the same among the customers of a dealer who sold cars in one of the highest price ranges.

The quickest, most economical way to reach used car buyers in Chicago and suburbs is through the Chicago Tribune Want Ad Section. Whether you have a single car to sell or hundreds of cars, you'll find by far the greatest number of prospects among the readers of the Chicago Tribune. This is not only because of its dominance in circulation and volume of advertising carried. It is also because of the confidence with which used car prospects regard the offerings which the Tribune accepts for its used car columns.

PROSPECTS DIM FOR IOWA STATE GAME WITH IOWA

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Many difficulties tonight hampered scheduling of a post-season charity game between the University of Iowa and Iowa State college football teams, proposed by the Iowa American Legion and approved by Gov. Dan Turner.

Dr. E. H. Lauer, director of University of Iowa Athletics, foresaw no possibility for the contest, which Legionnaires had estimated would draw a $100,000 gate for aid of unemployed.

Permission from Western conference officials would be necessary, Lauer said, since the conference already has made its charity football plans which stipulate that such games must be played between conference members.

Iowa State could not play a contest unless the Big Six conference ban against post-season games is lifted, T. N. Metcalf, director of athletics at Iowa State, said.

Gov. Turner said he would confer next week with Robert W. Colflesh, state Legion commander. President Walter A. Jessup of the university and President R. M. Hughes of the state college are to discuss possibilities for the contest.

Groom Sahlin as Rival for Albie Booth

Chicago and Yale will top Saturday's intersectional football, the Blue team coming to Stagg field for the first western game Yale has ever played, and one of the few it has ever played on foreign fields, except those at Princeton and Harvard.

The game climaxes the 40 year career of A. A. Stagg at Chicago, and is a tribute to him from his alma mater, whose greatest athlete he was in the late eighties. Stagg pitched Yale to three baseball championships, and was one of its star football players. An end on the Yale championship team of 1888, he was named on the first "All-American" team, selected by Caspar Whitney. The Yale Athletic association is sending the Blue team to Chicago to honor Stagg's "significant service to the best interests of college athletics, which has been national rather than local in its influence."

Yale Team Arrives Friday.

Yale's appearance in Chicago will bring thousands of alumni to the biggest reunion ever held in the west. The Yale team, band, and representatives of the university, headed by President James Rowland Angell, will arrive in Chicago Friday noon. Gov. Louis L. Emmerson of Illinois will be among the guests at the game.

Also attending will be the six surviving members of the Yale champions of 1888: George Woodruff, former attorney-general of Pennsylvania; W. W. Heffelfinger, of Minneapolis; Charles Gill, Orwell, Vt.; William H. Corbin, captain, of Hartford, Conn.; William C. Wurtemberg, New Haven, and William P. Graves, professor in the Harvard Medical school.

Leading the Chicago hope against Yale will be Stagg's son, Paul, who has been quarterback on the Maroon team for three seasons.

The star of the Blue team is Albie Booth, who is regarded as one of the best runners in the east. Stagg, who has stopped many a star with a special defense, is laying plans to hold the dangerous Yale captain in check.

Maroons Groom Sahlin.

Chicago has a player who is expects to rival Booth. He is Vinson Sahlin, a sophomore, who has more fire and dash than any Maroon back in years. Running with choppy steps and having a fine pivot, Sahlin is elusive in a broken field and is likely to get away at any time.

Stagg expects his team to be in first class shape for the game. He has had to spend the early season building up his line, and it should be ready to play good football Saturday.

COACH LEARNS OF GEORGIA VICTORY AT FATHER'S SIDE

Huntington, Ind., Oct. 10.—(AP)—While the Georgia Bulldogs tore through Yale's football team for a 26 to 7 victory at New Hevan, Conn., today, their coach, Harry Mehre, sat beside the bedside of his father, gravely ill at his home here.

"I'm proud of those boys," Coach Mehre said tonight when informed of his team's victory. "Their victory is a great comfort to me here at home. I felt pretty confident they'd come through, though."

Coach Mehre came here yesterday to be with his father. The elder Mehre, he said tonight, is "very low."

off on a slant to his left as Downs adopted a diagonal course to meet him. By that time one of the other Georgians was grunting along close behind Albie with a Yale kid disputing his way. Then the ground came out from under Booth and he sailed through the air in a dive toward the sideline. Downs arrived in time to confirm his horizontal posture and several other parties of both persuasions hove to an instant later, all winded and asking what had happened.

Get to Five Yard Line.

Levering of Yale stepped the ball over the sideline on the next play. Albie gained a couple of yards on the second down. Then just as he seemed to have been placed under control he faded back and pitched a pass to Hester Barres, one of his ends, who crashed on the five yard line for first down as Downs hit him.

The Georgia line then piled up Taylor on two thumping attempts to score, for a net loss to Yale of two yards. So Albie put the proposition to himself again and this time won four yards with a pass to Levering. But on the last down with three yards to go for a tieing touchdown, Taylor hurled his aching frame against the hard unyielding mob and was stopped again.

Georgia scored again before halftime, when Homer Key wiggled loose for a run of 68 yards and scored standing up. This Key did not play in last year's Yale game and the Yales were plainly surprised and also plainly not at all pleased to make his acquaintance.

One Sullivan, described as a second string back by the name of Sullivan, first name Sully, then kicked the goal and the score mounted to 13 to 0 against Yale and Albie.

Pass to Barres Brings Score.

The Yale touchdown occurred suddenly in the third quarter after Muhlfeldt of Yale had gathered up a fumble by Mott of Georgia. This gave Yale the ball on the Georgia 30 yard line and a pass, Booth to Taylor, gave Albie's team a first down 17 yards from the goal. At this point there was a long intermission while six tailors and two statisticians gathered round Albie to make him a new pair of pants.

Resuming play, Albie drifted through the big Georgia line for nine yards, two feet and eight inches on three bucks and Mulhlfeldt won the remaining inches for a first down seven yards from the goal. Taylor again glanced off the Georgia line like so much birdshot off an army tank, and Albie, calling for a man who could develop the opportunity, answered his own summons with a short low pass to Barres, who caught it lying flat behind the goal. Albie then kicked the goal.

Albie contributed something toward Georgia's third touchdown when a punt of his from his own eight yard line went out of bounds at his 25 yard line early in the final quarter.

By the quick and painless process of a pass from Downs to Key, the ball was hustled across once more and Catfish Smith, kicking again for the extra point, made it this time.

Is Gilmore Good? He Is.

Georgia was now using another one-man riot by the name of Gilmore.

The half backs must grow very tough in Athens, Ga., for this Gilmore packed the ball practically all the way from the Yale 20 yard line to the goal in a series of plain push-in-the-face plays and scored the touchdown on a final smash of about eight inches.

The game sold at a dollar a copy and sensing a large dollar's worth of football for their money a mass of about 70,000 swept down on New Haven to spend a fair benevolent fall afternoon under the sun.

MICHIGAN BEATS FIGHTING MAROON ELEVEN, 13 TO 7

Chicago Scores on Pass in Third Quarter.

140, but on running plays they were almost even, Michigan getting 93 and Chicago 92. The Wolverines completed five out of seventeen forward passes, and the Maroons three out of seven.

Wallace was the leading ground gainer for the Maroons with 41 yards in ten attempts. Capt. Hudson carried the ball 43 yards in 18 trials to lead the Wolverines.

Heston a Real Punter.

The first quarter found Heston giving proof that Michigan has discovered another able punter, for his efforts made Birney's look feeble by comparison. The Wolverines spent the first part of the period in hammering the Maroon line, but found it wouldn't budge. And when Michigan finally did take to the air, a long pass from Hudson to Williamson, Toigo and Spearing were there to halt it.

The Wolverines then summoned Hewitt back from end, ostensibly to throw a long pass, but instead he shot a short toss to Fay over center for what was almost a first down. Westover made Michigan's first down on a plunge, but Horwitz and Parsons were back on the next play to spill Hudson for a six yard loss. Michigan came within inches of a touchdown shortly afterward, but Hewitt's long pass over the goal line was just out of Fay's reach.

Michigan Gets Going.

The Wolverines then began a passing foray which resulted in a touchdown early in the second quarter. La Jeunesse recovered a fumble by Birney, who was trying for a fair catch, and the Maroons began to fight in earnest but Hudson leaped high into the air to get Newman's pass on the Chicago 7 yard line. It was the Wolverines' second first down.

Except for a few brief and futile expeditions by the Maroons, Michigan had complete control of the situation thereafter. The second touchdown by the Wolverines followed a blocked punt, Wistert breaking through to stop Birney's kick. Hudson got five yards, but the Maroon line turned him and Newman back on the next two plays.

Newman then stepped back and sent a slow pass to Hudson, who headed for the right corner of the field and not only scored, but also knocked a newspaper photographer's camera flying from its tripod. Newman's place kick for the extra point was good, making the score 13 to 0.

Maroons Foil Advance.

The Wolverines were in a position to score near the end of the quarter, but the Maroon line repelled them with its best defensive effort of the afternoon. Fay intercepted a Chicago pass and went nine yards before he was run out of bounds on the Maroon 31 yard line.

Newman's pass to Everhardus put the ball seven yards from a touchdown. De Baker, subbing for Fay, made four yards, but was stopped on the next play. Newman, trying to score, failed by a foot. Capt. Hudson could make only six inches and the Maroons took the ball with 20 seconds of the quarter left.

The Maroons were still fighting as the third quarter began and it wasn't long before they had Michigan on the defensive. They blocked Wolverine passes, stopped line smashes by Fay, Hudson, and Heston and finally Cassells blocked Heston's punt, Wein recovering on his own 49 yard line. They lost the ball on downs, but not before they had the Chicago cheering section in a frenzy.

Touchdown for Chicago.

Michigan couldn't do much, and Heston finally punted to Wallace, who scampered 18 yards to the Michigan 48 yard line. Zimmer got a first down around right end. Wallace got two yards, and after Sahlin failed, he took Wallace's short pass to the 35 yard line. On the next play Zimmer juggled Wallace's pass, but hung on and dashed over the line for a touchdown. Wein place kicked the extra point to make the score 13 to 7.

Rookie Hunters Are Cautioned to Beware of Guns

BY BOB BECKER.

October brings the open season for rookie hunters to shoot themselves, inflict gunshot wounds on their hunting partners, blow holes through boats and other tricks that careless gun toters can do while handling a shotgun or a rifle. Because of the large number of casualties which always are recorded during the hunting season, states already have issued their warnings to sportsmen to have a care and try to reduce the number of hunting accidents this year.

If there is any consolation in this annual record of "I didn't know it was loaded" accidents, it can be found in the fact that most of the shotgun loads that go wild finally are checked in as "self-inflicted" wounds. In other words, the boys who crawl through a fence and then pull the gun toward them, muzzle first, or who pick up a loaded gun muzzle first are the chief sufferers from their mistakes.

Michigan has compiled some interesting records on hunting accidents and possesses now such a varied pile of statistics that it is ready to forecast that between 50 and 60 accidents will happen in the woods in the next few months. Past records show that the rookies are bound to make trouble for themselves and others, with the above results.

Although the common impression is that the deer season accounts for the majority of gun accidents in the open, Michigan says that this is not the case. In 1930 27 hunters were killed. Of this number 18 died from wounds incurred before the opening of the deer season. Pretty much the same proportion holds true with regard to the less serious accidents with rifles and shotguns, because 22 out of 35 hunters receiving "battle scars" in the hunting fields were in trouble before the opening of the deer season.

Some of the "don'ts" issued by states to hunters with the urge to be careful while hunting include the following: Don't pull a loaded gun with the muzzle toward you through a fence; don't pick up a loaded gun by the muzzle; don't point a gun at anybody, irrespective of whether it is loaded or empty; don't carry a loaded gun in an automobile; don't shoot until you know what you are shooting at.

ALBIE BOOTH TO WED NEW HAVEN GIRL NEXT JUNE

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Albie Booth, captain of the Yale football team and a two seasons' sensation in collegiate sports, plans to marry Marion Noble of New Haven after graduation next June. Booth and Miss Noble have been friends not only through the three years of his college career but back through high school, which they both attended in this city.

That friendship began when Albie was working his way through high school by running a milk route between 3 and 6 o'clock in the morning. It continued as Booth entered Yale and overnight became the season's freshman phenomenon, being elected captain of three yearling teams. Miss Noble, meanwhile, went to work as a stenographer.

Booth has seen two years of varsity play in three sports—football, baseball, and basketball—and is now in his second varsity captaincy and entering his last year of varsity competition before he gets his diploma in June.

Mount Vernon, Ia., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The Grinnell college football team defeated Cornell here this afternoon, 6 to 0, in a homecoming game. Two passes from Hank Thomas, Pioneer back, after a fumble by Cornell near the close of the first half, brought the victory. The two teams battled through a downpour during the second half.

WEST CHICAGO, 2; YORK, 0.

West Chicago defeated York, 2 to 0, on the former's field. It was York's second West Suburban conference setback.

had been figured up a net loss of one yard was revealed.

Berry Boots One.

Berry must have received one big thrill during the afternoon. In the third quarter he stood on his goal line and punted. When the ball finally was downed, it was on Purdue's 15 yard line—a boot for a cool 85 yards, which is plenty yards, even if the wind did help a little.

By now you Purdue folks who didn't see the game probably are yelling at us for not telling how the victorious touchdown was made. You may calm down now for here's the dope.

Hecker Starts Passing.

An Illinois lateral pass, started on Illinois' 37 yard line, was a fizzle and Cook tried a spinner for 3 yards; then Berry punted to White, who was downed on Purdue's 29 yard line. Hecker was stopped on a running play, but on the next effort Hecker's pass to Moss was good for 27 yards.

Hecker passed again, this time to Purvis. The pass was not complete, but awarded because of Illinois' interference with the receiver. The gain was 20 yards. Hecker lost 7 yards, but came up smiling and on the next play shot another pass to Moss, good for 24 yards. Hecker failed to gain, but Moss made 9 yards around right end, and Yunevich hit the line for first down on Illinois 4 yard line.

Hecker carried the ball 30 yards on three plays following the kickoff, but one thing and another happened thereafter and the only scoring quarter ended with the ball in the middle of the field in Illinois' possession.

Figures Favor Victors.

Purdue's only real threat after the scoring success came half way through the last quarter. Yunevich intercepted a forward pass from Walser and ran to Illinois' 20 yard line. Then a pass, Hecker to Moore, placed the ball on Illinois' 2 yard line. On the next play Yunevich fumbled and Illinois recovered. Though a punt by Walser, which went almost straight up in the air, gave Purdue another chance from their 11 yard line, the threat ended with Peelle's failure to make a goal from placement.

The following statistics reveal the extent to which the afternoon's activities favored the Boilermakers.

Total yards gained from running plays—Purdue, 159; Illinois, 47.

CHICAGO STOCK PRICES FIRM AS WEEK ENDS

Public Utility Issues Score Gains.

Traders on the Chicago Stock exchange went away smiling on a two day vacation yesterday. Contrary to most week-end markets and especially those followed by holidays, the tone was strong. There was little profit taking and apparently little disposition to get out of the market over the holiday. Trading was rather quiet, with total transactions of only 38,000 shares.

Most of the trading favorites closed higher, although gains were generally confined to fractions. But in a few less active issues it took only a few deals to send them upward several points. Insull Utility Investment and Middle West Utilites vied for leadership, with the former making a gain of nearly a point and the latter finishing unchanged. Trading in both issues was around 6,600 shares. Insull Utilities second preferred jumped 4 points on a few sales.

Other Advances.

Other public utility issues also made good gains. Northwest Utilities preferred soared 10¾ points to 67¾, while Public Service of Northern Illinois no-par stock and Central and Southwest Utilities preferred advanced 5 points each. Commonwealth Edison gained a point and Cities Service was up a small fraction.

In the automotive group, Bendix Aviation and Borg-Warner made small fractional gains, but Cord was off a bare fraction. In the radio group, both U. S. Radio and Q. R. S.-De Vry closed unchanged. The investment group was strong, with Corporation Securities certificates advancing 1¼ and Continental Chicago making a fractional gain. In the miscellaneous section, Quaker Oats was up a point, while Swift and Swift International gained major fractions.

Stock Values Rise.

Fifty representative stocks listed on the Chicago exchange at the close of business yesterday had a market value of $1,184,682,290, which compares with $1,112,852,868 at the close of the preceding week, according to a compilation by Paul H. Davis & Co. This represents an increase of $71,829,422, or 6.45 per cent. A year ago the same stocks had a market value of $2,489,107,351, a decrease of $1,304,425,061, or 52.41 per cent.

Under New Management.

The Q. R. S.-De Vry corporation issued its annual report yesterday, revealing that a new management has been in charge since last May. J. B. Kleckner is the new vice president and general manager. The company incurred a net loss of $427,778 from operations for the fiscal year ended June 30 and after various chargeoffs had a balance sheet deficit of $2,330,033 at the end of the period. This reduced the net worth of the 297,162 outstanding shares of capital stock to $803,359, or about $2.70 a share.

In the previous period there was a net operating loss of $695,576 and a balance sheet deficit of $154,632. Stockholders will be asked to increase the authorized capital stock from 400,000 to 500,000 shares at the annual meeting on Oct. 20.

BOLIVIA INVITES N. Y. BANKERS TO SLUMP PARLEY

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.—The Central Bank of Bolivia has invited representatives of New York banking interests and of the central banks of Bolivia, Peru, Chile, Colombia, and Ecuador to a conference at Lima, Peru, late this month for the purpose of considering means of relieving the economic depression in South America.

No official advices on the conference have been received by the government, but it is understood that experts from New York will attend for the purpose of giving advice.

The conference appears to be a revival of moves which have been made intermittently for months in South America, but heretofore without success, for some concerted financial action toward relieving the depression. Several months ago the Chile government attempted a similar step by urging a South American economic conference, but made no headway and that government has since been overthrown.

DENY RUSSIA TO DELAY PAYMENT OF LARGE DEBTS

Soviet Journal Condemns American "Dumping."

BY DONALD DAY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

RIGA, Latvia, Oct. 10.—Officially denying that the soviet government contemplates declaring a moratorium on its large debts, contracted chiefly in the United States and Germany for the purchases of machinery, the Moscow Pravda complains that Russia's foreign trade has been severely injured through the actions of the American farm board in selling grain abroad.

America is accusing the soviets of dumping tactics, but American dumping is more serious because credits are being granted on the sales of grain and other products, declares the Pravda, revealing that soviet representation in Berlin attempted to prevent sales of American grain in Germany, which previously had consumed a large portion of soviet grain exports.

Boycotts Germany.

Germany's decision to buy from America, says the Pravda, will result in a large decrease in soviet purchases of machinery there. It warns the Germans that unless they buy soviet exports Russia cannot buy from them.

Great Britain, which has been another large purchaser from Russia, but whose trade balance with the soviets was always passive, has also affected Russia with the deflation of the pound sterling, and the large sums in currency which the bolsheviks realized in marketing their goods in Great Britain, and which are used to finance purchases from Germany and America, are considerably reduced.

Just where the bolsheviks propose to obtain $300,000,000 in cash which is needed to meet credits maturing in Germany and America this coming winter not a single Baltic banker or financial ministry can explain.

No one has the slightest idea of the exact amount of gold and platinum remaining in the vaults of the Moscow State bank, but it is generally believed that the sum is not large enough to satisfy soviet creditors. The Moscow press has not mentioned the government's gold supplies for years, and efforts to obtain information from the soviet state bank have been fruitless.

No U. S. Orders.

During the last fortnight a dozen American engineers working in Moscow who have arrived in Riga to purchase their winter supplies of clothes told THE TRIBUNE that the Moscow offices of the Amtorg Trading company of New York have not placed a single order with America since June, and that most of the representatives of large American manufacturers have been recalled from Russia. They declare that Russia is the hardest hit of any country in Europe by the general economic crisis which has completely deranged the five year plan. This report is confirmed by Baltic diplomats stationed in Moscow.

ELECTRIC WORK ON PENNSY GIVES JOBS TO 5,000

In connection with the signing of the twenty year contract between the Pennsylvania railroad and the Consolidated Gas, Electric Light and Power Company of Baltimore, covering the entire electrification requirements of the Pennsylvania system from Havre de Grace, Md., to Washington, D. C., Herbert A. Wagner, president of the Baltimore Power company, said:

"The work involved in completing the electric plant, transmission line, railroad electrification, installation, etc., is progressing rapidly and continuously and affording employment to over 5,000 men. The construction work will not be entirely completed until some time in the year 1933. While it is not possible definitely to predetermine now the complete schedule as to railway power requirements, it is estimated that the revenue to the Baltimore Power company will reach over $4,000,000 annually."

News and Gossip of Stock Marts

Speculation Lacking.

The coming week will show whether Wall street can entice the public back into the stock market during the final stages of the depression, brokers said yesterday. Thus far, the public has shown willingness to purchase stocks for investment on the current rally, but the desire to speculate has not yet made its influence felt on the market. If professional traders and pools can keep the rally going for a few days more, public participation is likely to increase sharply, the brokers believe.

See Better Oil Showing.

The statement of the oil companies for a third quarter of this year, which should begin to make their appearance within the next few days, are expected to be considerably better than for either of the other quarters. No heavy inventory losses had to be taken during this period as was the case in the first half of the year. Crude oil and gasoline prices reached their lows around the close of June and both had a rather substantial advance following the declaration of martial law in the Oklahoma and east Texas oil fields. The outlook for the final quarter of the year is considered fair.

Shorts Are Nipped.

It has not been easy sledding for speculators in foreign exchange in the last two days. Those who went short of Dutch and Swiss currencies because of rumors that these countries would go off the gold basis, found themselves badly frozen in their commitments by the startling rallies in these exchanges on Friday and yesterday. Guilders actually went to 40.99 and the shorts found it was too late to cover their commitments with gold, with the result that they were forced to pay whatever those long of the currencies chose to ask. The rallies in these two exchanges were the sensations of the exchange markets last week.

Chicago bank clearings yesterday were $49,300,000, compared with $62,300,000 a week ago, and with $85,900,000 a year ago.

SAY SHORT SELLING RESTRICTIONS TIE HANDS OF BEARS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Oct. 10.—Action of the New York Stock exchange in restricting short selling by giving liquidation of long stock preference to short selling orders has effectively tied the hands of bear operators, according to bankers and brokers in Wall street.

The new rule, which was issued at the beginning of last week's rally in the stock market, forbids the execution of short selling orders at quotations lower than the price at which a stock was sold.

Observance of the rule was made possible by requiring stock exchange firms to notify their floor brokers as to whether selling orders were for short or long account. Through this regulation specialists in the various stocks are informed as to the nature of all selling orders, and are thus able to give preference to orders for the liquidation of long stock, which may be executed without limitations as to price.

No intimation has yet been given by the exchange as to whether the new rule is a temporary one, designed to meet the present financial crisis, or a permanent one. Several brokers declared that they regarded the rule as an effort to silence the widespread criticism of short selling—a trading practice which stock exchange officials have defended for many years. Other brokers viewed the step as an attempt to forestall the proposal of any legislation aimed at regulation.

TRAVELERS WILL CUT OUT CLAUSE ON DISABILITY

The Travelers Insurance company has announced it will not write disability income clauses into its life insurance policies after Oct. 15.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance company made a similar announcement in a trade publication recently. It made the new policy effective Jan. 1.

The Travelers company said it would continue to waive payment of premiums by persons totally disabled by sickness or accident, but that no income would be paid them. Amount of premiums were not adequate to make disability income practicable, officials said.

The Metropolitan said its plan was to give the accident and health insurance back to the accident and health insurance companies.

ADVANCE IN BOND MART SLOWS UP; TRADE QUICKENS

New York, Oct. 10.—(AP)—The advance in the bond market slackened today, but trading quickened after a quiet first hour. Railroad issues continued to reflect buying interest. An active demand appeared in such diversified loans as Atchison General 4s, Baltimore and Ohio 4½s of 1933 and of 1960, Rock Island series A 4½s, Denver and Rio Grande Western 5s, Great Northern 5s of 1973, Missouri Pacific series A 5½s, and St. Louis San Francisco 4½s of 1978.

However, the uneven nature of the advance appeared in losses of 1 to 3 points in such active rails as New York Central new 4½s of 2013, Nickel Plate series C 4½s, Southern General 6½s, and Chicago and North Western series A 4¾s.

Public utility obligations fluctuated narrowly and closed steady after a large turnover. Industrial loans gained in quiet trading. Foreign bonds fluctuated narrowly and irregularly. With two or three exceptions trading was quiet.

Liberty and United States treasury loans continued to decline. Most of them either reached new low levels for this year or equaled their previous minimum prices. The new treasury 3s were the most active. The treasury 3⅜s of 1946-'56 declined 2 points, an unusually large loss.

ARMOUR & CO. FINDS SLOWER MEAT DEMAND

Armour & Co. in its review of general packing house trade conditions says:

"The unseasonably warm weather which blanketed almost the entire country during the early part of this week tended to curtail activity in the demand for meats and the principal lines were mostly slow. Prices continued at levels which make meats of almost all kinds exceptionally good bargains for the consumer's food dollar.

"Beef, lamb, fresh pork, and veal all were rather slow, prices working to lower levels. Smoked meats again did fairly well, selling in seasonable volume at prices mostly unchanged. Foreign business for the week was good. Collections were fairly good."

WORNOUT AUTOS WILL ENDANGER WINTER DRIVING

BY HAL FOUST.

The late fall and winter are seasons of hazardous driving. The hours of daylight are short. Rain, snow and ice make pavements slippery.

"We are apprehensive this year," said Sidney J. Williams, director of the National Safety council, "because there is a more than usual number of worn out automobiles on the streets, cars that have outlived their safe and reliable mileage. There are thousands of owners in the Chicago area running machines that are no longer safe.

"At this time of the year it is especially important that all automobiles, regardless of age and mileage, should be inspected and put in shape to meet the more trying driving conditions of late fall and winter.

Statistics Misleading.

"Available statistics on the hazards of mechanical defects are inadequate and likely to be misleading. For example, there will be an accident involving a careless driver with brakes 50 per cent efficient. It is difficult to determine whether the accident was due to the faulty brakes or to the carelessness of the driver, or whether the accident might not have happened regardless of the driver's carelessness or regardless of the condition of the brakes.

"I was a member of the maintenance committee of the Hoover conference on street and highway safety and the closest check we could make showed that in 15 per cent of the nation's accidents a mechanical defect was a contributory cause."

The records of Coroner Bundesen are incomplete for 1931 and for 1930 show that out of 1,247 vehicles involved in fatal accidents, 207 or 16⅗ per cent had mechanical defects. The records do not show to what extent, if any, the defects were responsible for the deaths.

"Police Figures Ridiculous."

The Chicago police department's records for the first eight months of 1931 show that 9,298 automobiles were inspected following accidents and that 311 or 3.4 per cent had mechanical defects.

Like the coroner's report, the police have no record of the number of accidents in which the defects were a cause of the mishap.

"Little is known about the number of accidents caused by faulty brakes, lights, steering gears, tires and other vital parts," said Paul L. Husted, statistician of the Chicago Motor club's safety department. "However, I am certain that the figures of the Chicago police department are ridiculous. I am sure they have reported only a small fraction of the cases in which mechanical failures were partly responsible."

Franklin M. Kreml, with a national reputation gained as director of the Evanston police safety department, said that thirteen cars were found to have mechanical defects out of 545 automobiles involved in accidents in the suburb during the first six months of this year.

"I would figure that less than 2 per cent of the accidents are due to mechanical defects," said Mr. Kreml. "There is little information on mechanical defects as a contributory cause, and any such figures would be highly speculative."

These safety experts, while disagreeing as to details, were as one in urging motorists to service their cars for the additional hazards met in this season of the year. The American Automobile association estimates that $50,000,000 will be spent during the next couple of months in preparing cars against the depredations of cold weather. This is an average of a little over $3 per car for the 18,000,000 automobiles in the frost belt.

VOICE OF THE TRAFFIC

COMPLAINT INVESTIGATED.

Villa Park, Ill., Oct. 6.—As a member of the police committee of Villa Park village board, I'd like to get in touch with the writer of a letter in last Sunday's Voice of Traffic who signed himself "F. G." and who complained of a policeman w'th star 208 having appropriated a set of green tail lights from his car.

Villa Park does not have a policeman with star No. 208, but if any motorist was abused within the village by any police officer, the village board wants to know about it.

Villa Park values its reputation as a hospitable community, and this letter has hurt our reputation. I would appreciate it very much and so would the village board if "F. G." will help us investigate his complaint by writing to me in care of the village hall at Villa Park.

"WATCH YOUR CAR" RACKET.

Chicago, Sept. 28.—While Mayor Cermak carries his war against crime to the gambling and vice dens of the city, one racket goes unnoticed which could quite easily be subdued if not entirely done away with. Self-appointed parking directors who guard your car for only 25 cents are a disgrace. After the spaces are all filled, the "director" goes on about his business, with the quarters which he obtained by intimidating people who fear for their tires if they do not pay.

Last Saturday for blocks around Stagg field the pavements were marked with initials, and cluttered up with such racketeers. The worst part of this was that those who were running these stands were mostly of the grammar school age, and that after their section was filled were not to be seen.

SPEED COPS ON OUTER DRIVE.

Chicago, Sept. 29.—Picture yourself driving nonchalantly along at 40 miles an hour on the deserted outer drive at 2:30 a. m. with a cool wind in your face and peace in your heart when a voice bellows, "Pull over! Wot's yer hurry?" Does one have to be in a hurry necessarily? Wasn't the drive built to speed up traffic?

Then comes the usual shakedown line. We asked for a ticket which, for some reason, seemed to annoy the cop. We pointed out that speeds of 45 miles an hour are allowable, so he obliged us by placing 51 m. p. h. on the ticket. We then venture that it is in violation of the ordinances for police officers to drive without lights. That, of course, is "none of our business."

NEWS AND VIEWS

Within the next few weeks several hundred workers will be recalled to automobile plants for the production of new models to be introduced at the National auto shows, opening in New York on Jan. 9 and in Chicago on Jan. 30.

Earl Butler, Chicago Hudson-Essex distributor, at a meeting last week of over one hundred of his dealers and salesmen, pointed out that prudent buyers are taking advantage of present low prices.

Total shipments of Chrysler corporation cars for September as well as for the third quarter and for the year to date, exceed those of the corresponding periods of 1930, according to figures issued by B. E. Hutchinson, vice president and treasurer.

Franklin has cut prices on current models. Reductions range as high as $500, 22 per cent of previous list prices. This leaves the Franklin at the lowest price in its history.

TWO EVENTS OF WEEK ARE SEEN AID TO BANKS

One Is Hoover Plan, Other Rate Boost.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Oct. 10.—The past week brought forth two developments of supreme importance to bankers, each of which, in a different way, is calculated to assist the banks of the country in meeting the hardships brought upon them by the prolonged depression.

The most important step was President Hoover's announcement early Wednesday morning of plans for a $500,000,000 corporation to discount sound banking assets which are not eligible for rediscount at the federal reserve banks. The second development was the advance in the rediscount rate of the federal reserve bank of New York from the extremely low level of 1½ per cent to 2½ per cent.

Relieves Anxiety.

The information of the credit organization outlined by President Hoover, on which work was speedily begun by a group of New York bankers, is expected to have a profound effect in relieving bankers of one of their greatest sources of anxiety. The institution, which is to be called the National Credit corporation, will provide facilities whereby banks all over the country may realize upon sound assets that are not liquid under the present abnormal conditions.

The mere assurance that this relief is available will, in the opinion of banking authorities, do much to restore public confidence in the banks and bankers' confidence in themselves.

The advance in the rediscount rate will operate in a subtle way to bring relief to the banks, and it was greeted by almost all bankers as a welcome move. The first effects of the rise in the bank rate included an advance in bankers' bill rates and in call money and a drop in United States government bond prices. The advance in bill rates, being equivalent to a cut in price, and the decline in government bonds will bring about some depreciation in the market value of the banks' huge holdings of these investments, it is believed.

See Better Yields.

This development, however, is far outweighed by the prospects of securing a better yield on new investments in bills and government obligations as well as in call and time loans against collateral. For months the banks have been securing only the most meager return upon their liquid investments, and since the majority of banks have placed liquidity above all else earnings have been curtailed.

So long as this sacrifice appeared to be in a good cause the banks were willing to continue it. When it appeared, however, that the federal reserve's easy money policy was failing of its objective the banks became discontented and a number of important bankers began actively to urge a restoration of higher rates through the advance of the rediscount rate.

Another important factor operated to promote the advance in the bank rate. This was the tremendous hoarding of money going on in the country, which has lifted the volume of money in circulation to record proportions. How extensive this practice has become may be judged from the fact that money in circulation as of last Wednesday amounted to $5,431,000,000, an advance of $185,000,000 during the week preceding and of $944,000,000 in the last year.

Such an unusual volume of currency in circulation at a time when business is slack can only indicate, according to banking authorities, that large numbers of people are hoarding money.

Earnings of Banks.

As a means of luring some of this money back into the banks, a number of bankers have suggested that the rate of interest paid by banks on their deposits should be raised. At present these rates are very low, amounting, in the case of New York City clearing banks, to one-half of 1 per cent on demand deposits.

Another, although less important factor, was to be found in the question of bank earnings. With interest rates at such extremely low levels as have lately prevailed banks could not be expected to show large earnings. Or, at any rate, this was the popular conclusion. Actually the large banks have shown satisfactory earnings in spite of the low rates of interest.

The notion that bank earnings were being impaired by the low interest rates prevailing helped to stimulate sales of bank stocks and depressed quotations for the shares of leading banks were a factor in disturbing public confidence.

With the rediscount rate of the Federal Reserve bank of New York at 2½ per cent the valiant attempt of the central banking authorities to fight the depression by means of easy money has undergone a major modification. The present rate is unusually low, compared with past records, having never been equaled prior to June, 1930, but it makes possible more normal money rates than have lately prevailed.

Expulsion of Gold.

Still another reason advanced by bankers for the increase in the bank rate was that one purpose for which the rate was originally lowered to 1½ per cent—namely, the expulsion of gold from this market, has to some extent been accomplished, although not by the rate itself.

The last year has been one of great trial for banking institutions throughout the country. Not merely have the banks found difficulty in employing their money suitably at remunerative rates, but they have had to contend with a heavy depreciation in the market value of their holdings and the removal from the legal list of many of their bond investments. On top of these difficulties they have had to maintain an extreme liquidity in order to be prepared for any emergency.

Bond Market Watched for Key to Future

BY SCRUTATOR.

After a prolonged period of depression a rise in the bond market is usually accepted as a surer sign of returning confidence than a rise in the stock market.

For that reason recent strength in bonds following the announcement of the Hoover plan for a national credit organization is being eyed with a great deal of interest.

If this improvement in the tone of the market continues it will probably be regarded as a sign that the tide has turned and that public confidence is rising. In the past definite recovery in bond prices has preceded a return to normal of general business activity.

Excellent Gilt Edged Mart.

The market for gilt edged, low yield bonds—the class usually described as legals—has been excellent for more than a year. Such issues combine strong security and a high degree of liquidity. Normal buying by banks, insurance companies, and trusts has been augmented by a heavy demand for this type of security on the part of cautious investors, because such bonds offer a comparatively safe haven in a storm.

Other grades of bonds have fared less well. Absence of normal buying, together with heavy selling by distressed holders and individuals and institutions scrambling for liquidity, have forced the prices for less recognized bonds down to abnormally low levels.

Conditions for months have been favorable for a comeback. They await only the spark of returning confidence. Money rates are still low and business inactivity has left a great deal of idle money available for investment. And there has been only a limited volume of offerings for many months.

Spread Widens.

The spread between the prices of legals and other grades of bonds widened further during August and September. Banks were selling rather than buying. There was a general tendency among various classes of investors to attain liquidity at any cost.

A downward trend can proceed only to a point at which bargains become so apparent that investors can no longer afford to overlook them. This was well illustrated when the Hoover plan was announced. A little confidence was breathed into the bond market by the mere fact of its announcement and the averages began to mount.

Success of the program centering around the National Credit corporation would mean that banks would no longer be forced to dump over sound but slow securities to maintin liquidity. Pressure on the bond market would be relieved. The logical result of this would be improvement in the market which would stimulate buying.

Hoover Plan Rally.

The bond market's reply to the Hoover plan has been a rally that has lasted for several days. Should this rally prove to be the beginning of a definite trend it will be generally accepted as an indication that business is on the mend. In the past the bond market has been a pretty reliable barometer.

"The bond market," said one investment house in a bulletin published just before the current rally, "presents a picture even more illogical and difficult of analysis than that found in the stock market.

"When we find—as is now the case—bond issues of equal security selling at widely varying prices, and when the spread between bid and asked quotations frequently represents 15 to 25 points, it is obvious that an orderly market does not exist and that the ordinary evidences of value are not being given consideration."

GREAT WESTERN GETS 20% SHARE IN K. C. SOUTHERN

Patrick H. Joyce, acting president of the Chicago Great Western railway, said last night that the carrier had acquired a 20 per cent interest in the Kansas City Southern railroad. He also admitted that the acquired interest was that previously held by the Van Sweringen brothers of Cleveland.

"The purchase was made last week," Joyce said, "and gave us part of the trackage we need for a direct route from the Northwest to the Gulf of Mexico. We will make a railroad out of it if we can get coöperation."

Joyce said no further negotiations were pending between the two roads but that additional trackage would be obtained if possible from other sources. He explained the 20 per cent purchase was "not a consolidation of the two carriers."

OPTIMISM NOW FELT AGAIN IN LONDON MARTS

News from America Is Cheering.

BY SIDNEY CAVE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Oct. 10.—Optimism is abroad once more in London city and financial circles.

Brighter news from America and cheerfulness regarding the general election prospects are the chief factors influencing the present situation. The stock exchange experienced further general improvement in prices throughout the week, with healthy movements in industrials, home transport sections, and textiles.

The movement was based on expectations of a trade recovery. The city welcomed President Hoover's plan to release frozen credits—a step which has been long awaited in financial circles here. Market leaders believe that the consummation of the proposals will be felt not only in the United States, but throughout the world with a resulting large expansion of credit supplies and a corresponding increase in purchasing power. The only criticism heard against Hoover's bank pool is that a capital of $500,000,000 may be inadequate.

Business Is Broadening.

Although the home political situation is complex and a matter of guess work, both the stock exchange and the financial district are confident the national government will be successful at the election polls at the end of the month. Business is broadening in consequence, but unusual rises in values are not always representing the actual volume of business being done.

The stock exchange anticipates a further gradual improvement in sterling with the return to power of the national government, chiefly because it is committed to a policy of financial retrenchment. If industry and trade improve, bringing a realization of the budget estimates, considerable recovery of gilt-edged securities is confidently anticipated.

A renewal of tariff possibilities will also favorably affect the home industrial market. It is significant that the most optimistic and firmest sections of the market this week have been the iron, steel, textile, and domestic issues. Market members refuse to admit the possibility that the Labor administration will be returned, but if such eventuates, pessimists prophesy an immediate drop in the pound sterling and a rapid slump of gilt-edged securities.

Also Helps Sentiment.

Market sentiment is also assisted by the reported satisfactory result of the British foreign secretary Lord Reading's discussions with the French premier, Pierre Laval, and the outcome of next week's meeting of central banking experts at Basle is awaited hopefully.

Generally easier conditions prevailed in the money market in the current week. Credit supplies appeared distinctly abundant with loan rates reflecting that condition. Discount rates weakened under the influence of easy money and a limited supply of bills, although the demand for bills broadened. This week's returns of the Bank of England show a further addition of £405,000 [about $1,587,600 at current exchange rates] to the gold holding. No important purchase of foreign gold was made during the week. The movement evidently represented a further transfer from internal sources.

The increased gold holding, however, was more than offset by an expansion of over £2,000,000 in note circulation, the reserves declining nearly £1,750,000 to £52,240,350.

Funds Improving.

British funds on the market show an improving tendency with buying concentrated chiefly in the 4 per cent consols, 3½ per cent conversion loan, and other long dated or irredeemable stocks.

German loans were marked by renewed weakness, due to the unsettled political and financial conditions in the republic, but recovery from the lowest occurred due to the prospect of international coöperation concerning war debts and reparations. One curious feature has been the slump in European municipal stocks, particularly those of Amsterdam, Bergen, and Copenhagen.

Paris Bourse Unsteady.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, Oct. 10.—With confidence shaken by another set of emergency decrees in Germany and large gold shipments from the United States, the Paris bourse had an unsteady week, although following Wall street's lead, it closed with a general improvement.

Although French government bonds were not as steady as in the previous week, the weakness was not appreciable and stock exchange circles, regarding this barometer, view the immediate future with calm, if not elation.

London Trading Quiet.

LONDON, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Trading on the London stock exchange was quiet today and interest centered mainly in the home rail stocks. Industrials, especially iron, steel, and motors were hardening. Transatlantic favorites were dull. Hydro Electric was quoted at $11.50, International Nickel at $11⅝, Brazilian Traction at $11¾, and Radio at $18. Foreign exchanges also were quiet. The dollar was listed at 3.865 and the franc at 97.93.

BRIGHT SPOTS IN BUSINESS

American loud speakers are sounding a note of optimism to the rest of the world. Radio exports for August were placed today by the commerce department at $2,123,642, an increase of $249,271 over the same month a year ago. Total exports for the first eight months of 1931 were $13,606,000, against $10,905,000 for the same period last year. The department said the gains were particularly gratifying in view of the condition of world markets and price declines, which have cut down values even where volume has been maintained.

Dealers' stocks of rubber experienced another and more decided reduction in the far east during September, advices to the New York Rubber exchange report. Such holdings totaled 38,411 tons at the end of the month, as compared with 42,393 tons at the close of August.

The Chrysler corporation reported exports of passenger automobiles built by Chrysler increased from 16.8 per cent to 19.3 per cent of the unit exports of the automobile industry, exclusive of Ford, during the first eight months this year as compared with the like period of last year.

Orders amounting to upward of $100,000 were received by General Fire Proofing company during the first days of October, according to George E. Brainard, president of the company. Business so far this month is almost as great as in the whole month of August, he said. The plant is now operating at about 50 per cent of capacity.

The Sieberling Rubber company announced that no reduction in either wages or working hours is contemplated at this time by the company, which is now operating four six hour shifts at its plant.

Purchases of castings and tool steels by the Edward G. Budd Manufacturing company in August and September this year were greater than in any corresponding period since 1928, company officials said.

Edward Van Dyne, district superintendent of the Pullman company, announced that 500 employés of the Buffalo, N. Y., plant have been called back to work. The men have been idle since July. During the next two weeks an additional 200 will be recalled, Mr. Van Dyne said, bringing the total number of workers to 1,200. Steady employment for eight months is assured the entire staff, he said.

The Zonite Products corporation, Ltd., Canadian subsidiary of the Zonite Products corporation, has arranged to erect a plant at Ste. Therese., Que. The building is expected to be completed by next April.

NEW FINANCING REPORTED HIGHER IN SEPTEMBER

Active municipal and railroad financing provided the impetus for a noticeable increase in new security offerings for September, as compared with the low levels of August, according to the monthly review of Lawrence Stern & Co.

"Municipal bonds," the review states, "gained 58 per cent over August and reached a total of $118,000,000; while railroad financing expanded considerably above recent months, principally because of a single $50,000,000 issue. Another large offering in the public utility field also helped to raise this classification well above the total of the previous month.

"Otherwise," the review continues, "there were few exceptions to the prevailing lack of confidence in the security field, with distribution practically at a standstill."

Average yields of new corporate bond issues at their offering prices for September continued well above the low levels of July, according to the firm's index. Although the average declined from 4.98 per cent in August to 4.79 per cent this month, the index shows this decrease reflects the fact that most of September's financing consisted of large units of high grade bond offerings.

Am. Petroleum Institute Election to Be Held Here

Estimate Milwaukee Net Last Month at $1,200,000

Preliminary estimates indicate that gross revenues of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific railroad for the month of September, 1931, will be about $9,500,000 as compared with $13,579,564 for September, 1930, and that the net railway operating income will be in the neighborhood of $1,200,000 as compared with $2,852,851 for September, 1930.

S. H. Kress & Co. Report $5,295,860 Sept. Sales

September sales of S. H. Kress & Co. amounted to $5,295,860, a decrease of 3.3 per cent from $5,478,003 reported for September, 1930. Sales for the first nine months totaled $46,527,657, an increase of 1.2 per cent over the aggregate for the corresponding period last year.

New York, Oct. 10.—Unfilled orders of the United States Steel corporation decreased 24,624 tons last month, or from 3,169,457 on Aug. 31 to 3,144,833 on Sept. 30, according to the monthly tonnage figures issued today. The decline was the smallest for any month since March, when the backlog increased 30,136 tons. The total of unfilled orders at the end of September was smaller than any time since August, 1927.

The Sept. 30 total compares with 3,404,816 at the end of July, 3,479,323 at the end of June, and 3,424,338 on Sept. 30, 1930. The decrease last month was smaller than in September, 1930, when a reduction of 155,816 tons occurred. In September, 1929, the backlog increased 244,370 tons to a total of 3,902,581 tons.

The decrease reported for last month was somewhat smaller than Wall street had anticipated. Preliminary estimates in the financial district had placed the decline in unfilled tonnage at 40,000 to 150,000 tons.

The steel corporation's operations last month were about 30 per cent of capacity, the lowest rate of the year. Were it not for the unusually small amount of new business received during the month, the backlog would probably have shown a decrease, steel authorities said. Since the beginning of October there has been an encouraging improvement in the booking of orders, and further improvement is expected during the rest of the month. Orders for rails from the railroads, and orders for steel sheets and other products from the automobile manufacturing companies will constitute a large part of the new business booked, it is believed. Thus far, the railroads have been tardy in placing their usual fall rail orders.

Alton Railroad Reports Surplus for September

The report of the Alton railroad company and of the receivers of Chicago and Alton for September shows a surplus after charges of $61,969, compared with a deficit of $382,870 for the like 1930 month. Net operating income was $222,656, as against a deficit of $1,211 a year ago, while gross amounted to $1,537,654, against $1,974,007.

For the first nine months of this year a deficit after charges of $2,300,290 was shown, compared with a deficit of $3,094,641 for the same period last year. Net operating was $594,117, against $431,458; gross, $14,680,243, against $18,696,146.

Wheat Buying Good; Prices Move Higher

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Buying of wheat futures Saturday was of the best class, according to the views expressed by pit brokers that has been witnessed in months.

Houses with eastern and foreign connections as well as leading local professionals were arrayed on the bull side, and while there was heavy profit taking, selling against daily and weekly offers as well as evening up for the double day holiday the close was at practically the top with prices the highest since Sept. 19, the day before England announced it would abandon the gold basis.

Bullish sentiment was rampant during the day, with a marked expansion in the speculative interest in the market on the part of the general public. Cables from abroad on the Russian and general European situation fanned the speculative bull side, which has been nearly dormant for many months, and the market responded to the buying in a manner that surprised even some of the operators who have been predicting higher prices. May wheat touched 54⅝c on the advance, compared with 48⅝c at the low point on Monday, and one of the most prominent members of the exchange expressed the belief that the present generation of traders would not live to see such a price again.

Wheat Closes at Top.

At no time was selling effective in checking the advance, except for a brief period following the opening, and prices moved up 2¼@2½c from the inside figure and closed within a fraction of the top with net gains of 1⅝c, with December finishing at 50 to 50⅛c; May, 54⅛ to 54¼c, and July, 54⅝c. Winnipeg wheat was ⅞@1c higher with December at 54¾c in Canadian currency, that market lagging as compared with Chicago, due to an advance in the exchange rate, the latter being around 9½ per cent against 10¼ per cent on Friday. Liverpool was ½@⅝d higher with December at 54⅝c, figuring sterling at $3.87.

Russian news has become a dominating factor in the wheat market, and in some quarters the belief prevails that history has repeated itself, and that the short crop in that country will hasten the recovery in agriculture as it did at the end of the business depression in 1893-'95, when wheat advanced from a low of around 50c early in 1895 to around 83c in June.

No Longer Menace.

A London cable from one of the largest of the English cash grain houses with world wide connections received by Scott, Burrows and Christie said: "See much improved demand for North American wheat as Argentine is entirely too dear and stocks there almost exhausted. Russia no longer a menace and offering only relatively small quantities, refusing to sell any stored stocks. We estimate their shipments for current crop year at 24,000,000 bu below the 97,000,000 bu of last year. Strangely, wheat is now difficult to buy. Importers getting nervous and sellers have only to hold in order to get the business."

A Rotterdam cable to a leading New York exporter said: "Understand Russia tried to get an option to ship sugar and ore instead of grain on old charters, probably on account of the large monetary proceeds. Anyhow, expect Russian shipments to fall off considerably. Also believe there will be increase in bread rations in Russia soon, but stocks of Russian wheat in England and Holland are still large."

No Estimates on Russia.

There have been no definite estimates received so far as to the size of the Russian wheat harvest this season, but all reports have indicated the crop there is materially short of that of last year. Export sales of 2,500,000 bu or more North American wheat have been made in the past two days.

According to the gossip yesterday, there has been concentrated buying of wheat futures during the last few days by a number of strong local and eastern interests who have become impressed with the record or near record low prices which have been prevailing both here and in other countries. Rumors of pool operations are being heard. Despite the sharp upturn from the low point which has occurred during the last week, it is claimed by close observers that the underlying situation is so strong that a material advance might be witnessed without exhausting the buying power, and that only temporary setbacks are to be expected from time to time.

Light Trade in Corn.

Strength and activity in wheat is detracting from the interest in corn, oats and rye, but the three grains were somewhat firmer in sympathy with wheat, corn closing ⅜@⅝c higher with December at 35⅜ to 35½c, and May at 39¾ to 39⅞c. The country sold 100,000 bu to arrive. Oats gained ⅛@⅜c, with December closing at 22 to 22⅛c and May at 24⅝ to 24¾c. Rye was ⅝c higher for the day, December being 39⅛, and May, 41½ to 41⅝c at the last.

GOLD LOSS SINCE SEPTEMBER 20 IS $499,242,500

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Oct. 10.—There was a further substantial loss of gold for this country, according to the report of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York today. The loss, which totaled $19,503,400, brought the total net loss for this country since England went off the gold basis on Sept. 20 to $499,242,500, or just $757,500 below the $500,000,000 mark.

The greatest part of today's movement was an additional increase in the gold earmarked for foreign account of $18,800,000. This was supplemented by additional exports of $2,200,000, of which $1,700,000 went to Mexico and $500,000 to France. There were also imports totaling $1,496,000, of which $1,000,000 was received from Argentina on Friday, too late for inclusion in that day's report, and the balance from Canada.

For last week total exports of the metal from the port of New York were $99,132,400, while imports amounted to $13,014,000 and the gold earmarked for foreign account increased by $73,406,000. This made a net loss for this country for the week of $159,493,500.

Chicago Area Federal Reserve Debits Increase

Debits to individual deposit account reported to the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago for the week ended Oct. 7, 1931, by 192 banks in 38 leading clearing house cities in the Seventh Federal Reserve district, aggregate $1,176,161,000, an increase of 11.7 per cent compared with a week ago [$1,052,988,000]. Compared with the corresponding week of last year [$1,464,606,000], a decrease of 19.7 per cent was shown.

STOCK MARKET HOLDS OWN IN SHORT SESSION

Rail Shares Weaken in Late Selling.

The financial community entered on a two-day holiday at the close of business yesterday. All of the country's financial markets, the banks and commodity markets will be closed tomorrow—Columbus day.

BY FRED HARVEY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Oct. 10.—Bullish activities in various sections of the stock market list continued to advertise Wall street's confidence in the administration's plans for improving business today.

The gains were small as a rule and there were numerous minus signs sprinkled about, but the fact that the market was able to hold its own in face of the profit taking that always marks the Saturday before a Monday holiday argued volumes for the improved conditions on the exchange.

Railroad shares were again prominent on the upside for the major part of the session, but the flood of realizing sales unloosed in the last thirty minutes or so by traders unwilling to chance a two day recess in the market proved too much for the leaders and the finish found them borne down slightly below yesterday's closing figures. New York Central finished showing a net loss of about a point after having been ahead as much in the early dealings and Atchison, Union Pacific, New Haven, and others had to come off their perches and deliver to the profit takers.

Stand Their Ground.

Rock Island, Northern Pacific, Southern Pacific, and one or two others stood their ground to the last, however, and emerged showing plus signs as usual since prosperity returned to the long downtrodden group. The street hears that important buying has been coming into some of these issues, particularly Northern Pacific, during the last few sessions.

Sentiment for the rails was improved afresh overnight by the news from Washington that the administration was considering definite action to give the carriers assistance. Reports had been current for several days that the interstate commerce commission had decided to make a favorable ruling on the petition of the roads for a substantial increase in freight rates.

Leading industrial shares had their ups and downs. Most of them opened lower on selling influenced probably by yesterday's reaction. After the first hour, however, enough support developed to take care of the realizing orders and the whole list showed a disposition to brace up.

In Brisk Demand.

United States Steel and American Telephone, which were among yesterday's weaker issues, were in brisk demand, at times the utility leader registering a net gain of over a point and Steel doing almost as well. American Can also counted itself in on the upside with a net gain of more than a point, while such pivotals as Consolidated Gas, General Motors, General Electric and Westinghouse rose from a fraction to a point. Western Union made one of the best showings of the entire list, rising 3½ points.

In the motors group Nash reacted slightly in response to the action of the corporation's board in slashing its dividend to $2 from $4. Studebaker and Chrysler worked higher.

Allied Chemical, selling ex-dividend, pushed up more than a point. Oil shares did little.

Trading was light, many brokers having left town last night for the double holiday. The sales for the two hours amounted to only 826,378 shares. This compares with last Saturday's total of 1,029,490.

More Optimistic.

There is no doubt that speculative Wall street is more optimistic over conditions now than it has been in months. The administration's move earlier in the week to better the credit situation through the formation of a huge banking pool for the support of banks whose assets have been "frozen" by the long depression, the later step in behalf of the railroads, and finally the report that the groundwork was being laid for a reconsideration of war debts and reparations with suggestions that a downward revision was contemplated—all have helped to revive confidence. And there are many who believe it has "come to stay."

After a rather encouraging three-day advance in the hog market, prices broke sharply on the week-end session and all of the week's gain was lost.

Some classes went to new low levels, but the unusually good quality of the week-end supply held the general average price at $5.10, which was 5c above the low spot established late in September and reached again early last week. The extreme top, however, went down 30c yesterday, to a new bottom of $5.50, the lowest top price since early 1908. The previous low point for the extreme top was $5.55 early in the week.

Armour, Swift, and Wilson filled fairly large orders Saturday at the day's full decline, getting almost 3,000 good to choice 170@210 lb averages at $5.00@5.25 and medium weight at $5.30@5.35. Most of the 2,500 left were good grades of light and light butchers. Some of the smaller local houses remained out of the market in hopes that yesterday's liberal receipts indicate a bigger movement of the "new" crop for next week. Offerings were largest of the year for a week-end trade.

Futures Trade Quiet.

Trading in futures was practically at a standstill. Buyers were willing to pay $4.50 for December and January contracts, but no offers to sell were posted. October mediums were bid $5.00.

Hog prices held up well the first five days last week considering the combination of bearish influences blocking the recovery of the market; which is lowest for this time of year since 1905. Fluctuations were remarkably small and the average for the whole week figured $5.15, exactly the same as the previous week's average. Outlet for fresh pork was not broad enough to cope with the deluge of light weight cuts, and prices on the wholesale market were swept down to the lowest point since February.

Light loins have dropped 5@6c since a month ago, while heavy loins were comparatively scarce and lost only 1c. Receipts were heavy, but average weights of hogs were lighter again, the average for the week at 223 lbs being lightest for this time of year since the war and 17 lbs under the five year average of corresponding weeks. The eleven leading markets handled 451,000 hogs, the second largest total since last May.

While top grades of steers kept on establishing new high marks for the season during the last week, the peak going to $10.60 Wednesday, unfavorable factors were at work in other divisions of the cattle market, and the rank and file of sales were made on a sagging trade during the last half of the week. Even top quotations felt the influence of bears toward the finish, the scarcity of choice grades being the only thing in favor of a firm market for top grades.

The wholesale price of fresh beef lost some of what it had gained during the last month, but carcasses are still 1@2c above a month ago. Support from other byproducts continues weak. Little encouragement is noted in the hide market, where prices receded some early last week. Receipts of cattle at Chicago were largest of the year at 54,700 and 3,400 greater than in 1930. The general average price was forced down 20c to $8.20.

Lamb Market Sensitive.

Although the consumption of lamb is the broadest ever known, the market is extremely sensitive. Last week's surplus forced the market back to the lowest level since 1911, the week's general average at $5.80 being 50c under the previous week's average and $2.25 under the same week in 1930. Best grades of fat lambs slumped 75c to $1.75 during the week, while outlet to country feeder buyers held the bottom end of the market almost steady all week. Top prices for range lambs tumbled from $7.75 on Sept. 30 to $6.25 late last week.

CASH GRAIN NEWS

Europe has come into the market as a big buyer of North American wheat. Sales in all positions on Friday were estimated to have been 2,000,000 bu or more, including some hard winter at the Atlantic coast, and there were 500,000 bu or more Manitobas and hard winters taken yesterday, and messages from the seaboard claimed that sales of late had materially exceeded the amounts that have been reported. Scarcity of Russian and Argentine offerings has caused nervousness on the part of buyers abroad and there was more disposition shown to anticipate requirements.

Chicago handlers sold 16,000 bu wheat, 20,000 bu corn, and 10,000 bu oats to the domestic trade, and booked 15,000 bu wheat, 100,000 bu corn, and 4,000 bu oats to arrive.

Cash wheat basis showed a firm undertone, with No. 1 red quoted at 1@1½c over; No. 2 red, ½@1c over; No. 3 red, December price to ¼c over; No. 1 hard, 1¼@1¾c over; No. 2 hard, 1@1¼c over; No. 3 hard, ½@¾c over; No. 2 yellow hard, ¼@½c over, and No. 2 mixed, December price to ¼c over the future. Basis at Kansas City was firm.

Country offerings of cash corn to arrive were again liberal, but the basis in the sample market was steady to ¼c lower. Premiums as compared with December follow: No. 1 and No. 2 mixed and yellow, 3@3¼c; white, 3½c; No. 3 mixed, 2@2½c; yellow, 2½@2¾c; white, 3¼c. No sales of new corn were reported here during the day.

Cash oats basis was steady to ¼c higher, with No. 2 white, 1@1½c over, and No. 3 white, ¼c under to ⅛c over the future. No. 2 rye was nominally 5@8c over December.

Official receipts of grain at Chicago Saturday: Wheat, 35 cars; corn, 269 cars; oats, 51 cars; rye, 6 cars; barley, 25 cars. Range of cash grain prices in leading markets follow:

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

At no time in recent months has there been so much cheerfulness in the grain trade as appeared yesterday. The close was the highest in recent weeks, with larger holdings among the speculators and less disposition to sell than has been apparent in a long time. Constructive news is having more influence, while for months it fell flat. Reports from outside markets noted a revival in speculative interest in all grains, with wheat leading. It is the first time in weeks that the wheat market has finished in the daily and weekly "offers." Traders look for occasional setbacks, but believe the future presents better prospects for an enlarged trade in cash grain and futures than has been apparent in months.

"Fundamentally, the general market situation is not weakening," says F. B. Keech & Co. "European crop advices suggest a smaller production than indicated early and the southern hemisphere acreage reductions of 20 to 25 per cent are confirmed. Information from Russia continues very indefinite. Lack of speculative interest seems to be standing in the way of a recovery in prices, a feature which may be expected to prevail as long as confidence in the securities markets is not restored. Sentiment generally is in favor of the buying side, but there is no evidence of important accumulations."

Two Chicago Board of Trade memberships were sold yesterday, one at $6,500 and the other at $6,000. The previous sale was at $7,000 net to the buyer.

Trading in cotton was not heavy yesterday and during a good part of the morning prices held within a narrow but higher range. Spot cotton at around 5½c a pound was being picked up at New Orleans, Houston, and Galveston. The movement from interior to sea ports is heavy. Mills and investors are taking hold more freely. Liverpool cables were slightly better than due and the close was unchanged to 1 point lower. Strength in grains had a good influence toward the last. Weather over the belt was ideal for harvesting the crop. Closing prices were the highest of the day with futures in Chicago up 11@16 points and other markets 10@16 points. Spots advanced 5 points to 5.95c in New York, 5.65c in New Orleans, showing gains of 35 points, almost $2 a bale for the week. Houston and Galveston were 5.60c, gains of $1 to $1.50 for the week.

Trade news was more favorable and indications are that banking conditions will be such as to encourage mill and investment buying. Prices follow:

SPRING WHEAT CROP SMALLEST IN U. S. HISTORY

Gov't Reduces Estimate to 109,000,000 Bu.

The smallest spring wheat crop on record and below average yields of corn and other grains were suggested by the government October report given out late Saturday. The estimate on the yield of spring wheat was reduced 2,000,000 bu from the previous returns, and was placed at 109,000,000 bu, compared with 251,000,000 bu harvested in 1930, and is far below domestic requirements.

No fresh estimate was made on winter wheat, the latter having previously been placed at 775,000,000 bu. Aggregate yield of all wheat is 884,000,000 bu against 863,000,000 bu in 1930, and after allowing for domestic requirements and for a normal carry-over the figures suggest that there is around 328,000,000 bu available for export during the current season.

Reports of late have suggested large amounts of wheat would be fed to live stock this season, and the trade expect that the domestic disappearance during the current season will run 100,000,000 bu or more in excess of the normal of around 650,000,000 bu.

The corn crop is placed at 2,703,000,000 bu, with an average yield of 25.8 bu per acre, comparing with 2,094,000,000 bu in 1930, when it was the smallest since 1901, and with a five year average of 2,761,000,000 bu. The figures were somewhat larger than anticipated by the trade as the private returns showed an average of 2,661,000,000 bu. However, there was a net reduction of 12,000,000 bu as compared with the September returns. Dry and hot weather in September west of the Missouri river was largely responsible for the loss sustained during the last month.

See Higher Oats Yield.

Threshing returns on oats showed a better yield than expected and the estimated yield of 1,174,000,000 bu was 13,000,000 bu in excess of the September returns, but 184,000,000 bu less than the harvest of 1930 and 143,000,000 bu under the average of the last five years. Estimates on barley were raised 4,000,000 bu over the preceding month, but the yield of 216,000,000 bu is 19,000,000 bu under the harvest of 1930. Minor changes were shown in the yield of other grain and in hay.

Indicated yield of leading grains as given by the government report with the last six ciphers omitted follow:

FIND SENTIMENT FAVORS COPPER IMPORT TARIFF

Commission Hearings to Start Oct. 28.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Oct. 10.—Sentiment among domestic producers of copper in favor of a protective tariff on the metal is so strong that even producers who are opposed to such a tariff admit that the chances of a levy by congress are excellent, if not this year, then in 1932. The tariff commission recently announced that it would hold hearings on the proposal for an import duty on copper, starting Oct. 28.

In response to the agitation for a duty on imported copper the commission recently assigned Myron T. Walker, one of its investigators to make a survey of the industry in the United States. The investigation is being made for the purpose of determining the cost of production here and abroad. According to the commission the survey does not call for recommendations on the advisability of a tariff.

Producers Behind Move.

It was stated today in well informed quarters that American copper producers are almost unanimously behind the movement for a copper tariff. The opposition has been reduced to two or perhaps three companies, it is understood. Those include the Anaconda Copper Mining company, largest unit in the industry.

The position of the Kennecott Copper corporation, which rivals Anaconda in size, is said to be neutral on the question of a copper tariff. The Phelps Dodge corporation, third largest producer, is understood to favor a tariff. The numerous small independent producers are solidly for one.

The opposition of the Anaconda Copper Mining corporation to a protective duty is explained, it is said, by the fact that its low cost mines are located in Chile. Its large American mines are higher cost properties. The Kennecott Copper corporation also owns important low cost copper mines in Chile. It exports its Chile copper directly to France, however, under contract with a large French fabricating company in Havre, with the result that a protective tariff on foreign copper would not hit as hard as the Anaconda, which imports copper for domestic consumption. Kennecott has very low cost domestic production, however, to offset what it may lose on imports.

Tariff Views Vary.

So far as foreign trade is concerned foreign copper could be imported under bond, refined and even fabricated, and then reshipped abroad without becoming subject to a protective duty and without competing in the United States with domestic copper.

The demands for a tariff vary. Some producers are insisting that as high a tariff as 10 cents a pound, or 150 per cent of the current selling price of copper, should be levied. The more conservative tariff advocates suggest 4 cents a pound, with others compromising between the two extremes. Advocates allege that a duty would result in advancing the price of copper in the domestic market, with the result that mining would be restored to a profitable basis and American wage scales could be maintained against low wages of foreign competitors.

Those who are antagonistic to a tariff, argue that it would fail to advance the domestic price of copper in anything like the ratio of the duty imposed, but simply would depress the foreign market, with the result that the differential between the two would be barely sufficient to keep out foreign copper. It is contended also that retaliatory legislation abroad would follow.

PUTS RATE BOOST FAMILY COST AT ONE CENT A DAY

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Oct. 10.—If the pending application of the railroads for a 15 per cent increase in freight rates is granted, the cost of ten selected necessities to the average American family would be increased by less than 1 cent a day, or by $3.06 annually, according to the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad in a statement published in its magazine. The average family, it is explained, spends $3.93 annually on chewing gum alone.

In the analysis the length of haul was based on the average distance a commodity would travel in the usual course of marketing. Fgures were taken from current official statistics.

Hysteria and the Market.

The owner of a good stock or bond who becomes alarmed by rumors and sells at a low price without first having made a thorough investigation to determine whether or not the rumors can be substantiated has not only incurred a personal loss that may have been unnecessary but he has contributed to the general demoralization.

If an investor sells after checking carefully the available information on the company in which he has placed his money and after finding that there is good reason for the low price of its securities it is one thing.

If he merely watches the quotations and listens to gossip and then sells without investigating it is quite another.

In the latter case he is acting on impulse and is basing his decision not on intelligent reasoning but upon his emotional reaction to a set of circumstances that may have nothing to do with the value of the security involved.

Quotations represent merely prices at which transactions are made and when a considerable portion of the sales of any one issue are made by persons acting on impulse the levels at which they are made are likely not to reflect a fair estimate of value.

That market prices can be readily warped by hysteria was well illustrated in 1929 when securities were changing hands at ridiculously high levels. There was no reason for the fancy prices then except that a lot of people were willing to pay them because a lot of other people had the same idea.

What the prices were saying then was, in effect, that the earnings of corporations were going to be doubled, tripled or quadrupled in a very short time. What they are saying now is that these same corporations are headed for the scrap heap. It seems reasonable to believe that the possibility of error is as great now as it was back in the delirious days of 1929. Emotions figure as strongly in transactions today as they did then, but they are different emotions.

There have been depressions before, and while they lasted the general gloom was as thick as it has been during this one. In the past the law of compensation has worked and the extent of the deflation has corresponded pretty well with the extent of the preceding period of inflation. The headache has followed the spree.

DRY GOODS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—Cotton goods sales were steadied today, without any change in prices. Rayon prices were slow and prices on rayon goods were weaker. Wool goods were quiet. Burlaps were unchanged. Silk goods were selling moderately and the retail trade has become more active with the cooler weather.

N. Y. EXCHANGE SHARES REGAIN SIX BILLION SINCE UPTURN START

New York, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Shares on the New York Stock exchange had regained some $6,000,000,000 of quoted value or had appreciated roughly 20 per cent since the floodgates of selling were driven shut on Tuesday. In percentage gain, this surpasses any advance in any five consecutive days shown in available records covering many years.

The recovery in market value of the outstanding stocks of several leading corporations in the last five days has been enormous. For American Telephone, it exceeds $300,000,000, and General Motors, $200,000,000. The common stock capitalizations of United States Steel, Standard Oil of New Jersey, and Pennsylvania railroad have recovered from $70,000,000 to $90,000,000.

HIDE FUTURES

Hide futures on the New York Hide exchange closed from 3 points lower to 10 points higher. Total sales, 1,200,000 lbs.

General improvement in sentiment following the announcement of the plan initiated by President Hoover to relieve the depression coupled with more favorable developments within the hide industry during the latter part of the week checked the decline of the first two days and was held largely responsible for the influx of buying orders on Thursday and Friday which carried hide futures prices on the New York Hide exchange from 65 to 83 points net higher for the week ended Oct. 9. Spot hides, both domestic and Argentina, also displayed an improved tone as the week closed.

PERU MUST TAKE ITS FINGERPRINTS TO POLLS TODAY

1st Presidential Election Since Revolution.

BY C. N. GRIFFIS.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LIMA, Peru, Oct. 10.—When Peru's 400,000 voters go to the polls tomorrow to elect a president and a constitutional assembly of 145 members they will take with them their fingerprints and photographs. It will be the first presidential election since former President Augusto B. Leguia, now in prison, was overthrown in the August revolution a year ago.

During the 11 year dictatorship of Leguia, the Peruvian became so indifferent to elections that only 160 persons voted in the last election for a mayor of Lima. But tomorrow they will flock to the polls. The chief reason is that under the new electoral laws every male citizen over the age of 21 is required to cast a ballot under the penalty of a heavy fine.

Even Churches Will Close.

Another reason is that the presidential campaign has been a bitter and hotly contested one.

All places where liquor is sold have been closed for three days, and all churches, theaters, and other places of public assembly will be closed tomorrow. A well trained national police force is the strongest guarantee of an impartial and peaceful election, and for the first time in Peru's history the voters may mark their ballots secretly.

Four presidential candidates are in the race. They are Lieut. Col. Sanchez Cerro, 42, a pugnacious soldier and a veteran revolutionist; Victor Raul Haya de La Torre, 36, orator, publicist, and an Oxford university man; Arturo Osores, 61, lawyer and veteran politician, and José Maria de La Jara y Ureta, 55, journalist. Larco Herrera, a wealthy planter, withdrew his nomination last week.

Two Leading Candidates.

The two first named candidates, Sanchez Cerro and La Torre, have by far the largest popular following. Demonstrations by their adherents have afforded Lima's public a series of Roman holidays through blood spilling and head cracking.

The Peruvian electoral laws provide that the winning candidate must secure a minimum of 25 per cent of the valid votes polled. It is expected that a very large number of blank or invalid votes will be cast. The final returns are certain to be slow in coming in, as all the voting urns must be taken to the 23 departmental capitals by the postal authorities for counting.

In the event of a contest over the question of the legality of polling procedure or of count, it is expected that the contest will be thrown into congress, or possibly the Supreme court. In such an event the election would eventually go to congress with the existing government junta sitting as umpire.

CONTRACT THAT BARS UNION IS RULED AS LEGAL

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Labor contracts forbidding employés to unionize under penalty of discharge were upheld in a majority opinion handed down by the State Supreme court here late yesterday.

The contracts are the type branded by labor leaders as "yellow dog" contracts and the ruling was on an appeal from decision of Common Pleas court of Northampton county in the Nazareth Hosiery mill cases.

While the lower court was upheld in the majority opinion, written by Chief Justice Frazier, Justice George Maxey of Lackawanna county wrote a minority opinion bitterly denouncing the so-called yellow dog contracts.

All other justices concurred in the majority opinion, and Justice Kephart wrote a separate opinion substantiating it.

The appeal was filed by L. F. Budenz, a labor leader. Despite an injunction, Budenz went ahead with his campaign and was held in contempt. His appeal to the Supreme court followed.

"Oppressive bargainers are outcasts in a court of equity," Judge Maxey wrote in his dissenting opinion.

BLACKMAILER IS SLAIN AS HE RUNS FROM POLICE

Monessen, Pa., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—A blackmail suspect, shot in the back, died here today as a result of a bungling effort to mulct Mayor Carl E. Woodward of "thousands of dollars."

As Michael Kacik, 36, died, state police said, handwriting samples completed the chain of evidence against him.

Kacik was shot as he fled the spot where a decoy package had been deposited at noon yesterday after glimpsing the uniform of one of two state policemen who had secreted themselves in a nearby shanty.

Woodward appealed to state police after receiving three letters, in each of which death was threatened.

$2,500 in Wooden Leg, but Now She Must Pay State

Boise, Idaho, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Mrs. Emma Gilman's leg, the one with the money in it, has yielded the state $1,714. A few weeks ago it was discovered that Mrs. Gilman, an inmate of the state asylum for the insane at Orofino, had concealed $2,500 in the hollow of her wooden leg. She had been cared for as a charity patient for five years. A suit was started in Shoshone county District court for "back board" at the rate of a dollar a day. The state won, Lewis Williams, commissioner of public welfare, was advised today.

Five Killed as Mexican Transport Plane Crashes

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 10.—Five persons were killed yesterday as a transport airplane bound from Mexico City to Leon crashed at a hacienda northwest of Toluca, about 100 miles from the federal capital. Two of the victims were Pilot Ray E. Salomon of Torreon, Mexico, and Alicia A. de la Serna of Mexico City. The other three were not identified.

PHYSICIAN TO TELL OF FIRST ATTEMPT TO POISON TWO GIRLS

Lebanon, Ind., Oct. 10.—Testimony that Alice Jean and Virginia Simmons were poisoned with bichloride of mercury administered in small doses three weeks prior to their deaths supposedly from strychnine poisoning at the Pollard Simmons picnic, here June 21, is expected to be offered Monday by the state at the trial of their mother, Mrs. Carrie Barrett Simmons, Hancock county farmwife.

Dr. R. N. Harger, Indianapolis toxicologist, who examined the vital organs of the poison victims as a part of the autopsy conducted by Dr. G. A. Owsley, Boone county coroner, has said he found evidences of bichloride of mercury in the course of his examination and the state plans to introduce him Monday as a witness against Mrs. Simmons and attempt to have him tell of his finding on the legal theory that it is a relevant part of the autopsy.

Dr. Harger has reported, according to the state's counsel, Ben M. Scifres and Roy W. Adney, that the organs of the girls showed the scars of mercury poisoning to a pronounced degree and the condition of the issue was such as to indicate the poison had been administered in small doses and in the case of Virginia Simmons had been almost sufficient to produce death.

TRIED 3 TIMES AS SLAYER OF 7; NOW HE IS FREE

Once 'Confessed,' Then Denied Guilt.

El Dorado, Kas., Oct. 10.—(AP)—Murder charges against Owen Oberst, farm youth, accused of killing his parents and five brothers and sisters in 1928, when he was 17 years old, were dismissed today.

County Attorney R. C. Woodward said he believed it would be impossible to obtain another jury following three trials which ended in disagreement as to a verdict.

Oberst pleaded guilty several months after the seven bodies were found in the ruins of the Oberst farm home, which was destroyed by fire the night of April 20, 1928.

Sentence Set Aside.

He was sentenced to life imprisonment and served several months, but the sentence was set aside by the state Supreme court, which held that confessions had been extorted from him and that he was not given proper legal representation.

In the subsequent trials the youth denied the killings. He said he found the house on fire when he returned from a motion picture show in Florence, Kas.

Told of "Quarrel."

In the alleged confessions he was represented as saying he had quarreled with his father over the use of the family motor car and killed the family one by one, then set fire to the house to cover the crimes. Bullets were found in several of the charred bodies.

Disposition of the estate of W. F. Oberst, the father, which is estimated between $20,000 and $50,000, remains to be decided in court.

WALL ST. BANK BUILDING UNSAFE; ORDERED RAZED

New York, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The First National Bank building, 2 Wall street, was declared unsafe this afternoon and ordered razed. Building operations at 16 Wall street, adjoining, disclosed a six inch settlement in the foundations. The bank will move out of the building tomorrow.

Removal of the structure, which is ten stories high and fifty-three years old, will be begun Monday.

Meanwhile, and until the building is demolished, police guards have closed Broadway on one side for a block from the structure and on Wall street from Broadway to Nassau street.

Samuel Fassler, head on the Manhattan bureau of buildings, and a number of officials of the bank were at the building this afternoon. Mr. Fassler's final inspection led to the order for demolition.

The building had been under observation for three months.

George F. Baker Jr. is chairman of the board of the bank, which, it is believed, will occupy temporary quarters in the Federal Reserve building.

HUSBAND BALKS AT KEEPING GIRL CHUM FOR WIFE

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 10.—[U. P.]—Alva F. Hughes, formerly of Long Beach, Cal., but now a local resident, was willing to support his wife but drew the line on supporting her "girl chum."

In filing suit for divorce here yesterday, Hughes said that when he lived on the Pacific coast his wife insisted on having an "Ann McKay," her closest friend, live with them. When he refused to agree, he said, his wife left him.

Five Molds for Casting Bogus Coins Are Found

Geneseo, Ill., Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Five plaster molds, evidently designed for the counterfeiting of half dollars, were found yesterday by a section crew of the Rock Island railway. Sheriff Fred Swanson of Henry county stated that slugs cast in the molds would be good imitations of genuine coins, and he immediately communicated with federal authorities, who will make an investigation.

I HAVE A POSITION
BUT I WANT TO CHANGE.

Departmental head of an established Chicago firm, who, in spite of conditions, has recently been given a 10% increase in salary, desires to change the field of his activities.

ALTHOUGH THE POSITION I NOW HOLD OFFERS EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR ADVANCEMENT, I do not believe I have found my life work. For this reason and because I intend to achieve my ambition of becoming a writer, for which I have studied, I have the courage to make a change.

I am 31 years old and hold a responsible position. Have university education, varied and broad experience in the business field; ability to handle difficult situations, and a capacity for hard work. Can furnish surety bond, excellent recommendations and unquestionable references.

The position I seek, though not necessarily offering large remuneration, must have financial security. Should like a position that might take me out of Chicago or even out of the country. However, it must not be too specialized in subject. What I want is a position that offers intellectual opportunities first and financial opportunities second.

Write fully and without equivocation. Address Postoffice Box 1944, Chicago.

Need $500?

Send Me Your Name

I'll Show You How to Get It!

If you can use $500 let me tell you about a new, simple, interesting way to get it. I'll show you how to get the money you need for new clothes, new furniture, a radio, etc. You can start right in. You don't have to take any course of training. You don't need any capital or experience. I'll give you a chance to make as much money as you want. All you do is follow a few simple instructions. David Cramer of Missouri, who used to work hard for $3 a day, now says: "I can make $10 to $15 a day without effort." John T. Tyler of Pennsylvania has often made $30 to $35 in a day with my proposition. Mrs. Eva McCutchen of Oklahoma made $33 the first 7 hours. Of course, some people make more than others. But these big earnings of a few of my Representatives show the wonderful opportunities.

$125 IN A SINGLE WEEK

I am President of a million-dollar manufacturing company. We distribute Groceries and other Household Necessities direct from factory to user through Authorized Local Representatives. We have thousands of customers in every state. Last year they bought fifteen million packages of our products. This put nearly TWO MILLION DOLLARS in the pockets of my Representatives. Now I invite YOU to share in these huge profits. You simply call on your friends, neighbors and my established customers in your locality and take care of orders. They MUST order from you because I never sell through stores. So you alone get the profits. L. C. Van Allen of Illinois tried my plan and made $125 IN A SINGLE WEEK. Arthur Zabel of Minnesota cleared $20.00 the first day. Mrs. R. E. Wilson of North Carolina made a profit of $19.20 one afternoon from 2 o'clock until 6 o'clock. How long will it take YOU to make $500 at this rate? I don't say that everybody can do as well as these men and women, but their splendid success PROVES what unusually big money can be made.

SEND NO MONEY

Just send me your name so I can show you how to get started. There's no red tape or delay. I furnish complete information without cost or obligation to you. Your own home will be your headquarters. You set your own hours and work as you please—FULL TIME OR SPARE TIME. I also offer you a brand new Ford Tudor Sedan as an extra bonus—IN ADDITION to your large cash profits. If you want $500 for pleasant work; get the facts at once. This opportunity is too good to miss. Mail coupon today—SURE.

Commonwealth Customers Pay LESS for LOANS

$2.86 is the Average Monthly Cost of a $225 loan under COMMONWEALTH'S Reduced Rate. This allows 25 months for repayment. There is no lower cost than this in Chicago.

COMMONWEALTH'S rate on amounts above $100 is substantially lower than the lawful rate usually charged.

THE personal property which nearly every family owns and the signature of husband and wife enable one to secure any amount up to $300 quickly and easily.

THERE ARE NO fees or deductions. You may take 25 months or pay all or part sooner. Interest, at the Reduced Rate, is charged only while you keep the money.

Why pay more than Household's low rate?

The Nationally known Household Loan Plan offers cash loans of $50 to $300 to husbands and wives at reasonable rates.

Household's rate on all loans above $100 is almost one-third lower than the maximum permitted by the small-loan law. We voluntarily established this low rate in 1928, and our customers have benefited ever since. This rate remains the same until the loan is paid off. It does not increase as the unpaid balance decreases.

For example:

The average monthly cost of a $200 loan, repaid in 20 equal monthly payments, is $2.63. This is the lowest cost in Chicago.

SELLS AUTO in Twenty Minutes!

MRS. E. FITZGERALD, 1405 Jarvis Avenue, knows how quickly a used car can be sold when right selling methods are used! Here is what she says of her experience.

"When my son went to California he decided not to take his Packard car, and placed a want ad in the Chicago Sunday Tribune, offering it for $2100. On Sunday morning, as we were leaving for church, the door bell rang, and a man who had seen the ad inquired about the car. After testing it, he offered $2000, and in 20 minutes the deal was arranged. I think that was a quick sale."

Quick sales are more frequently possible when the offer to sell is placed where the largest number of prospects can see it. A want ad in the Tribune can be seen by 146,000 more families in Chicago and suburbs than any other Chicago newspaper. Have you a used car to offer them? Call Superior 0100, and ask for an Adtaker!

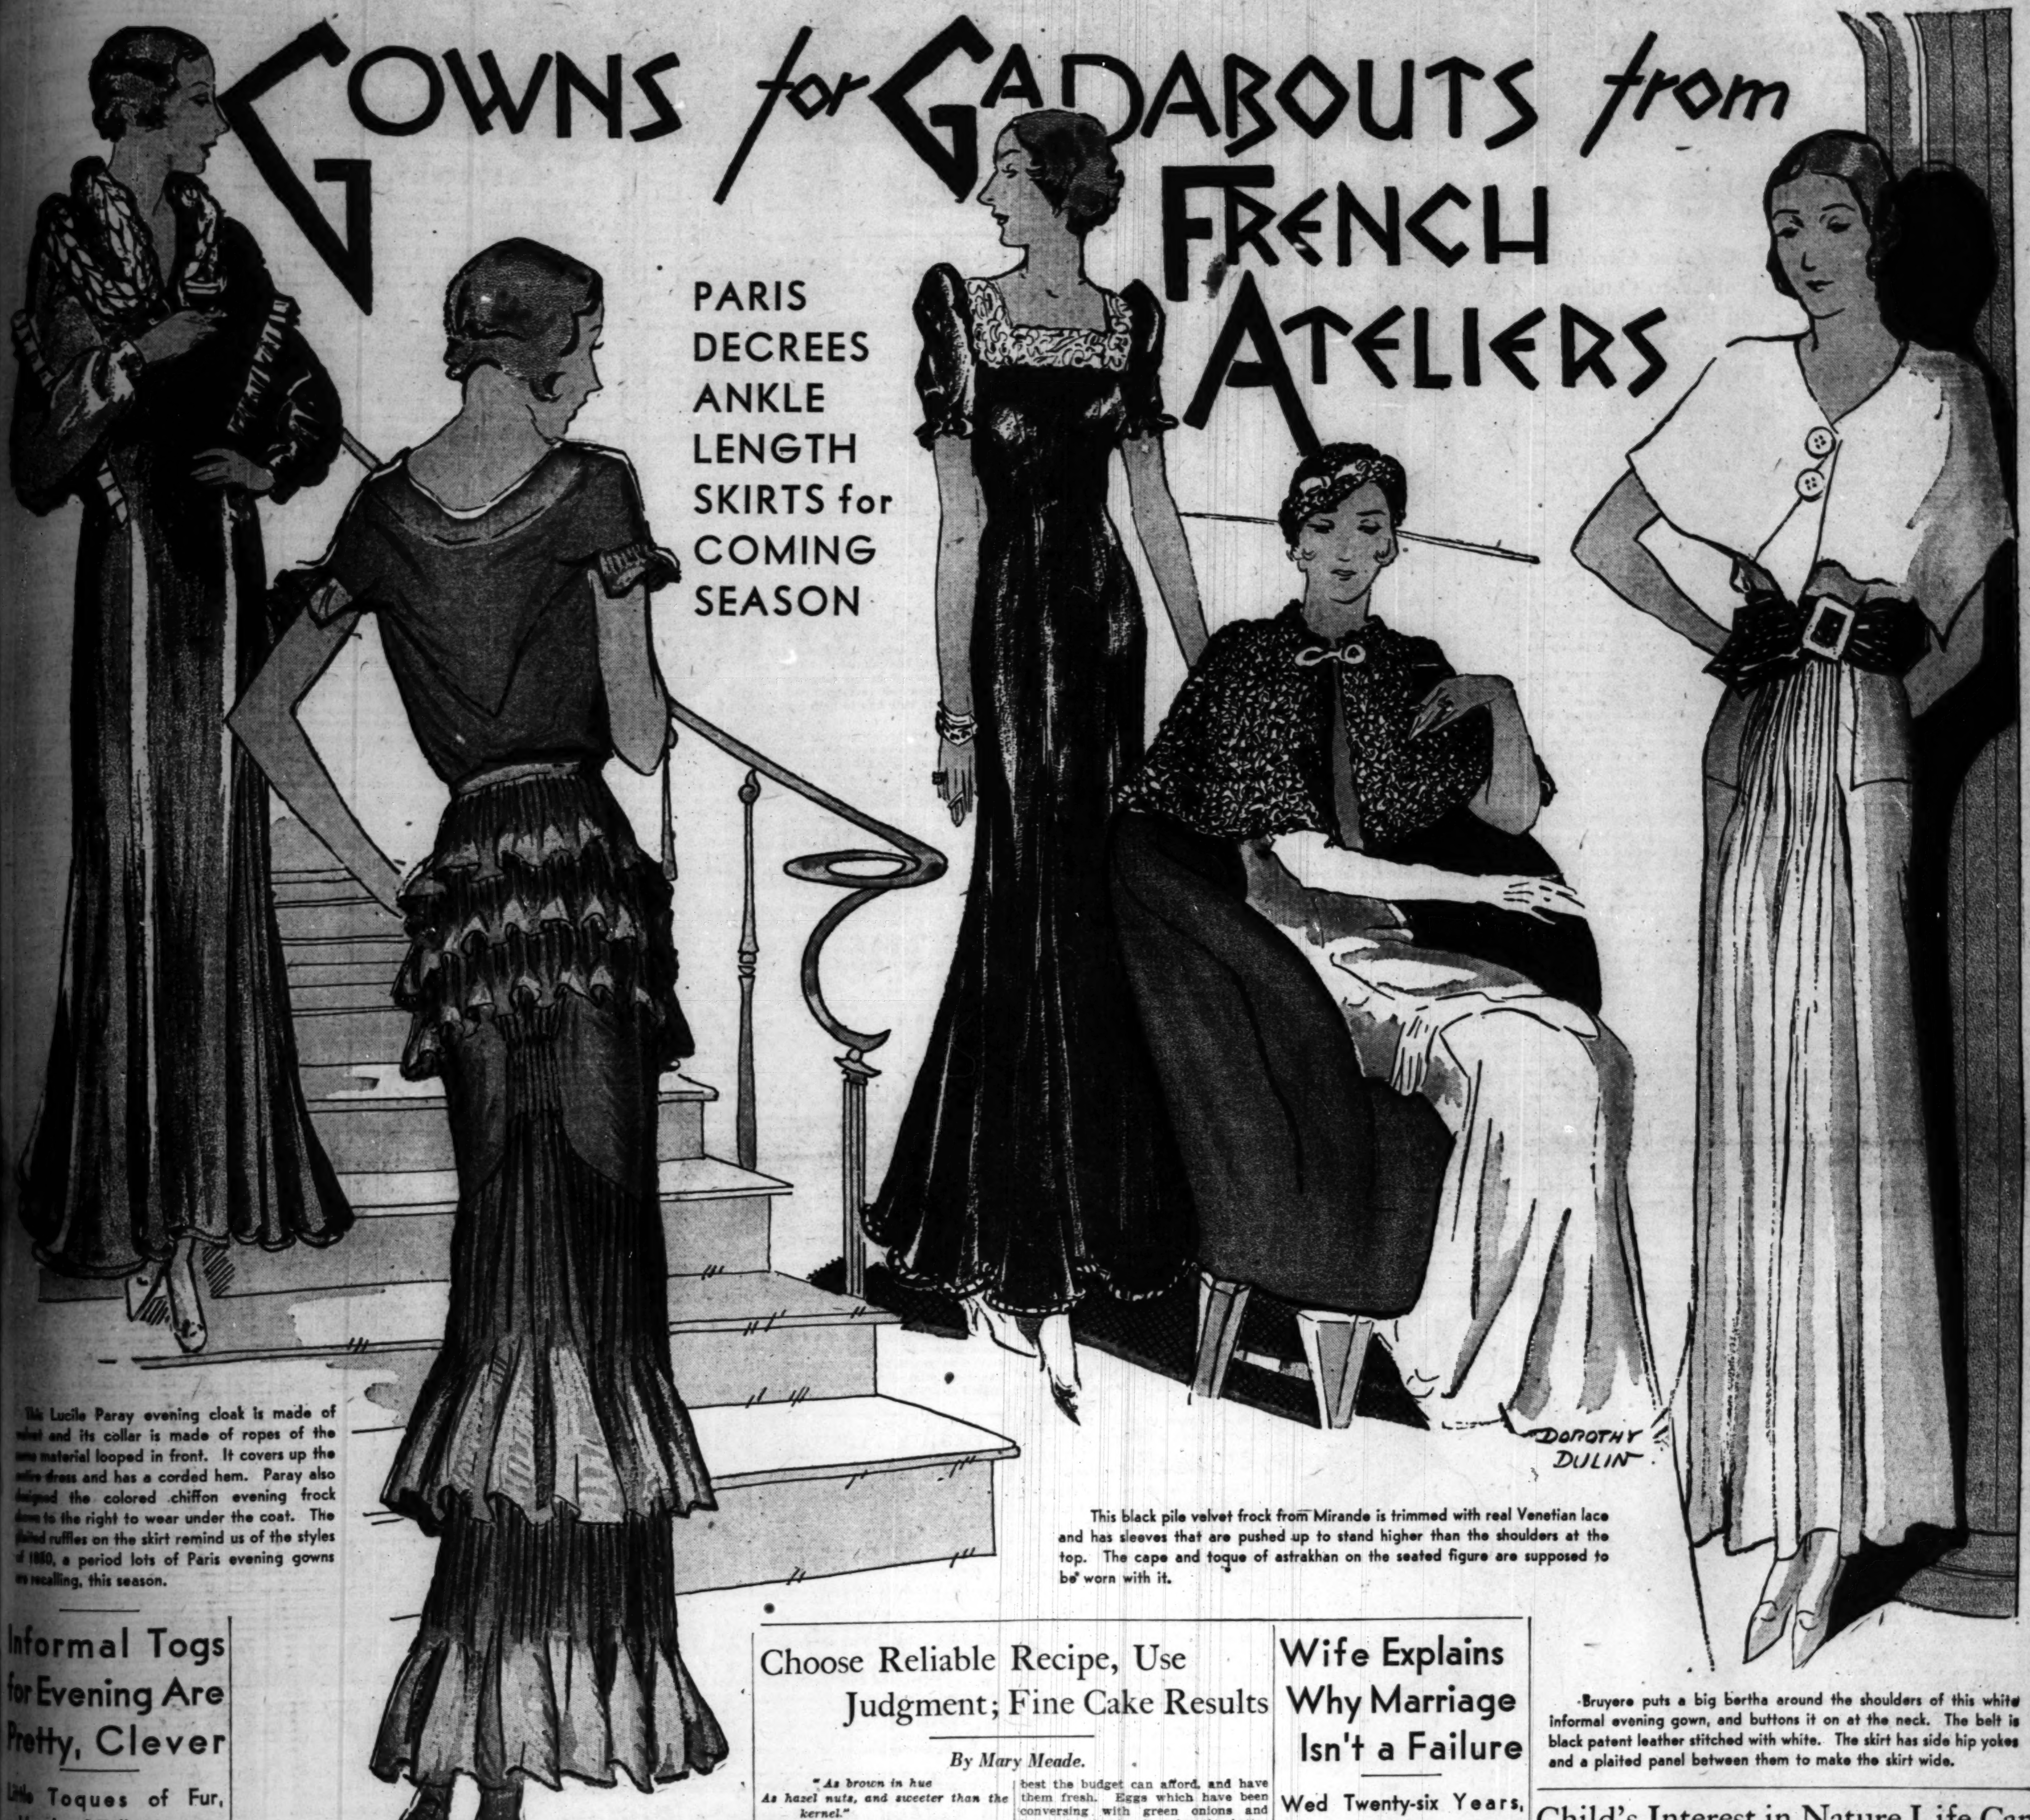
GOWNS for GADABOUTS from FRENCH ATELIERS

PARIS DECREES ANKLE LENGTH SKIRTS for COMING SEASON



This Lucile Paray evening cloak is made of velvet and its collar is made of ropes of the same material looped in front. It covers up the entire dress and has a corded hem. Paray also designed the colored chiffon evening frock down to the right to wear under the coat. The plaited ruffles on the skirt remind us of the styles of 1880, a period lots of Paris evening gowns are recalling, this season.

This black pile velvet frock from Mirande is trimmed with real Venetian lace and has sleeves that are pushed up to stand higher than the shoulders at the top. The cape and toque of astrakhan on the seated figure are supposed to be worn with it.

Bruyere puts a big bertha around the shoulders of this white informal evening gown, and buttons it on at the neck. The belt is black patent leather stitched with white. The skirt has side hip yokes and a plaited panel between them to make the skirt wide.

Informal Togs for Evening Are Pretty, Clever

Little Toques of Fur, Hoods of Tulle Accompany Them.

PARIS.—[Special.]—About half the smart evening clothes that step out around Paris these long October nights are in the new gadabout version. The dresses, compared to those bare backed, trailing skirted frocks that have been our idea of evening chic, look like daytime frocks. The coats cover up the frocks in the manner of smart daytime wraps.

These clothes are the answer to the maiden's prayer for something to wear that will be right as right and yet not out and out formal evening. They are the response to the demands of fashionable, luxurious women, also since the smart world, as Paul Poiret put it, have "taken to the bistrot," they have to be outfitted in something new in the way of evening clothes.

The movies, the boxing arena, the little casino at Enghien, the picturesque little restaurants at the Halles au Vins are no place for floor sweeping white chiffons, nude backs, and diamond and sapphire bracelets. And no more are our own movies, however palatial, nor our other popular amusement places.

To Meet a Need.

Therefore this fresh kind of evening clothes. And therefore, also, the adaptation of lots of daytime dress features to them. Evening décolletés this winter, even the most formal, are more covered than for a long time. Décolletés of the informal dress often just aren't. Necks are trim and built up to the high mark that prevails for day. Skirts, too, come up and are no more than ankle-length, if they're that long. Jean Patou is showing some of his dresses in this category with skirts that are a good eight inches from the floor. In all cases they are short enough to show all the slippers and some of the dark bronze beige stockings that are so smart for evening in Paris.

Practically every informal, gadabout evening dress seen in Paris has sleeves of sorts. Some of them have real long sleeves, and in this case the necks are generally cut lower, at least in back. Long bishop sleeves in velvet frocks for informal evening are split from wrist to shoulder cap so that the arm is visible. Lots of these dresses have modified angel sleeves, and heaps of them have tiny puffed or kimona sleeves. Some have only berthas covering the upper arm, and others have double or single short cape sleeves.

Jeanne Lanvin presents dresses of this type in two piece versions, and they're knockouts. They have jumper bodices, extending to the hips, with cowl necklines, daytime height, and these bodices are covered with silver applique. The skirts are sunburst plaited and ankle length. She makes them of chiffon, georgette, and velvet.

The one piece dress with a velvet bodice and a skirt of chiffon, or crêpe, or satin, is another new type in the informal evening dress class as seen b, Paris. Lelong first showed the dress with a velvet bodice and a chiffon skirt last season, and everybody has taken it up this fall and winter.

Evening Wraps.

All velvet, informal evening frocks are as frequent as dandelions in June, and there are a significant number of satin dresses, too. Evening coats to wear with these dresses are more frequently than not made of velvet, but there are a number of broadcloth evening coats, too, and, of course, lots of fur cloaks.

Paris is making quite a feature of

PARIS SNAPSHOTS

Bronze opera pumps, introduced by Patou, are chic for afternoon, this winter. In the evening they're replaced by pumps of bronze satin.

The winter bride will be clad in panne velvet, according to Jeanne Lanvin, who shows stunning bridal robes in this material, with short veils of tulle.

Jackets and coats are inheriting some military details, such as frog fastenings, standing collars, and epaulettes.

Vionnet's smartest coat collars this season are made of ermine and have long ends that cross in front and button on at the back of the waistline something like an old fashioned fichu.

The old fashioned six and eight gored skirt that flares like a bell is right back in style for sports and street wear.

Choose Reliable Recipe, Use Judgment; Fine Cake Results

By Mary Meade.

> "As brown in hue
> As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernel."

EVERY woman likes to make a melt-in-your-mouth-when-you-taste-it cake. Sometimes she achieves it, though more often she does not. In her ignorance she blames her failure on the recipe, the cake pan, or her oven. Perhaps all three! Yet it is not hard to make a good cake, and my statement is addressed to the amateur as well as the experienced cook.

Cake making and other forms of cookery are frequently referred to by writers as an art or a science. One of Webster's definitions for the word "art," as an "application of knowledge and skill in affecting a desired result," is true of cake making. The woman who follows a recipe in the light of her own good judgment will turn out delicious cakes. For, you know, you all have good judgment—though there are occasions when you neglect to bring it with you to the kitchen.

Before starting a cake the cook should read through her recipe. "What an unnecessary instruction to give," you are thinking. But I know women who have a tendency to start mixing a cake batter without doing just that. Then they find themselves lacking in a certain flavoring, or sufficient cake flour, and they make hasty substitutes which are unsatisfactory. Afterwards, they wonder what on earth is the matter with their cakes!

If it isn't a lack of proper ingredients they encounter, they happen on difficulties such as the whites of eggs being whipped before the batter is ready for them, and the whites losing some of their fluffiness so essential to a good cake. No matter how many cakes you have made in your lifetime, it won't hurt you to study each recipe prior to using it.

Use Best Ingredients.

Next in point of importance to consider are the ingredients. Use the best the budget can afford, and have them fresh. Eggs which have been conversing with green onions and bacon in the ice box for the better part of the week will not make a good cake. Their porous shells permit them to absorb odors, and also to experience an evaporation of water with dissolved carbon dioxide present. This means that the character of the yolk and the white are changed; the latter loses its gelatine-like consistency, while the former takes on some of the water previously in the whites. Stale eggs can be used, of course, but the resulting texture of the cake is not of the same degree of fineness evident in a "fresh egg" cake.

The housewife can always tell when an egg is fresh by its appearance when broken into a dish. The yolk will often break when the egg is cracked, and it flattens out instead of remaining in a spherical shape. The white is thinner, and not firm and clear.

Shortening, liquid, and flour should be as fresh as the eggs. And when I refer to the last mentioned ingredient I mean a pastry flour. It has many advantages over the bread flour which was used years ago. More finely milled than the other, cake flour also contains less gluten and is a pure white. These qualities help to make a fine grained cake, and an attractive one. If you should chance to be caught short on baking day without it and have to use an all purpose flour, remember that one cup of bread flour is the equivalent of one cup plus two tablespoonfuls of pastry flour, and substitute in the recipe accordingly.

Follow These Rules.

Technique — how formidable the word sounds—of mixing and baking a cake need not frighten the amateur. Cake requires a trifle more effort than shaping and broiling hamburg patties. A few rules, followed religiously, will earn you fame as a maker of cakes. Always cream the shortening well, and

Wife Explains Why Marriage Isn't a Failure

Wed Twenty-six Years, Avoids Spats, Keeps Alive Play Instinct.

By Doris Blake.

FED up on why marriages fail? Would you like to hear something about why they don't? Just for a change?

O, yes, you cynics, with your divorce statistics handy, the woods are full of men and women extracting from the poor abused old institution just about as beautifully rounded out lives as is within the power of the gods to bestow on mortal.

They're met up with fairly often. You know some. I know some. Your neighbor knows some. Added altogether, they make quite a showing, if you're reasonably openminded. The trouble is that the "happies" don't make such good copy. They don't get into print at all. They don't fight with their neighbors. They don't commit murders, nor liaisons.

Yes, father explodes even in the best of families, but in these best we're talking about mother doesn't explode at the same time. They don't go in much for Freudian analyses, so their complexes aren't much bother around the house. Whether they're introverts or extraverts doesn't concern them one hang, so long as father brings home the bacon and mother sees that it gets on to the table a nice, crisp brown.

Cling to Old Fashioned Ideals.

In fact, if you follow these contentedly wed around for a year, you wonder how they escape all the disturbing modern influences. They adapt themselves readily enough to all of the modern advantages—but they remain

Child's Interest in Nature Life Can Be Nourished by Wise Reading

By Gladys Huntington Bevans.

THEY wandered across the field and suddenly a long, rather thick blackish snake slithered across their path and up into a baybush.

"I wonder what kind of snake that is," said the boy. "I think it was a black snake, but I'm not sure. I wish I knew."

Farther along, near a thicket of young birches at the edge of the wood, a small brown motor whirred up from their feet with startling suddenness.

"Could that have been a quail—it didn't seem exactly like one," the boy and his companion agreed.

The next spring found them determined not to wonder so much, but to know. Before the summer was over they could be sure of the adult black snake and the spotted younger one, of the water snake and the ribbon snake, and could distinguish the harmless milk snake from the venomous copperhead. The next time they flushed three or four whirring big birds they discovered, having inquired around the immediate country, that they were young pheasants—no quails ever having been seen there. This year no longer was the jellylike mass in the ditch a mystery, the clam shell near fresh water unexplainable. These and many other things were named and explained and it made the world of outdoors infinitely more interesting.

Plant and Animal Life.

The natural world has an appeal for all children. For some the greater interest will be in plant life; for others in animal. These interests will divide themselves again. One child will especially like birds, another the life of pond and stream, another the larger land animals. But the earliest appeal is that of the animals.

When these interests in the outdoors first show themselves, they consist mostly of liking and looking on, of watching in general and noticing in particular. Then the wondering begins—first, what is this and what is that? Then, how is it born? How old does it grow? What does it eat? Where does it live? If these questions can somehow be answered, the whole world has a deeper meaning and a deeper interest. The more they know, the deeper the meaning and the interest.

The seeing eye for the natural world is something most children possess. But their observation can't be complete and continuous for every fascinating animal or plant they see. There must be gaps in their knowledge. There must be things they haven't time to wait for, questions they can't answer. How can these questions be answered? With books, if no learned naturalist is at hand.

Reading Helps.

Children's own observation and first hand knowledge are best and must come first, of course, before they turn to books. But reading feeds observation and observation feeds reading. The latter will often nourish a persistent and worthwhile interest which might not otherwise develop at all.

Frequently the interest in the nat-rather old fashioned in their relationship to each other and to their families.

We had the good fortune to meet up recently with a wife—a mother and her husband's sweetheart—after twenty-six years of married life. And when we say sweetheart we mean sweetheart. And of WHAT a MAN! The answer to every discontented wife's prayer. The symbol to the disappointed spinster of what life would have been had she accepted Jack back when she was in her twenties! Incidentally, have you noticed how women who have foregone matrimony for one reason or another always measure their disappointments with the hundred per cent Perfect Husband measuring rod? The man they missed, the married life they missed is ever the "perfect" variety.

But to get back to exhibit A, let's call her, in why marriages do not fail, and Mrs. S, for convenience sake.

Some one said that men instinctively know and like a happily married woman. She extends to other men the courtesy of understanding, appreciation, faith in and amiability toward them that her husband already enjoys. Mrs. S. that evening proved the theory. She was obviously the preferred one of the group. She is attractive. She tells you laughingly that she is the vainest woman in the world. That it takes her a couple of hours to get herself ready to go anywhere. Exaggerated, no doubt—but she looks the part of extremely nice personal care. "The older I get," she explains, "naturally, the more care I have to give myself."

Enhances Natural Charm.

Her husband now is a man of large means, so she is able to enhance her own gracious charms with beautiful dress. But they began on practically nothing a week twenty-six years ago. "And who," she queries, "is more important to fix up for than Billie?"

Lucky girls, those two daughters of hers! She has passed on to them the lessons learned from her own experience in matrimony. Billie has his moments when he is trying. She admits so has she. But her great game in marriage was never to let his and her bad moments meet. She doesn't try to tell those girls of hers that marriage with the man you love is one great jollification. She tells them that they'll have their dark moments; saddened hours; possibly hard years.

Life has no reason to let them escape, since better men and women than they have had their burdens to carry. She's trained her girls to be able to rustle up on short notice a meal that is good for both stomach and disposition. She's trained them in the spending of money wisely—and in spending on themselves wisely. The minute the way was open for her oldest girl, now married, to have a maid, she urged the getting of one. "You have to go along with that man a good many years," she told Mary. "Begin early and train yourself for a place beside him, no matter to what heights he may rise."

Keep Alive Play Instinct.

BUT the biggest lesson extended those girls perhaps comes with their mother's advice: "Don't forget how to play." "Keep that thing alive in you," she cautions, "that can let you laugh—and laugh aloud. Don't be afraid of what the neighbors say if they hear you laughing. Laugh. Laugh with the youngsters. Laugh with their father. Instead of looking for trouble, look for the thing that will give you a laugh."

Mrs. S. looks about at women of her own age, women whom the world appears to have been kind to but who are cheerless fireside companions of sometimes restive husbands—because they've forgotten how to play. That, in Mrs. S.'s opinion, writes finis to romance as well as youth. A sister, Mrs. S. points to, a beautiful woman, well married, with everything to smile about, but gone completely dead in the ability to play, to release herself for a little while every now and then from the serious mien that's come to be associated with her.

That, and being a woman, is Mrs. S.'s recipe for how to be your husband's sweetie after twenty-six years of married life. By being a woman she means not only plying the cosmetic arts expected in our day and age but being clean in speech, mind, and habit—and reservedly modest in the intimacies of domestic life.

Man Worthy of Love.

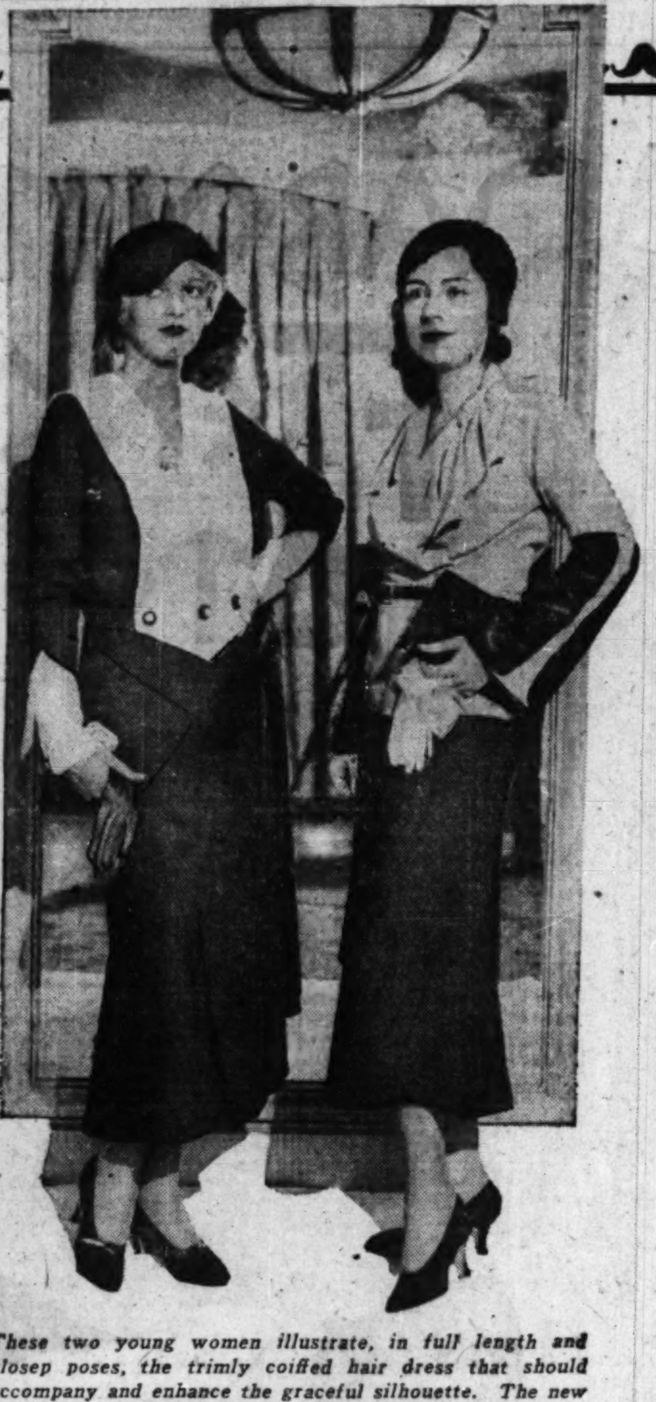
Of her Billie she tells with pride of his early return not long ago from a stag dinner at which the speaker delivered himself of certain stories worse even apparently than "not fit to print."

"Those are the things about a man you keep on loving him for," she tells. "What if he does blow off when he thinks I'm spending too much money? What if he does raise Cain when he is under some terrific business strain? What if he is unreasonable at times, if he's fine and clean and big and he's yours?

"When he gets his economical attacks and tells me I'm spending too much, I tell him 'Maybe it's true. It must be true if you say so, and I'll try to do better.' The truth is he knows it will be just the same and I know it will be just the same. And we both know we're rounding the corner of a quarrel and both glad of the escape."

"I say don't argue with them," concludes Mrs. S. "There are times when you have to be firm. But if you want your own way, the easiest way in the world to get it is not to quarrel about it."

Current Hair Silhouette



These two young women illustrate, in full length and closep poses, the trimly coiffed hair dress that should accompany and enhance the graceful silhouette. The new hat styles demand a coiffure that follows natural lines and the topheavy, windblown mop of hair has no place in the fall ensemble. [TRIBUNE Photos.]

Locks Are Carefully Trained to Outline and Enhance the Natural Beauty of a Well Shaped Head.

By Antoinette Donnelly.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—By this time you are pretty well aware of what the hair is going to do for or against you this fall and winter. If it isn't nice hair; if it isn't beautifully coiffed hair; if it isn't beautifully waved hair, you may just as well send back the new bonnet and wear last year's for all the good the former'll do you atop a poor looking head of hair.

If there ever was a season when you could let the ankles rest a bit while you went in for refurbishing other parts, it would be this one—but, of course, there isn't any such season. The ankles have to be kept up—or after, maybe, I should say.

So we'll call it the feature of keenest analysis—the hair—as it is cultivated for smart winter wear.

As the hats are developing with the passing weeks, instead of the moderated line one usually looks for with the settling down of any fashion that has been introduced with much ballyhoo—they're exposing the hair a bit more so, if anything. One-half of the head, save for a bit of slender ribbon, bowed, or a velvet "bell-boy" band, is seen, and if the hair is beautifully kept up, the hats are adorable.

Anyway, there is no mistaking nor understressing the fact that your hair is in for such a scrutiny as it has never known before—and it's known some scrutinizing.

Coiffure Change Due.

I just keep on wondering in the face of all the evidence to its disadvantage, why girls, young and not so, persist in wearing the hair in what used to be called the wind-blown style. Why they don't, every sister of them, go in for pruning out the heavy growth that makes hair stand out and away from the head. Perhaps it's a bob, or maybe long hair, you see that gives an exaggerated head circumference, a top-heavy effect, a non-tidy picture, due to the failure to have the hair kept thinned out underneath so that it can lie closer to the skull. Nor do I mean an exaggeratedly sleeked down, patent leather headed effect! That's not so good any more, either. I just mean a too full head of hair, whether it be short or long. Now if a girl takes to the new style chapeau, why not take to the new style coiffure. And that moppish effect went out a number of seasons back, really.

I think a goodly number of girls and women have the notion that the fluffed out hair does something kindly to their faces; softens them. But the truth is that it doesn't do nearly so much for the face, for the profile, for the chin and throat and back of the neck line as hair that is ruled into conformity with the slender silhouette for which the world of women strives.

That head should aim for just such a slender silhouette as the figure boasts or would like to boast. As a matter of fact, a woman can actually take off the look of pounds with a hair arrangement that gives a neat, close-to-the-scalp effect. That wide, round hair halo, being naturally what catches your eye first, plants the impression of width, breadth, and thickness which may not be present at all in the figure silhouette. Beside removing pounds, you can lop off painlessly anywhere from five to ten years.

Conforms to Silhouettes.

You don't see any of our fashion models, in the illustrated magazines, wearing their hair any more thickly than the full length silhouette calls for. The outline of their craniums are still pretty clear. The hair may be arranged very femininely—but there's no topheavy, wild windblown effect. There may be devastating curls attached or trained here and there—but they're not permitted to ruin the head contour.

Now for the winter showing. Look carefully to the shape of your head with hair. If it hasn't any shape, cultivate one. Get the shapely outline first, your waves, water, finger, marcel, or permanent afterward. But get the head shaped up first. To convince yourself, pin all that wad of hair down flat. Try even pulling it a bit tighter over the ears, leaving an ear lobe exposed. But pin it down so you can study your face with a hand mirror after the pinning. You may have to get used to yourself for a minute—but haven't you had to get used to yourself in the Eugénie skypiece. It has half revolutionized your style. Your hair has to help with the other half.

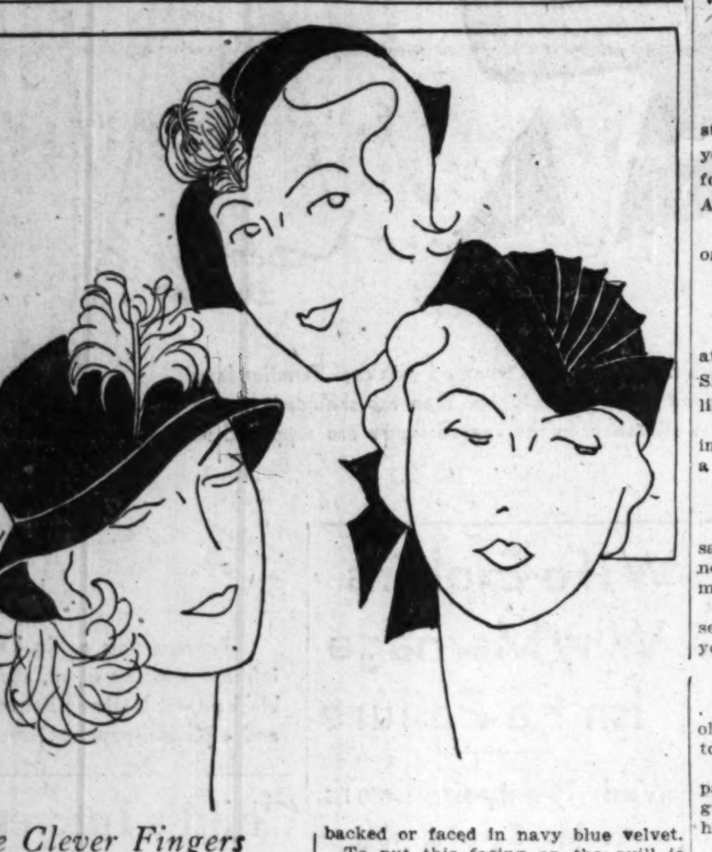
What if you are an entirely different looking person! You're supposed to be. The chances are you will be a far more interesting looking person if you shed all the old time hair ways for the new. And certainly with the closer-to-the-head arrangement you will be a far more chic person and, I'll wager, a much younger looking one. Also, you'll belong under the new style chapeau.

Look Over the Eyebrows.

Then, when you get your hair ruled down into a neater, trimmer course, look the eyebrows over. Eyebrows are having a lot to say these days when it comes to sizing up a girl's smartness. And with the cosmetic helps you can pretty nearly make a pair of them over completely. You can reshape them with the tweezers alone. You can reshape them with tweezers and a bit of cosmetic coloring. You can even have them dyed cleverly if you seek out a professional with a neat hand for this work. You can give your face that smartened up look that nothing can give it like a pair of well groomed eyebrows. And I'm not overstating their usefulness as a beauty asset when they've been made to conform to a graceful line. I have just seen one outstanding illustration of what aid to a face may be courted by eyebrow improvement. Honestly, the woman looked like another person with the unkempt brows shaped into a beautifully arched line, and it was really curious the difference made in the appearance of her eyes as a consequence of the smart eyebrow treatment.

Keeping up with Eugénie these days means sharpening up on hair and eyebrow style, or we may just as well plant last year's beret on the back of the head and date our correspondence. Fall, 1929.

Needlework



The Clever Fingers of the Amateur Milliner Can Fashion the Jaunty Little Hat Described Today.

By Clotilde.

WITH the tricorn, the Scotch cap, and the beguiling plumed derby in the mode there is no need to be without a smart, becoming hat this season. Seamed crowned, tucks, creases and folds are thought important because they get away from the regulation plain blocked hat. The points and dips of the off the face hat brims can easily be made by wiring the edge of the brim of the felt hat with a fine French wire, then adding a narrow binding of bias needlepoint velvet the color of the hat.

This is put on the edge. Frequently a small bow of the same velvet is tucked in some becoming place on the hat. Needlepoint velvet is a fabric which has been processed to make it supple and pliable. It also drapes wonderfully in those soft, small turbans.

Colorings in strong favor for fall wear are black, brown, and green. The billiard and kiltie green seem to be the favorites in this last named color.

Feathers and quills, both the curled and glycerined ostrich, are shown for trimmings. The quills are faced or backed with kid or velvet. Two quills are usually used on a hat, as for instance, one in white and one in Tallyho green, both faced with white kid, or one quill in gray and the other in navy blue and both backed or faced in navy blue velvet.

To put this facing on the quill is an easy matter. Lay the velvet or kid on the table wrong side up, paste well with milliner's glue or milliner's cement. Put the top of the quill or feather at the bias end of the material. Press the quill well on the material and let it dry.

Use sharp scissors to cut off the material close to the edge of the quill, as doing this makes it last longer.

Love Answers

Have you a perplexing love affair on which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care of The Chicago Tribune, Chicago, Ill., inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Old Friends Best.

"Dear Miss Blake: I have kept steady company with a fellow for a year and a half. I am giving him up for one I've only known a short time. Am I foolish? Blue Eyes."

It is unwise to make the decision on such short acquaintance.

Promising Indications.

"Dear Miss Blake: I met a girl at a dance and I asked her for a date. She said O. K. Does that mean she likes me? Iggy."

It means she has been favorably impressed when she is willing to make a date with you, Iggy.

Feeble Kind of Love.

"Dear Miss Blake: The boy who said he loves me went away. He does not write to me, but asks others about me. Chickie."

He would hardly be content with second hand information if he loved you.

Be Guided by Love.

"Dear Miss Blake: A man ten years older and a boy my own age both want to marry me. Bing."

When you come to choose a life partner, you should let love be the guiding factor. Love is essential to happiness.

Use the Telephone.

"Dear Miss Blake: I love a girl to whom I have not phoned or written in two or three months. Which should I do—write her or telephone? "Curly."

I should suggest the telephone. You'll have an opportunity to explain your silence and know directly whether she will welcome further calls.

WHEN Jimmie Krohne, popular young advertising specialist, hit the trail recently for San Antonio with the avowed intention of bringing back "the greatest girl of contemporary civilization," he carried with him a wedding band said to be one of the prettiest yet designed. The bride, who was formerly Miss Lucy Atrelle Chambers, is the sister of Mayor C. M. Chambers of San Antonio.

MRS. KROHNE.

It happened that a particular chum of the groom is a designer of fine jewelry. The circlet was the first piece ordered from a firm he had just organized, consequently it got scrupulous attention. It is a beautifully chaste, uncarved ring set with two small, well cut diamonds, then a baguette stone, a plain space corresponding to the baguette, then the same design repeated. The effect is as modern as it is novel.

The newlyweds are to live at 61 East Goethe.

Frank Chance bent an ear in the direction of a baritone warbling "I can't get over a girl like you," and sighed, "Ah—the hurdle song."

Masks seem to have come in with a rush. Some of the art shops are showing elaborate ones for wall decoration, but the palm for popularity goes to those cast from life. Casting parties are rather less messy than the taffy pull of our parents' day, and show signs of achieving much favor this winter among the younger generation—the older can't be bothered.

MISS WEISBECKER.

You have to have your face and a bit of the hair plastered with vaseline to be sure the cast won't stick once it's started to set. A towel protects the rest of the hair, and a cardboard box frame, cut to fit the features, keeps the plaster mixture on top where it belongs. Three or four minutes after it is poured onto the face the cast can be lifted off, permitted to harden for twenty minutes or so, then the mold is poured full of plaster and is left for half an hour or more. When the top is knocked off, there are your features.

Don Cass officiated at the activities a few days ago at which Louise Weisbecker and others were "sculped." While aluminum, bronze, and even the plain white finishes are popular, Louise preferred to have hers burnished and blackened. Natural tints are regarded as too deathlike. Several men have had their masks hollowed out and cast in aluminum.

Crashing the inner circles of society is a simple feat compared to the difficulty of percolating into the Capone trial without proper credentials. All the precedents were smashed when the United States District court issued specially printed passes allocating every chair in the sanctum in front of the railing to various journalists. These admit representatives "during Capone trial, to seat at press table assigned by custodian of Federal building." And had to be countersigned by city editors before they were signed by the United States marshal, before which they were, and are, useless.

As it was told to Lloyd Smith, some Legionnaires held a caucus at Detroit and unanimously voted Hoover the greatest engineer of all time—"because he drained, damned, and ditched the country all in one term."

Helen Bennett, who thought up the Women's World's fair and is now busy on the 1933 exposition, tossed off a fast one at the business women's luncheon last week. Said she: "Our pioneer women got a lot of credit for defending their homes from the Indians. The modern woman has a lot worse job than that—keeping the wolf from the door."

Spooks! From a junior officer in the naval reserve comes a story about a cruise last summer on the U. S. S. Wilmette, when one of the ensigns asserted he had seen ghosts roving among the hammocks. The tale was relayed to other officers on board and the next night a watch was set with several officers making up the personnel. All claimed they saw the ghosts and concluded that they were the souls of the men, women, and children who had perished aboard the ill fated Eastland, now the reconditioned Wilmette. [Chorus: O yeah?]

Vacationing in Vancouver, B. C., Jim Campbell glimpsed numerous deer around his cabin every morning for a week. But the day he decided to go hunting he trekked all day and never saw a deer. Anyway, that's his story, which he tells preliminary to flourishing the pelt of the eight foot grizzly he dispatched with two shots. Mr. Grizzly makes a grand rug.

One by one the masculine redoubts are falling in the Allerton club, in former years held fast against feminine intrusion. First, one of the topmost floors was grudgingly assigned to women occupants. Then another. Then married couples were admitted. And now the twenty-fourth floor, for several years the exclusive domain of half a dozen misogynists, has let down the bars and has besieged the management for the privilege of entertaining their women friends in their own quarters. There is even a hint that were it not for the economic outlook a couple of these old residents would plunge headlong into matrimony, but meanwhile they desire that feminine influence and homelike atmosphere in their quarters. The next revolution probably will abolish those separate elevators.

One of the most interesting curios connected with the life of the late Sir Thomas Lipton, sportsman extraordinary, is in the possession of Marie Andresen, Chicago attorney. It is a 400 year old Javanese tea chest of teakwood and mahogany, three feet high, the sides and back intricately and beautifully carved. Each panel represents some episode of the early history of transportation of teas and spices; one depicting the jungle potentate sending off the chest on the back of elephants through the brush, holding a rosary and praying for its safe delivery; another shows royal messengers announcing its arrival at oriental marts, and battles with boa constrictors, wild boars, and jungle dogs on the journey. The story is told that the chest was presented by Lipton to a beautiful young Chicago matron he met during the World's Fair of 1893, and that for years it stood in her home here, later to be sold, eventually to Miss Andresen.

Artless art criticism. Three year old Mary Owen was taken by her parents to Diana court in the Michigan Square building last week. Later some one mentioned the court and Mary spoke up to say, "I saw Diana." "What was she doing?" some one asked. "O," retorted Mary, "she was standing in a tub in the middle of the floor without her clothes on."

Informal Togs for Evening Are Pretty, Clever

Necks Trim; Paris Decrees Ankle Length Skirts for Coming Season.

hats to wear with those gadabout clothes. Little toques of fur, matching the fur trimming on the coat, are popular. Feather hats, usually made of coque or ostrich plumes, are bobbing around in Paris after dark. Worth is showing cunning Robin Hood caps of tulle with quills of ostrich in them to go with dresses designed to wear to dances, to dinner, and to the theater. The minute a hat is worn with any sort of ensemble intended for evening, that ensemble becomes less formal and forbiddingly grand.

The long evening coat, which Paris has considered heretofore as really formal, is shortened a few inches and becomes less formal, thus, than the short jacket, particularly if the dress worn under it is light and filmy. A case in point is the Lucile Paray evening cloak shown today. This is the smartest kind of coat for gadding about in, of an evening. It is made of a rich green velvet and, as you see, is ankle length.

The collar is made of two ropes of velvet, and it does the chic stunt of evening collars this season—that of hugging the neck and extending out to outline the shoulders as well. The two front breadths of the coat widen from the waistline and extend over the upper arms in a dropped shoulder yoke, which is edged with plaited ruffles of the velvet. These ruffles end at the waistline in front and at the under arm seam in back.

Instead of a Bustle.

Next at the right is the frock that is worn under the coat. This dress is made of violet colored chiffon. Note the subdued 1880 movement of the plaited ruffles around the hips, but with the bustle left off. This is being done on many smart evening dresses. A plaited panel hanging from the ruffles at the hips replaces a bustle. The skirt is close fitting under the three hip ruffles and down to the knees under the plaited top of the first wide ruffle. The lower ruffle, however, has no foundation, so there is plenty of room at the bottom of the skirt. There is a fichu of the chiffon, with a plaited ruffle edge at the front of the bodice, and this fichu becomes the pointed yoke you see at the back, the ruffled edge ending at the back of the arms.

In the exact center is the kind of informal evening dress that is going out to lots of Sunday night parties and such doings in chic circles this winter. It is made of black pile velvet and is a real princess dress, with full godets flaring the skirt near the knees and with the hem stiffened by a shirred velvet cording.

The sleeves are gathered into the armholes and under a heading at the bottom, and they're pushed up on the shoulders so they look a little like the leg o' mutton sleeves that belles wore long ago. The square yoke is made of real Venetian lace. There are lots of Venetian lace trimmed velvet dresses hovering around the Rue de la Paix this winter. This is the kind of picturesqueness that Paris concedes to modern evening clothes—just enough to make them spicy, but not enough to make them hard to handle in the modern situation supplied by a narrow taxicab door.

The black astrakhan cape and hat, shown on the seated figure, are designed to wear with the black velvet dress, and there are long pale ivory kid gloves that match the tint of the Venetian lace yoke. Mirande designed the dress and the fur set.

At the extreme right is Bruyere's "cocktail," an ideal dress for simple evenings. It is made of white crêpe marocain with a big bertha that buttons on with two big buttons. It is plaited at the front and back of the skirt just to the hips and has an extra wide patent leather belt.

Questions on Fall Weddings Are Answered

Convention Irons Out Puzzling Details of Dress, Decoration.

By Helen Bartlett.

WE'RE trying to catch up with correspondence—mostly about weddings. Who says there's a depression on? People still seem to be getting married at a great rate.

"For a November wedding may I wear a transparent velvet dress with short sleeves and long skirt?
"H. W."

The velvet and the long skirt are quite all right, but I advise long sleeves.

"What flowers are used in decorating the house for an autumn wedding?
H. B."

The decorative scheme may be as simple or as elaborate as you prefer and can afford. White flowers, tall palms, and candles are used. The background for the improvised altar should be as attractive as possible and scaled in size and decorative effect to suit the size of the room.

Dress Accessories.

"Will you please tell me the correct shade of hose to wear with an eggshell satin evening dress and black slippers and also with white slippers?
"C. B."

Nude hose would be the best choice, but I would advise against wearing black slippers with an eggshell frock. Even white would be an unsatisfactory color with eggshell. It would be better to have slippers of the same shade, or some sharply contrasting color, other than black.

"Does the bride enter the church on her father's right or left arm?
"L. K."

On his right arm, usually, so that after he gives her away he may step back to his place in the first pew on the left.

"Are sleeveless gowns correct for the attendants at an evening wedding?
D. P."

For a home wedding, yes; at church weddings evening jackets are worn. Bare arms at church are in poor taste.

Announcement to Parents.

"Should the parents of the groom, who live in a distant city and cannot be present at the wedding, be sent one of the engraved announcements?
"B. M."

Yes. They naturally will be interested in everything about the wedding.

"Should a return address be written on the envelopes of announcements or invitations?
F. N."

No. The postoffice authorities would prefer it, but it is not the custom to have a return address on this purely social correspondence.

E. M.: There is no actual giving in marriage by the bride's father in the Roman Catholic ceremony. Under the circumstances you describe it would be permissible for you to walk up the aisle alone. Please write again, enclosing a stamped, addressed envelope.

M. H.: At a recent wedding I saw your problem nicely solved. The parents of the bride were divorced; the mother married again. The bride's mother, with her husband, sat in the first pew on the left of the church. The bride's father gave her away, but in this case he walked up the aisle with the bride on his left arm, instead of on his right. When they reached the altar the father stepped back and retired to his place on the right side of the church, where the groom's family was seated. It seemed an intelligent way to handle the rather difficult situation. You might consider it.

Hat May Be Worn.

"If a girl is married in her home in the evening wearing a tailored suit [the wedding is very small and informal], may she wear a hat?
"B. V."

Yes.

"Is it customary for ushers to ask guests on which side of the church they wish to sit?
G. N."

Yes, at large formal weddings particularly.

"Does a bride-to-be give her fiancé an engagement gift?
R. D."

No.

"Do ushers entertain the bridal party?
C. B."

They may if they wish and can afford to. It is not a universal custom, however.

"Values That Ordinarily Would Be Impossible to Give"

Good Recipe, Wise Baking for Fine Cake

Care Should Be Taken In Choosing Recipe, Then Follow It Exactly.

READY FOR CAKE MAKING

Picture illustrates the first step in making angel food cake. Be sure to have all necessary ingredients and equipment within easy reach.

cream it before adding the sugar to it. Don't hesitate to use your hands, provided they are clean!

Eggs are admitted to cake batter in a variety of ways, though the most common [with the exception of angelfood and sponge cakes] are the two with which almost every one is familiar—namely, the beating of the eggs as a whole and adding to the butter and sugar mixture, and beating the yolks and whites separately, the latter being added to the batter last. A new wrinkle of the first method is to separate the yolks from the whites; beat the whites; drop the unbeaten yolk into them, and beat them together. Then they are added to the cake batter just before it is poured into the pan. This treatment is used in cakes only when the recipe calls for the whole egg being added to the cake at one and the same time. Don't beat the batter after the fluffy eggs have been turned into the cake.

We have already told what kind of flour should be used. Please don't neglect to sift it once before you measure it. And once you have measured it, don't be afraid to sift it several times more. You may tickle your nostrils with a little flour dust, but what do you care if you have a better cake for the sifting? Baking powder in most recipes is sifted with the flour. By all means have fresh baking powder, and don't economize when you buy it. A cake requires so little—one, two or three teaspoonfuls—that the percentage of a penny saved is negligible. The same admonition may be served on soda.

By the way, the occasion does arise when microscopic bacteria invade the sweet milk you planned to use, and you find it necessary to convert your cake recipe into one in which sour milk may be substituted. I don't recommend the amateur attempting this conversion. Though it is not hard to do, it may prove confusing.

One cup of sour milk requires one-half teaspoonful of soda, and half a teaspoonful of soda is the equivalent of two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. So, take the number of teaspoonfuls of baking powder called for in a sweet milk cake and subtract from them the number which they equal in soda in a sour milk cake. Then make up your new recipe, using the same amount of liquid previously required, the new amount of baking powder, and the soda needed to neutralize the acid of the milk. The shift from sour milk to sweet, or vice versa, can be performed with recipes other than those of cake. I am thinking particularly of the numerous hot breads, waffles, and pancake batters.

Proper Baking.

Improper care during baking will ruin the best mixed cakes. Make it a point to know your oven, especially if you have no oven thermometer with which to regulate the heat. Place your cake pan well in the center of the oven to insure an even heat on all sides. Preheat the oven while you are preparing your cake. Then, if your oven has become too hot, leave the door open for a minute or two. Two minutes should sufficiently cool any oven.

Butter cakes are baked in a moderate oven, starting at an approximate temperature of 325 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit; layer cakes require a slightly warmer oven—about 375 degrees Fahrenheit; while the sponge and angelfoods have their baking begun in a slow oven of about 275 degrees Fahrenheit. All cakes, after they have fully risen to the top of the pan, should have the heat increased slightly to finish the baking. When this is not done the cake has a tendency to be dry and leathery in texture.

The tragedy of cake making occurs when the cake falls. Sometimes it is due to too much sugar or liquid, but more often to careless baking. Any cake is most delicate when it has almost reached the top of the pan in baking. You don't have to tiptoe around the kitchen nor converse with the ice man and grocery boy in whispers, but don't permit your cake to be jarred or subjected to a severe cold draught at this period in the baking.

Making Angelfood.

A true test of the cake maker comes when she attempts an angelfood cake. An easy cake to make, a difficult one to bake, that's the secret, with apologies for the unintentional rhyme! Follow these simple rules, however, and your first effort should be a surprising success.

Preheat your oven as you whip up your cake. Pour the batter into a standard angelfood pan which has not been greased. Put the cake into a slow oven. If you discover it browning before it has fully risen, cool the oven. This is a cake to be watched and watched frequently. Once it has raised above the top of the pan, raise the temperature of the oven and finish baking quickly.

Angelfood will bake in about 45 to 60 minutes, the first half hour being a slow oven and the last fifteen minutes the hotter oven. If it bakes more than this length of time it will be a dry, tough cake. When it is done let the cake shrink back to the level of the pan, then remove from the oven and invert. Let it hang in the pan until cold. Run a spatula around the sides of the pan and center tube and turn out.

The average cake, as well as the angelfood, will shrink from the sides of the pan when done. However, with a fruit cake this test should be tried: touch it with your finger and if the cake follows your finger back into place it is done.

Some time, in the not too distant future, I shall discuss commercial cake making in the home, if enough of you feel you want to earn a few pennies for Thanksgiving and Christmas. Until then, try your hand at making the well known cakes below. Once you have achieved perfection with these, I shall know you are ready for more complex recipes.

ANGEL FOOD CAKE.

1 cup of egg whites [about 11 whites]
1¼ cups of sugar
1 cup of pastry flour
⅛ teaspoon of cream of tartar
A pinch of salt
Flavor to taste

Sift, measure, and set aside the sugar and flour. Add the salt to the eggs and beat to a foam with a wire whisk; add cream of tartar and whip until very stiff (not dry). Fold the sugar into the whites with a spoon, then the flavoring, and lastly the sifted flour. (This should be sifted four or five times.) Put in a slow oven (275 degrees F.) at once. Will bake in about 45 minutes.

SPONGE CAKE.

6 eggs
1½ cups of sugar
½ cup of water
1 cup of pastry flour
¼ teaspoon of salt
Juice and zest of 1 lemon
¾ teaspoon of cream of tartar

Sift the flour once, measure, and sift four more times with the cream of tartar. Boil the sugar and water together, stirring until the sugar is dissolved, until it threads when dropped from the tip of a spoon—or until it has reached a temperature of 240 degrees Fahrenheit. Add the salt to the egg whites and beat until stiff. Pour the sirup slowly over the whites, beating constantly. Beat the egg yolks well, add the lemon juice and zest, and combine with the whites. Cut in the flour and fold gradually. Pour into ungreased tube pan.

Bake in a slow oven (325 degrees F.) about 55 to 60 minutes. Raise the temperature of the oven once the cake has risen to the top of the pan. Remove from the oven and invert until cold.

WHITE CAKE.

½ cup of butter
1½ cups of sugar
1 cup of milk
2 cups of pastry flour
1½ teaspoons of baking powder
Pinch of salt
3 egg whites

Cream the butter, add the sugar, and cream together. Sift the flour once, measure, and sift with the baking powder. Alternately add the flour and milk to the butter mixture. Add the salt to the whites and beat until stiff, but not dry. Cut and fold into the batter.

Pour into two greased layer cake pans and bake in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees F.). This can also be baked in a somewhat slower oven in a single larger cake pan. Temperature then required is 350 degrees F.

CRUMBLE CAKE.

2 cups of pastry flour
1½ cups of sugar
½ cup of butter
2 eggs
¾ cup of milk
2 teaspoons of baking powder

Rub the flour, sugar, and butter together until well mixed and no lumps are left. Take out a heaping cupful of the dry mixture and set aside. To the rest add the eggs, well beaten, the milk, baking powder, and flavoring. Beat well and pour into greased pan.

Sprinkle the dry mixture over the top evenly and bake in a slow oven (325 degrees F.). One teaspoon of cinnamon added to the cup of dry mixture is an excellent flavoring.

AUNT KIT'S COFFEE CAKE.

¼ cup of butter
1 cup of sugar
2 eggs
½ cup of milk
1½ cups of pastry flour
1 teaspoon of baking powder

Cream the butter, add the sugar, and cream together. Add the well beaten eggs. Sift the baking powder with the flour and add alternately with the milk to the butter mixture. Beat well and pour into a greased shallow tin. Bake in a hot oven (375 degrees F.).

Cover the top with almonds which have been put through a grinder, mixed with one-fourth cupful of sugar and one teaspoonful of cinnamon. Sprinkle it!

Pet Recipes

Fresh Peach Meringue.

3 egg whites.
Pinch of salt.
1 cupfull of sugar.
1 teaspoonful of vanilla.
1 teaspoonful of vinegar.
Peaches, sliced and sweetened.
½ pint of cream, whipped.

Whip eggs until frothy. Add the pinch of salt. Continue beating until stiff and dry enough to cut with a knife. Fold in the cupful of sugar. Beat again until sugar is thoroughly mixed. Add the vanilla and vinegar. Pour into an ungreased cake tin. Bake one hour in a slow oven. Remove the meringue and cool. When ready to serve spread with drained, sweetened peaches. Cover with whipped cream. Strawberries may be substituted for peaches.—B. F. H.

The FIRST LADY BRANDON

by ROBERT HICHENS

What Has Gone Before

Lady Ivy Brandon separates from her husband. Lord Brandon makes a pact with Carrie Cravan, widow of an army officer, to act as co-respondent in a divorce action and later marry him. As soon as the divorce is granted Ivy marries Dr. Mervyn Cleeve. On the honeymoon in Egypt Ivy renews her friendship with Dario and Didi Cattaro. Mrs. Cravan brings suit against Lord Brandon for breach of promise. As the Cleeves' son, Guy, grows up he becomes difficult to manage. His parents learn that Brandon exercises a strange influence over him. They find Guy's character baffling. Cleeve demands that Brandon end his friendship with Guy. Brandon tells him to talk to his son about it. Ivy learns that Guy is on the Brandon yacht, off the southern coast of France, and she decides to have a talk with him. Accompanied by her maid, Kate, she goes to the Riviera, where she finds that Guy has gone to Berlin with a notorious woman. Dr. Cleeve goes to Berlin in search of Guy, but learns that the woman, Anna Retz, has gone to Vienna. He decides to follow her.

INSTALLMENT XI.

The Medical Man.

CLEEVE was too far away from her to hear what she was saying. It was only very seldom that he caught faintly the sound of a voice that was surely contralto vibrating on a rather deep note.

Now and then the white haired woman nodded a somber head as if in mysterious acquiescence. But she never spoke. Her role in life was to listen. She kept her eyes on the talker, except when she managed now and then to snatch a hasty mouthful of food.

Cleeve was midway through his lunch when old Fritz, looking away for a moment from his ladies, caught sight of him. He stared with his calm, blue eyes, then very slowly made his way down the room on his spectral legs and came to a standstill by Cleeve's left elbow.

"I hope you are satisfied, sir?"

"Quite satisfied, Fritz."

"The archdukes used to eat here, sir, in the old days. But now!"

He sketched a serene gesture of philosophic regret. Then, bending forward confidentially, he said in a low voice:

"You see those two ladies over there? One is speaking, the other has white hair. The younger one is Fräulein Anna."

"Fräulein Retz?"

"Yes, sir. The other lady is Frau Muhl, a great friend of Fräulein Anna, the widow of an engineer."

Cleeve took out a card and wrote on it in German.

"I am the father of Guy Cleeve. Would you allow me to call on you at any time today? I am staying at the Imperial hotel."

"Will you give this to Fräulein Retz?"

A frail twinkle seemed to rise from some remote depth in old Fritz and to gleam for a brief instant in the blue eyes. Perhaps memories of pre-war Vienna stirred somewhere in his old carcass at that moment.

"Certainly, sir."

He took the card and crept slowly down the room. Cleeve watched him. He came to rest by Fräulein Retz's side. She paid no attention to him. Her shoulder was turned to him. She was in full spate.

Cleeve saw old Fritz, after a moment of waiting, stretch out a hand and, with great respect, touch that turned shoulder.

Fräulein Retz started violently and looked around, evidently with a sharp question on her lips. Fritz handed Cleeve's card. She took it, glanced at it, and shot up to her feet as if a spring had been released in her. Her whole body at that moment seemed crying out, "Where is he?" A hand of Fritz indicated where. At once Fräulein Retz came resolutely down the room. As she came Cleeve got up, feeling rather as if he were about to sustain the shock of a charge of cavalry.

"You are Herr Cleeve? You are really Mr. Cleeve?"

The questions were asked in English, spoken with a strong but not ugly accent.

"Yes, my name is Cleeve?"

"Dr. Cleeve?"

"Yes, I am Dr. Cleeve."

"His father?"

"I'm Guy Cleeve's father?"

"What for are you here?"

"I want to see my son."

Her round, large eyes—they were nut brown—traveled over him with a fierce, searching scrutiny.

"Yes, you are his father!"

"I have just——"

"It is not that! One sees!"

AT this moment an elderly man with an aquiline face and small, pointed gray beard came into the restaurant, saw Fräulein Retz, smiled, bowed, hesitated as if anxious to speak to her. She nodded, turned to Cleeve.

"Not here! We can not speak of it here. Come with me when I go. In a few minutes. When I pass your table come with me. We shall go up the stairs. You shall hear."

With vehement force she leant to him and said again, in his face:

"You shall hear!"

Then she joined the elderly man and, accompanied by him, walked back to her table, while Cleeve sat down to finish his lunch.

Perhaps ten minutes passed. Then she came back again, accompanied by the effaced but not undignified receptacle. She had left the elderly man beginning his lunch.

"My friend, Frau Muhl—Dr. Cleeve. Frau Muhl will leave us. She has to do in town."

"Ya, ya!" from Frau Muhl.

"We shall go up the stairs. Come—please!"

Cleeve hastily told the waiter the number of his room and followed the two women out. The command had been decisive, the contralto voice imperative.

In the hall Frau Muhl at once evaporated after sketching a vague salute for the benefit of Cleeve.

"Come—please!"

Fräulein Retz led the way out of the hall to the left beyond the cloakroom, up a broad staircase to a rather complicated landing above, from which over a marble balustrade one could look into the hall. Here were small coffee tables and chairs and here presided a large young waiter with a decidedly Viennese stomach. But there were no clients as yet. A deep privacy brooded.

"Here we shall sit and take our coffee! And here I shall tell you," said Fräulein Retz, sitting down in a corner against the wall by the balustrade.

"Please bring coffee for two," said Cleeve to the waiter.

"What liqueur will you have, Fräulein?"

"Kummel."

"Two kummels, please."

"Yes, sir."

CLEEVE sat down opposite to Fräulein Retz, and at once the floodgates were opened. Afterwards he knew that till that moment he had never realized the true meaning of feminine vivacity.

Fräulein Retz could probably be very charming, gay, and amiable when things were as she wished them to be, but when her desires were thwarted her wrath knew no bounds. She had the imperious willfulness of the successful coquette.

From her flood of talk, accompanied by much gesticulation of her pretty little hands, Cleeve gathered that Guy was no longer with her in Vienna. He had traveled with her from Berlin, but having had a disagreement with her the reason of which, in spite of her evident excitement she did not immediately divulge had gone away leaving a note which told her that he had no intention of coming back. Eventually Cleeve asked where he had gone.

"To England. That is where he go when he leave me."

"He's gone home."

"I tell you again he go to England. In his letter to me he say 'I have of this enough. I go now home. Now after all that I have been doing for him."

"What have you done?" said Cleeve frigidly. "You found him traveling with a friend."

"A friend," interrupted Fräulein Retz vehemently. "That old Lady Brandon was his mistress. She pay for everything. She give him money to gamble. He was her gigolo."

"My son is not a gigolo," said Cleeve sternly. "He has been staying with Lord Brandon, Lady Brandon's husband, and was invited to go yachting with her. He is an undergraduate—a student—at Oxford and——"

Fräulein Retz broke into a peal of feverish laughter. Her plump shoulders shook and she threw back her small pretty head with its massed yellow brown hair.

"A lovely Oxford boy. If all the boys of Oxford they are like him may the good God help the professors. The old man with the beards, I pity them."

She suddenly stopped laughing and her round face became stern, which made her look very much older.

"About Oxford your boy do not care one damn. Many times he has said that to me. 'Oxford! Let Oxford go to hell.' That is how he talk to me about Oxford. Do you wish to know why he has gone back to England now we quarrel?"

"Why?" said Cleeve, as she stopped for him to speak, to give her the cue for further vehemence.

"Because he has no more money to spend. I have refused to give him more."

"He had his own money. When he left Monte Carlo he had plenty of money."

Fräulein Retz leaned forward, doubled one hand into a small fist and struck it repeatedly down on the table among the coffee cups and kummel glasses.

"I tell you he spend all that and I am keeping him all these days. He lost all at the races in Berlin and I give him more till I am tired of his foolery with horses. He always back the wrong horse till I am sick. I bring him here to get him away from all those jockeys in Berlin. I say, 'We will hear music, we will together see fine pictures.' I am Viennese. I love Wagner, Richard Strauss. I weep when I listen to the last act of the 'Rosenkavalier.' You know that? I am artist. I know what is good. All the big conductors, the pianists, the singers they know me, they appreciate me. But your son—he is Philistine! He is dirty dog. You may not know. I tell you. When I say to him, 'No more money for the wrong horses, I will make artist of you so you be more fit to keep me company,' he pack his luggage and leave me, and not even say me good-by. I go out to buy me a fur for this cold weather. I come back and he is go! Just because I refuse to give him money and he know I mean what I say."

"How much money do you say my son has had from you?"

"Why you want to know that? What have you to do with my money?"

"If you can tell me what money my son has had from you I will pay it back to you."

"What that?"

"If you can tell me how much money my son has had of yours and not given back to you."

"Give back! Your boy give back any money he has from any one! That is good idea! That make me laugh!"

And again she burst forth into feverish laughter.

CLEEVE sat back in his chair with a face of stone and waited for her to stop. He loathed being with her. And yet he found himself pitying her. In her voluble anger, even in her feverish laughter he discerned genuine misery, a real sense of intimate outrage. Suddenly Fräulein Retz stopped laughing as if forcibly pulled up in mid career of laughter by an arresting thought.

"Ah, I know!" she said, and there was bitterness in her contralto voice. "You think I go with your son for money. You think I take him from that old woman at Monte Carlo for money—that is it. But that is not true. He came to Monte Carlo in that great ship, Der Wanderer. But I always know it is not his. I always know every one at Monte Carlo know he is only the gigolo of Lady Brandon."

"I have told you——"

But Fräulein Retz was implacable.

"She is old—she pay for him everything. She pay him to love her. Then he is her gigolo. And I know that always. At the tables he win with her money, and when he have enough to be free for little while he wish to come with me and leave her. So he come. But I know he has only what we win. What is that for me? Nothing. I go with your son because I like him—only that."

"Like him! Did you love my boy?"

"Eh? What that?"

Fräulein Retz's round face for a moment looked almost frightened.

"Did you love Guy?"

An eloquent expression of sheer naked sincerity transformed Fraulein Retz for a moment. Perhaps she realized it for her eyes left Cleeve's face and she looked down.

"Yes," she said. "It is that."

She paused, then added:

"I am a damn fool, I love him."

"Why?"

She shook her head.

"I don't know. He is bad."

"If he is bad would you love him?"

"Yes. Who loves a man because he is good? You talk nonsense there."

Cleeve sighed. He must have been hoping. How useless! How futile! How—perhaps—sentimental!

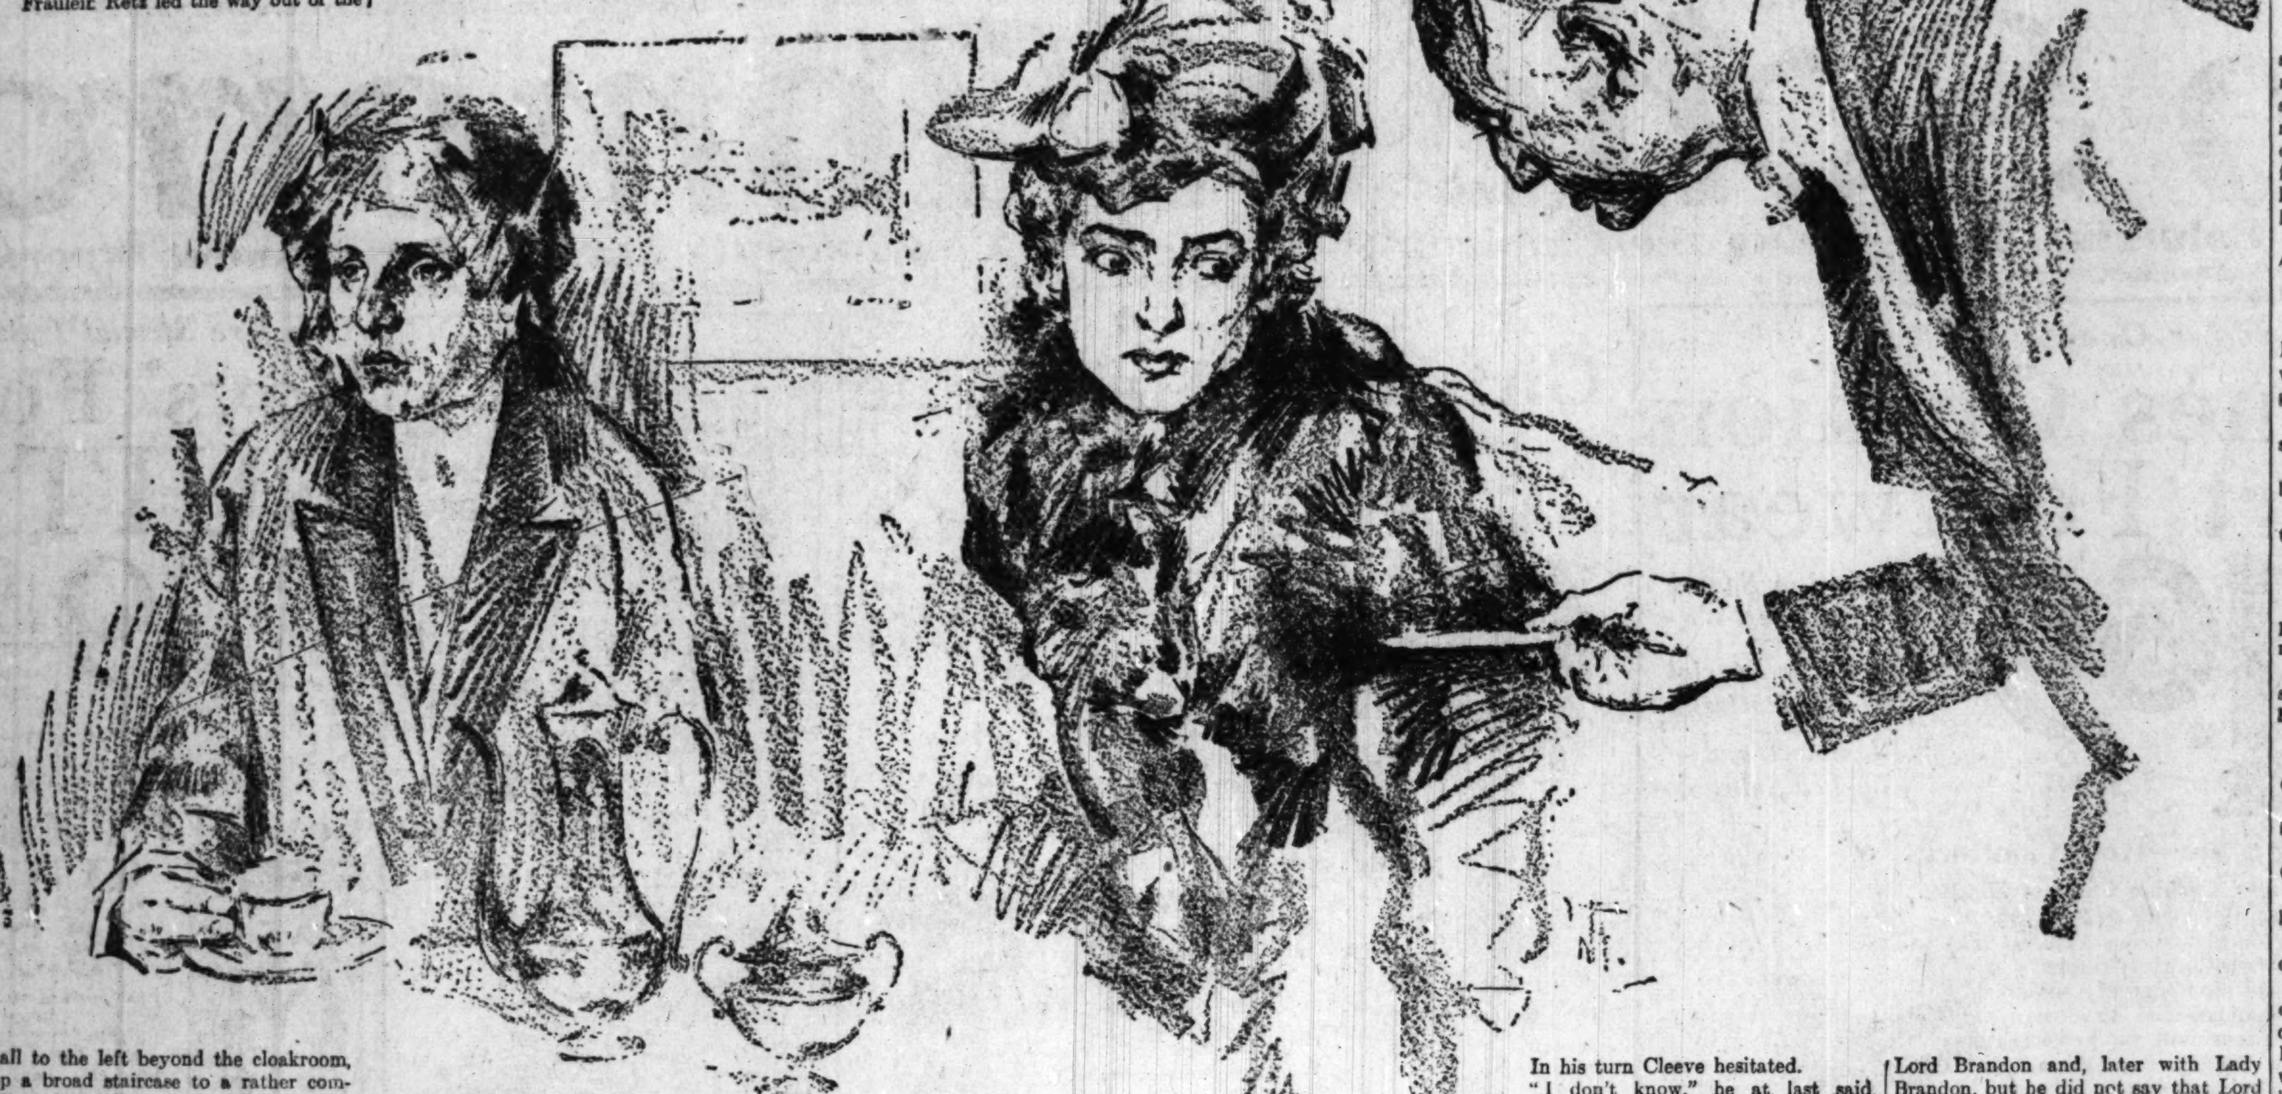

ILLUSTRATION BY WILL FOSTER.

Fraulein Retz started violently and looked around, evidently with a sharp question on her lips. Fritz handed Cleeve's card.

"And he love only himself. That is it with him."

She looked at Cleeve again and her eyes were very sad. Her vivacious anger had died away.

"I give him what I can because I love him. And when at last I say no, because I see he will take all and lose all for the foolery with horses, and that among the jockeys he become like an imbecile, then he pack up and leave me, and not even say good-by."

Tears shone in her large eyes, but her mouth became suddenly hard.

"I am damn fool. I love a dirty dog. Now you know."

Cleeve felt ashamed to speak again to this woman of money and yet he could not bear to leave her a creditor to Guy. But who can "settle up" for love?

"What we do now?"

The question sounded pathetic, childish almost. He moved his broad shoulders.

"I shall go home."

"And what you say to him about me?"

"That you are worth more than he is," Cleeve said, with irrepressible bitterness. "Ever so much more."

He took out his card case.

"This is my address at home."

She took his card and looked at it.

"He is here!"

She touched the address with a finger.

"I suppose so. I don't know, of course."

She stared for a long time at the card. Then, looking up, she said:

"You want to go? Then call the waiter."

Cleeve obeyed and paid. Fräulein Retz got up.

"You are like him. He is your son. But he has not your nature. He has not your heart. No. His mother! Is she like him?"

"No, she isn't."

They went down in silence and passed through the hall. A chasseur hurried to get a taxicab for Fräulein Retz. She held out her hand. Cleeve took it.

"You are not like him. You are good man."

She got into the taxi and leaned forward to the window.

"You are not to tell him I love him. He would only laugh. Number four, Karl strasse," she added.

Cleeve told the chauffeur, then came back to the window.

"I wish you would tell me how much my son——"

"I will not! I will not! Never!"

She leaned back with a rigid face

The cab drove away.

. . . .

Cleeve went to the office and sent the following telegram to Ivy in London.

"Have reason to believe Guy returned home please confirm this if true waiting your reply love Mervyn Hotel Imperial Vienna."

Knowing it would be useless to sit in his bedroom and brood over his troubles, he ordered a stall at the opera that night.

He looked at his watch. It was four o'clock. He went out for a stroll in the Ring.

About six o'clock he was again in the hotel. The opera began at seven. He meant to sup after the performance instead of dining before it. He went to his bedroom to dress.

There was some one he must see before leaving Vienna, Prof. Rauch, with whom he had been studying when he had first met the Brandons. He had been thinking about the professor during the afternoon, but had felt too upset by the last news of his son to pay him a visit. On the morrow however, he must see him. They had been excellent friends in the past, and Cleeve had an immense respect for the professor's intellectual powers, learning and scrupulous honesty. While dressing for the opera this thought came into Cleeve's mind:

"I wonder what Rauch would think of Guy if he knew him. I wonder whether Rauch would penetrate to the secret of Guy, to the root cause of this hideous development which is so inexplicable to Ivy and me."

This thought remained with him, and he made up his mind to consult Prof. Rauch about Guy, to put the problem of Guy before him.

THE curtain fell about ten. Cleeve went out with the crowd. He got his coat and hat from the cloakroom and was at the foot of the great central staircase on his way out when he encountered the very man he had been thinking of. Prof. Rauch was moving towards the entrance just in front of him, wrapped in a cloak, with a silk muffler round his strong throat, tucked under his broad almost Assyrian blond beard, and a woman on either side of him. One of these women Cleeve recognized as Frau Rauch, the other a girl with a crown of light golden plaits was probably a daughter. But Cleeve had never seen her before.

Prof. Rauch had aged. His formerly yellow hair was now gray, though his beard had not lost its color. But his sturdy figure was still upright, strong, and pugnacious, and he still had the commanding, though not ostentatious, appearance that Cleeve remembered so well.

At the entrance Cleeve took hold of Rauch's loose coat sleeve and said:

"Prof. Rauch!"

The professor turned and looked hard at the speaker with his long yellow eyes.

"D'you remember me?"

"I do. But not your name," said the professor in guttural French.

"Mervyn Cleeve. I studied with you more than twenty years ago."

"Ach! It is Cleeve! Heding, here is our friend, young Cleeve," he added, turning to his wife, who promptly held out a hand, smiling all over her rosy Austrian face.

"Well met, indeed, Herr Cleeve!" she said in German. "So at last you remember our Wien! This is our daughter, Christina. Born since you were here. Just think of that! And already engaged to marry. That shows how you have neglected us. Where has been your memory, your old love for Wien?"

Cleeve excused himself as well as he could while he shook hands with Frau Rauch and the blushing Christina. At that moment, fortunately, some friends who were also going out spoke to Frau Rauch and Cleeve was able to say to the professor without being overheard:

"Are you engaged tonight, professor? Could you possibly leave your ladies and come to the Imperial to have supper with me? Don't you think me rude to invite you alone. I have something, very important to me, that I want to consult you about—apart from wishing to have a friendly talk with you again. Could you come?"

"Is it something medical?" he then said.

In his turn Cleeve hesitated.

"I don't know," he at last said. "Perhaps—it may be. Anyhow, it's a mysterious problem. At least I think so."

"A mysterious problem! I will come, Cleeve. Go back. Wait for me at the hotel. I will come."

"Thank you."

Cleeve said good-by to Rauch's wife and daughter, promising to call on them on the following day, then walked back to the hotel. He ordered supper for two in the restaurant and sat down in the hall to wait for the professor.

Rauch came at a quarter to eleven and apologized for his delay. He had had to take his wife and daughter home to his flat in Boecklin strasse, and there had been some difficulty in getting a taxicab.

"But I can stay as long as you like," he added. "I seldom go to bed before one. I do my reading at night. I am terribly hungry. I don't know why it is, but 'Aïda' always gives me an enormous appetite."

They went into the restaurant and sat down, and almost immediately Rauch said:

"And the mysterious problem?"

"If you don't mind, I should like you to satisfy that enormous appetite before I pose it. What are you going to drink?"

Rauch instantly concentrated on that question. When a decision had been reached he said:

"Your problem is a painful one."

"To me it is."

They ate and talked. Presently Rauch said:

"We certainly lost sight of one another. You did not know I had a grown up girl. And I don't know now whether you are celibate or married."

"I should say you could tell that by looking at me."

"I think you are married."

"I have been married for more than twenty years."

"Any children?"

"I have a son."

"Ah?"

The professor waited. Cleeve said

"I'll tell you about him when we have finished supper."

"He is the problem?" said Prof Rauch.

When Fritz had tremulously supervised a robust young waiter supplying their final wants Rauch said:

"Now, friend Cleeve, the pig in me is at rest. You must be tired of him, for in you tonight there is no pig. But how I have worked today and eaten little! Understand, forgive, and now to your problem. I will listen in the smoke of this divine cigar."

"First," Cleeve began, not too comfortably, "I must tell you that my wife is a splendid woman. She's very sensitive, absolutely honest, loyal, scrupulous in all the relations of life, very unselfish, high minded, straight. (That word means a lot in England—straight.)"

"I know!"

"She has not a drop of bad blood in her. I don't believe any boy has had or could have, a better mother. You must take this from me, professor. And, though I love her, I can see her as she is after more than twenty years' knowledge of her. As for myself—well I can't talk about myself, can I? But I've always tried, at any rate, to behave decently. I have always had a standard of conduct and tried to live up to it.

The professor nodded—soberly.

"Now I must sketch my son for you. And I must begin at the beginning, at the risk of being tedious."

Then as hurriedly and simply as he could Cleeve described Guy, as a young child, a boy, a school boy, a youth studying abroad, and in his last years. He took great care not to exaggerate. He told about Guy's connection with Lord Brandon and, later with Lady Brandon, but he did not say that Lord Brandon had been his wife's first husband. He merely said that this man, whose name he did not give, was intensely disliked and thought ill of by both himself and his wife for excellent reasons and that Guy knew what these reasons were and had ridden over them rough shod despite the protests of his parents.

Finally he told Rauch of the episode in Monte Carlo, when Guy had abandoned Lady Brandon and gone off with Anna Retz without returning to Lady Brandon the money she had given him to gamble with and described his interview of that day with Anna Retz in the hotel.

"There is, to me, something monstrous in his conduct. Has he no heart? Has he no sense of honor, decency—anything? He comes from us, from me and his mother. How can he be as he is?

CLEEVE stopped speaking, stared before him for a moment, then said:

"Can there—is it possible that there is any physical cause for his depravation and his incredible indifference to all opinion? For it isn't natural. It isn't normal. There's something monstrous in it."

He stopped speaking and looked inquiringly at the professor, who was still smoking his cigar slowly.

"I should like to see your son," observed Rauch. "A pity I didn't meet him while he was in Wien. Tell me about his health."

"There's nothing to tell. It's perfect—apparently. He's a splendid physical specimen, with a natural aptitude for games, riding, and so on. His body seems to me marvelously balanced, poised. I should call him a natural athlete. But even in athletics the hateful side comes out. I'm ashamed to have to say it, but my son's no sportsman. He's an arrogant winner and he's a damned bad loser."

"And his good qualities?" said the professor

Cleeve reddened painfully.

"Upon my word I don't know what they are," he said. "Guy has charm. It seems to belong to his physique. But—no, I can not detect heart in him. I'm sure he cares nothing for me. He looks on me with secret irony, as a rather comic figure in his scene."

"And his mother?"

"I feel he must care for her. It seems to me impossible that he should not, considering what she is and how she has been with him. But he is ruthlessly selfish. Look at what he has done now—gone abroad, dropped Oxford, and—no, he can't care even for her or he couldn't have done what he has done."

THERE was a long silence between the two men. Rauch broke it at last.

"Next summer I expect to be in London," he said. "I have been invited to come over to the medical congress in June."

"You must come! Stay with me!" said Cleeve eagerly.

"Very good of you to ask me! Perhaps I could see your son then."

"You shall! But that's a long time to wait."

"What for?"

"Your verdict."

"Perhaps I am not competent to pronounce a verdict. There are human mysteries difficult to penetrate."

"My son is a black mystery to me!" said Cleeve with almost exasperated bitterness.

"That man you spoke of——"

"Yes," said Cleeve, leaning forward on the supper table.

"Why—do you think—was he attracted to your son?"

"I don't know that he was attracted. Guy was attracted to him."

"What, then, was the real reason of his persistence in regard to your son?"

"Hatred of my wife, and, secondarily, of me."

"You have left this man somewhat obscure to me," said Rauch. "No doubt you have your reason. You don't know of any relative of yours or your wife's whom your son resembles morally?"

"No, certainly not."

"Do you know of any one whom he does resemble in the way we are both thinking of?"

Cleeve hesitated.

"I think—it seems to me that he is very like, horribly like, the man I told you of, the man who hates my wife."

"Has your wife been married twice?" said Rauch. "Was she married before she married you?"

"Yes, she was. But what has that to do with it?"

"Wait! What sort of man was she married to?"

"She was married to the man we've been talking about."

"Ah-ha!" said Prof. Rauch.

The exclamation was long drawn out on his lips and so significant that Cleeve was startled by it.

"Very well! And, in your opinion, is your wife's first husband a very uncommon man, as uncommon as your son seems to you to be?"

"Yes."

"So that both seem to you quite uncommon, phenomenal, let us say, almost, and in the same sort of way?"

"Yes."

"This is very interesting to me!" said Rauch, with a warm intonation in his voice. "Now I think we are getting forward a little. Did this man have any children with your wife?"

"No, none."

"Did he wish to have children?"

"My wife said that while they were married he didn't seem to care whether they had children or not."

"While they were married! And after that, when she and you were married?"

"What exactly do you wish to get at, professor?"

"When did this man know about your child? Directly it was born, or when it was christened, or when?"

"He knew before it was born."

The Better Ordering

The Story of Imperious Mrs. Willoughby Warde, Who Arranged a "Perfect" Marriage for Her Daughter, Omitting Only the Ingredient of Love.

IT WAS with a distinct sensation of inner sinking that Mrs. Willoughby Warde watched her limousine descending the long drive, aware the while of a cowardly impulse to call after Patrick to come back and not meet the New York train, after all. Not that the proceeding would have been of any avail. Patrick wouldn't hear in the first place, and if he did, the detective would find plenty of other means of coming out from town to make his report.

But, for the first time in her fifty-nine years, Mrs. Warde was afraid. While uncertainty, like some wasting disease, had preyed upon her until she could no longer endure it, the certainty to which it was now shortly to give place might be worse.

It would take Patrick only a little over an hour to make the trip, but for that hour passivity was unthinkable. Donning her coat, she set out determinedly upon the morning tour of her grounds which she regularly made from choice, and which—her overseer having departed, for good, and by his own fault—she had lately been making from necessity.

The rain washed blue and gold of the June morning jarred unpleasantly upon her troubled spirit as she made her way slowly along the wide perennial border which, in the prodigality of its growth and the glory of its coloring, invested the great estate with something of the charm of a Devon cottage.

The mauve and indigo spires of the delphinium had actually attained the exaggerated sounding height ordinarily to be found only in conjunction with whitewash and thatched roofs; the wall flowers exhibited the wine and brown velvet depths that seem directly dependent upon the sheltering effect of English brick walls. Doane had apparently brought with him an aura of his own countryside, and Mrs. Warde's was in consequence the envy of hers.

This morning, however, the beauty was lost upon her; the flaunting colors fell upon eyes that saw only the bleak futility of it all. Yet, one must do something! Defiantly, as was her wont, she advanced the thought as a kind of breakwater against the smothering gray wave of depression that threatened at times to overwhelm her.

Mrs. Warde had realized three years ago that she must do something, what, not being very clear. The emptiness of her existence since Peggy had gone had become progressively harder to bear as she witnessed, in the unsatisfactory role of spectator, the unfolding drama of the richly filled lives of her friends. . . . Attended brilliant ceremonies in which complaisant daughters were married off to suitable mates. Listened to endless boastings of grandchildren—the beauty of them, the cleverness, the affection, none of them having any shortcomings, it seemed. Marked the Christmas degeneration of ordinarily reasonable elderly women into deliriously happy idiots, babbling in terms of too large imported dolls, too elaborate electric railway systems, and more than life size velvet cats and rabbits.

She herself had—nothing! And nothingness was even worse than what had preceded it. Her husband's death had been only a merciful act of providence, of course. She had abhorred scandal and publicity; she had not wanted to divide up the children. She had, furthermore, felt that what one took upon oneself in life should be—taken. And so she had borne in silence the twenty years of Willoughby Warde's decidedly unlovely qualities that had followed her early disillusionment. But the limit of her much tried long sufferance was in sight when an unforeseen complication in a seemingly slight case of flu had abruptly terminated his career.

WILL had been fifteen then; Peggy, two years his junior. Will was already hard to manage; harder, as the years passed and he went to college. He was suspended once, for his much moneyed crowd was a wild one, and he had been hopelessly spoiled by his father, of whom he was a perfect reproduction not only in appearance but in his uncontrolled character. . . . Not that the latter fact had served to dull in the least the edge of her agony when he was killed, with two of his friends, in an automobile accident during a small hour escapade. There had been girls involved—and bottles—and front page headlines that still ached behind her eyes when she allowed herself to think of them.

After that, her life had centered in Peggy, who grew up into dark vital headstrong loveliness, and gave every promise of being an entirely satisfactory daughter. Her engagement was certainly satisfactory. As a union of fortunes and families it outshone even her mother's; and Garret Nicholson, third of the name, was fine looking to boot, charming of manner, and no more of a drinker than the others of his generation. Mrs. Warde could claim most of the credit for the match which had been a triumph of diplomatic maternal scheming, entirely unsuspected by the principals.

A month before the wedding date, Peggy's godmother had invited her on a visit to her country place. She would send the roadster and the second chauffeur, she said in her note, the limousine and first chauffeur being required elsewhere on that date.

As she inspected with unseeing eyes the work on the new road through her woods, Mrs. Warde lived over again every detail of that afternoon of Peggy's departure. Of no importance at the time, they had all come crowding back later with sharp photographic distinctness.

Spring sunshine pouring in through the windows of the library where she was sitting. Peggy's light steps in her rooms overhead. The drone of a motor on the steep drive; a ring at the door. . . . A slow, pleasant young voice informing the maid that the car for Miss Warde was there—"and are there some things to bring down?" "Loads of them!"—Peggy's clear answer from the landing.

Something tall and blue-uniformed and fair-haired had crossed the hall toward the stairs—Mrs. Warde's first and only sight of her son-in-law.

It was not Peggy's way to mince matters and there was a wedding ring on her slim brown finger when she returned, a plain, narrow gold band which drew her mother's gaze like a magnet.

"Have you and Garrett——?" Mrs. Warde began, indignation mounting within her at the thought of elaborate preparations rendered null and void.

And then, the thunderbolt. "I wouldn't let him come back with me," Peggy had said slowly. "I knew what you'd say—and I didn't want him to hear you!" There was that in her manner which made Mrs. Warde feel uncomfortably that Peggy was unwilling to disclose her mother's shortcomings to her husband; something disconcerting about the light in her dark eyes.

"I just plain—caught him, mother!" she added defiantly. "He's as much of a goose about money as every one else. But I knew!—and I told Aunt Cora that I wanted driving lessons. I got him for two hours a day that way. . . . I had a terrible time"—the defensive hardness of her mein melted into a sudden smile—"pretending I didn't know how! . . . I know he must sound frightfully flat," she continued. "Wouldn't know a cocktail to see it; thinks it's awful for women to smoke, and hates flipness and nicknames, and more or less everything I was brought up on . . ." From the deepening light in her eyes Peggy was plainly recounting virtues. "But if you——."

"Exactly what," Mrs. Warde had interrupted acidly, "are you going to do?"

"We're going to New York," Peggy answered, "so John can get a good living-out job and go to night school for a business course. He's been through high school and he plans to get into banking——."

Again Mrs. Warde had interrupted. "What does a good living-out job pay?" she inquired.

The eyes of mother and daughter met. "Forty dollars a week," Peggy answered steadily. "Less at first, of course."

DEEP within Mrs. Warde something had suddenly snapped, shivering her icy surface calm into countless sharp pointed fragments that broke over Peggy in a shower of stinging words. She never remembered just what they were. She was glad that she couldn't, for she had the feeling that they were nothing to recall with satisfaction.

And Peggy, with her maddening look of one in heaven, entirely beyond the range of earthly taunts!

It had ended as it was bound to end, of course.

"You may come home," Mrs. Warde had said, "whenever you wish to, and take your place, and inherit your money. . . . if you divorce your—husband." The word fairly choked her. "That can always be—arranged. Otherwise, you can lie on the bed you've made."

Peggy's eyes had flamed. "I'll lie on it, never fear!" she said. "You can lie on anything with the person you love . . . and I never envied you the one you made with dad!"

Apparently she had lain on it, for that was over eight years ago. With her second chauffeur, of the undistinctive name of John Parker, she had vanished utterly into silence. . . . Garret Nicholson had brought two successive brides home to the house on the Heights which his parents had erected for his occupation with Peggy. . . . The charges upon which the first of these had based her divorce suit had been ugly ones.

And with the passing of time, Mrs Warde had realized the necessity of doing something. It was on the day that Jane de Peyster sent her the photograph of her granddaughter who had taken the beauty prize in a children's pageant—a round, cherubic thing, with an enchanting smile and a minimum of clothing—that matters came to a head. If she had nothing to be engrossed in—as Jane de Peyster was engrossed in her daughter's family, to the exclusion of all other interests—she must find something.

That same day she had seen in a house and garden magazine the advertisement of an Adirondack foothill estate for sale. There were photographs: A great rambling stone house of simple dignity; woodlands and rolling fields above a broad valley into which distant mountains peered with majestic interest over the shoulders of the lower hills; a glimmer of water.

She had taken the first available train. It was a beautiful place; far more beautiful now, for her years of occupancy. A place whose farm actually paid, whose orchards caught at the throat with their frail May loveliness—flaunted proudly their solid September wealth. A place to cherish and work over and dream over; to hand down in love and pride from generation to generation.

And yet, so completely futile! she thought, as bringing herself with difficulty back to the present, she turned her steps reluctantly toward the house. For what and for whom was she building?

It was but a few months since she had come to the conclusion that, while she could never forgive Peggy's treatment of her, if she only knew where Peggy was, and in what state, the ending of the uncertainty might confer a peace of mind hitherto unattainable. And so she had finally put the matter into the hands of the detective bureau with whose representative Patrick was at any moment due to return.

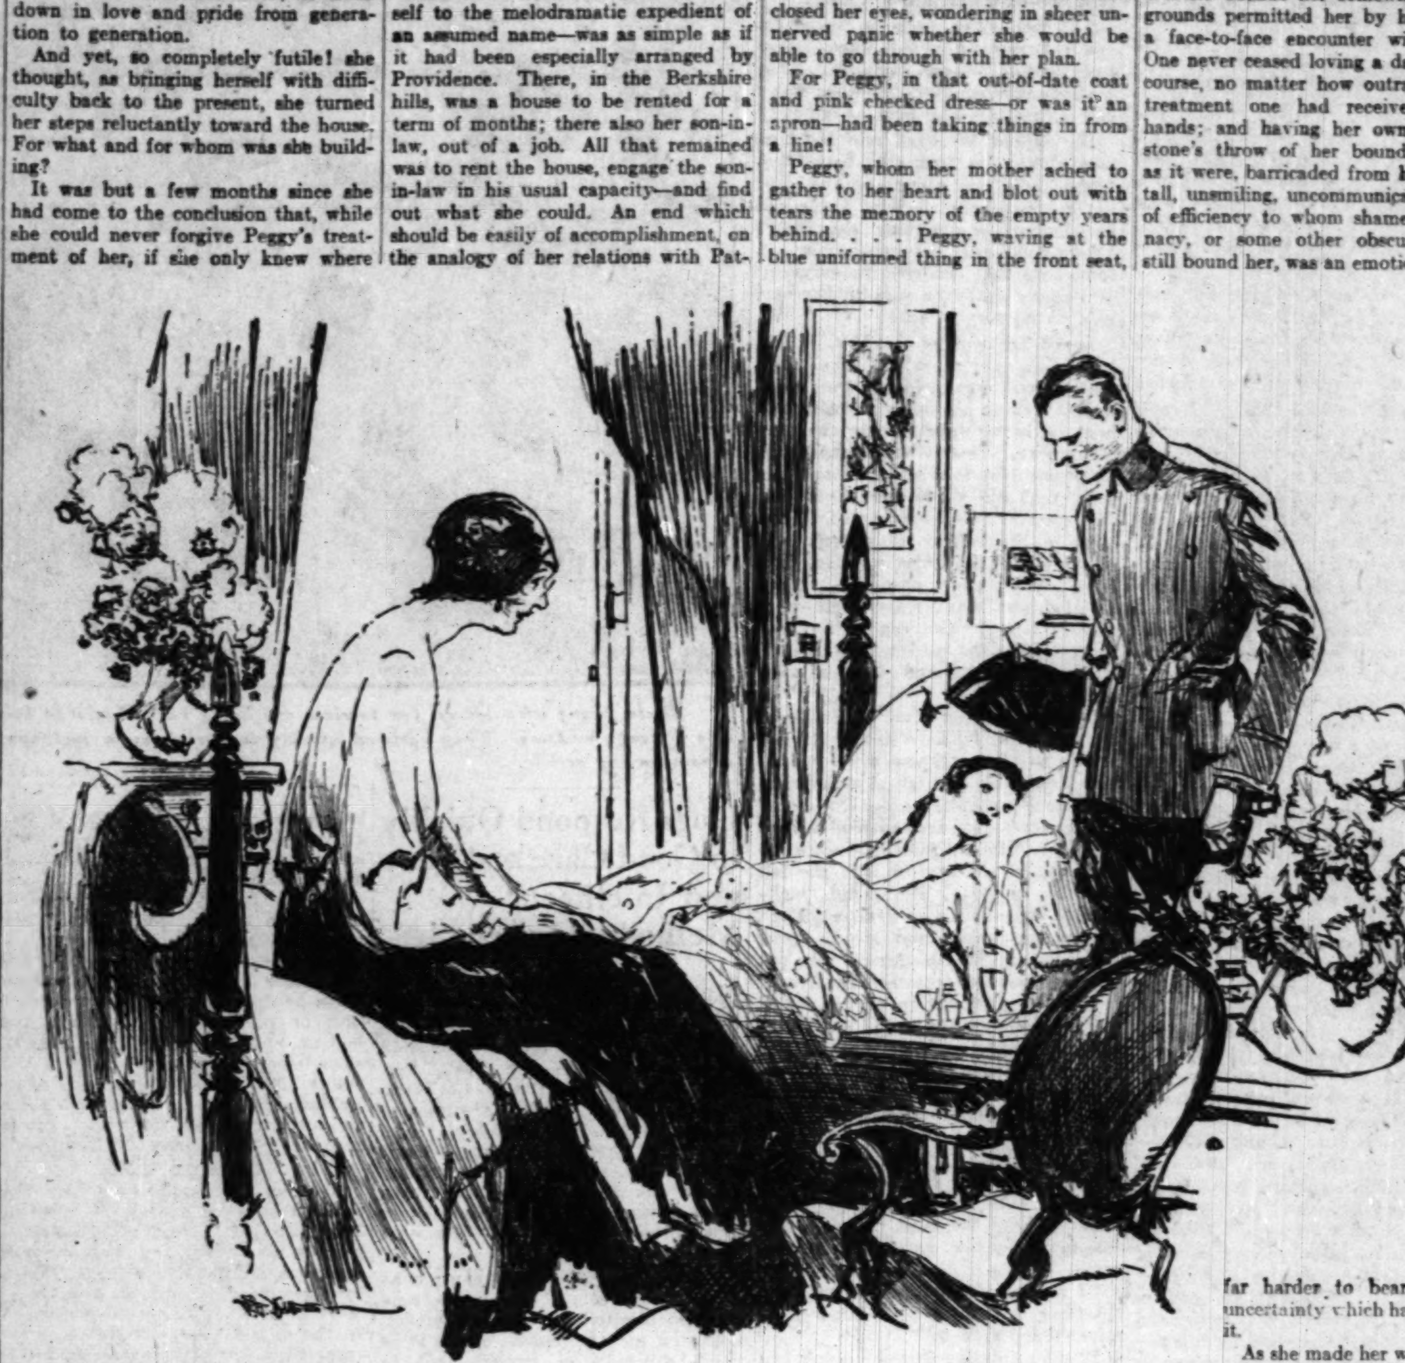

ILLUSTRATION BY R. F. JAMES.

She slipped her hand into her husband's; and the look that passed between them was something that had never passed between Mrs. Warde and her husband—something she hadn't known could pass between people.

For she had so confidently expected Peggy to come back. Not immediately, of course, of course, for it would necessarily take time for her to bring herself to an admission of her mistake. But, without doubt, eventually. And as the years had passed slowly, one into another Mrs. Warde became the prey of a sickening fear.

Peggy might be dead! Peggy, with her boundless vitality, her unquenchable youth and gayety. Only that, or the worldly success of her second chauffeur could have served to keep her, born and bred as she was to wealth and luxury, faithful to her bargain.

Yet it was neither of these. The detective looked like any ordinary business man and seemed to regard the matter from a purely business standpoint.

"Your daughter and her husband," he announced after the briefest of preliminaries, "are at present living in the village of Stoningham, Mass."

Not dead, at least! With the wavering, dizzy feeling that threatened momentarily to overcome her, Mrs. Warde realized just how afraid she had been of that. . . . But, if she wasn't dead——?

"They've been pretty well up against it," her informant went on. "I've been there, you understand, as a vacation hunter, and talked to them both. The husband had a job with a wealthy family who live there the year around, which he lost because he wouldn't go abroad with them for six months; and right after that, he came down with a bad case of pneumonia. He was just getting about again——"

"You mean——" Mrs. Warde interrupted, "that he's still a chauffeur?" She had simply never imagined that. The forty dollar a week living out job had so plainly been in Peggy's eyes but a step to better things.

"He's never been anything else, I understand," the detective replied.

IT was with mingled emotions that Mrs. Warde received the statement. Indignation, of course, that a daughter of hers should have played for eight years the ignominious part of a chauffeur's wife; but under it lay any angry satisfaction that the future which their idiotic infatuation had envisaged had not rewarded them by materializing.

"They live in a little house near the place that belongs to the people he worked for—which is now closed and for rent to any one who has the price," the detective continued. "But they plan to leave for some city as soon as he's stronger . . ."

But Mrs. Warde hardly heard the rest of what he had to say, which was relatively unimportant. Death she had steeled herself for as an explanation of Peggy's failure to return; dime novel success too, bitter as the swallowing of that would have been. But this drab, flat sameness . . . !

How, and why, had Peggy stuck it out. The question haunted her all that day and the next, destroying effectually all hope of the peace of mind she had expected to gain. And being a person of action and prompt decision she came speedily to the conclusion that the only course open to her was—to find out.

And that—once one reconciled oneself to the melodramatic expedient of an assumed name—was as simple as if it had been especially arranged by Providence. There, in the Berkshire hills, was a house to be rented for a term of months; there also her son-in-law, out of a job. All that remained was to rent the house, engage the son-in-law in his usual capacity—and find out what she could. An end which should be easily of accomplishment, on the analogy of her relations with Patrick, about whose wife and domestic problems and relatives in Ireland there was nothing left for her to learn.

The house to be rented was presumably in the hands of an agent. The agent would know if there were an experienced chauffeur of the living out persuasion in the neighborhood. There were telephones, which Mrs. Warde believed in using for the transaction of all possible business matters.

Her plan once conceived, she lost no time. A week later, having taken no one into her confidence but her lawyers, and—in default of more hopeful candidates—entrusting her estate to the doubtful joint overseership of Doane and Patrick, she departed for New York, with the avowed intention of traveling, there to vanish from the ken of her friends. As Mrs. William Warren of Chicago, she boarded a train for Pittsfield, where a highly recommended chauffeur, John Parker by name, was to meet her with one of the new cars which the adventure cost her.

AS the train labored heavily up the long grades of the Berkshires, Mrs. Warde found that her hands were cold, her breathing uneven. Peggy's husband was standing by the stairway door on the long, open platform, scanning the crowd of arrivals with level blue eyes. Though he was but one of several chauffeurs, Mrs. Warde recognized him at once, so indelibly had that single glimpse been seared upon her memory. . . . Not the face, which she had not seen clearly at the time, but the tall slimness of the close knit young figure, the shining fairness of the bared head . . . and the blue uniform again.

"Mrs. Warren?" he asked as he stepped forward.

"Yes!" his employer answered guiltily.

John Parker took her suitcase from the porter. "Your car is on this side, madam," he said.

Mrs. Warde followed him, shaken by a rending emotion, the intensity of which fairly frightened her. Coming thus face to face with the person who had stolen her daughter and wrecked her own life rendered the past a mockery and the future a stretch of blank futility, was even more of a strain than she had foreseen.

That he was unquestionably a better driver than Patrick was only exasperating. Through the turmoil of her feeling she realized that the country which they traversed for ten miles or so was beautiful in a friendly intimate-seeming, oak-and-maple clad fashion, very different from the majestic purple aloofness of her own foothill region but appealing in the very change it presented.

"Your house is the one on the hill over there, madame," the driver vouchsafed after a time.

He sounded his horn as he spoke, two light, staccato notes, and slackened speed a little. Mrs. Warde, who was a good driver herself, instinctively scanned the road for obstructions. But there was nothing in sight. Empty white concrete ahead; empty green fields on the left. On the right, a little yellow house, from the side yard of which a girl in a long brown coat was waving her hand.

A girl of vivid, dark, gypsy loveliness, soft hair framing her face in wind tossed tendrils. A girl who was unmistakably—Peggy.

The black gauntleted hand of Peggy's husband was raised in inconspicuous salute. The car gathered speed again. Mrs. Warde lay back in her corner and closed her eyes, wondering in sheer unnerved panic whether she would be able to go through with her plan.

For Peggy, in that out-of-date coat and pink checked dress—or was it an apron—had been taking things in from a line!

Peggy, whom her mother ached to gather to her heart and blot out with tears the memory of the empty years behind. . . . Peggy, waving at the blue uniformed thing in the front seat, in cheerful disregard of Mrs. William Warren of Chicago in the back—as she had gone with it in equally cheerful disregard of the plans and aspiration of Mrs. Willoughby Warde of Cincinnati. . . . Peggy, whom her mother longed to shake as the rising tide of her ire submerged her softer impulse.

THE house into whose drive the car turned was unpretentious, compared with Mrs. Warde's own, but old fashioned and restful, with nice grounds, and a hardy border of satisfying color scheme, even if the delphinium could lay no claim to Wrexham lineage. Her son-in-law carried her belongings upstairs.

"Mr. Carter said that you were engaging me on his responsibility, madam," he said. "Is there anything you'd like to ask me?"

Mrs. Warde scanned the clean cut young face. Good looking, she admitted grudgingly, if it hadn't been a little too thin, too fine drawn, too indicative of recent illness in the still evident pallor, the shadows below the curiously dark blue eyes.

"How old are you?" she asked. And knew that the bitterness of her resentment lent to her tone a harshness entirely foreign to it.

"Thirty, this December, madam."

Twenty-one, eight years ago, then, to Peggy's nineteen!

"Are you—married?" Mrs. Warde found the word hard to bring out—but his reply might carry some hint of enlightenment.

"Yes, madam," her son-in-law answered. And told her nothing.

"I understand you've been ill," she pursued, still with that uncomfortable awareness of a forbidding, patronizing quality to her manner, quite beyond her control. "Do you feel entirely recovered?"

For an instant her son-in-law hesitated. "Entirely, madam — thank you," he replied. And it seemed to Mrs. Warde that between her and her daughter's husband there crackled, audible and visible, an ugly spark of mutual dislike and distrust.

As he took his departure she looked after him with an uneasy sense of having defeated her own purpose by antagonizing the person she had planned to use for its furtherance. That she had antagonized him quickly became plain. John Parker was a perfect chauffeur. He drove a car as if he were a reasoning, feeling part of its mechanism. He was mannerly and well groomed and—when speech was necessary—well spoken. But he kept his distance, and obviously wished his employer to keep hers.

About his affairs she learned nothing at all. In sharp contrast to the expansiveness of Patrick, "Yes, madam," and "No, madam," formed the sum of his conversation, the formal metropolitan term of address having the defensive effect of well kept barbed wire. As a source of information he proved a complete blank.

So complete that, at the end of an entirely unenlightening three weeks, Mrs. Warde was ready to go back to where she had come from, had it not been for her unwillingness to take with her the forty dollars a week which, times being hard and available jobs decreasing in number, might not be immediately replaceable.

It had been a ridiculous idea, anyway, she thought bitterly as she set out one morning on the post-breakfast walk to the village which was the only exercise outside her somewhat limited grounds permitted her by her fear of a face-to-face encounter with Peggy. One never ceased loving a daughter, of course, no matter how outrageous the treatment one had received at her hands; and having her own within a stone's throw of her boundaries, yet, as it were, barricaded from her by this tall, unsmiling, uncommunicative piece of efficiency to whom shame or obstinacy, or some other obscure motive still bound her, was an emotional strain far harder to bear than the uncertainty which had preceded it.

As she made her way through the orchard behisd the garage she came suddenly upon a little girl in pink gingham dress, deeply absorbed in the task of bathing a dilapidated looking doll in the shallow brook.

She was quite the most beautiful little girl that Mrs. Warde had ever seen. Hair that shone like living gold in the sunshine—uncut hair, framing in loosely tumbled curls a flushed and serious little face; dark fringed eyes of the blue of deep sea water; solid little body and stury brown legs—the faded, outgrown dress and scuffy little shoes seemingly only the perfect finish to the picture.

Mrs. Warde held out her hand. "Good morning," she said with a feeling of gratitude of having anything so lovely as even temporary company in her isolation. "Would you like to take a walk with me?"

"Good morning," the visitor replied with a smile that fitted the rest of her appearance. "And I'd like to—only I'll have to go and ask my father first."

"Can't we pass your house on the way?" inquired Mrs. Warde.

"We don't have to . . . he's right there in the garage. My father takes care of your cars, you know." And Mrs. Warde's granddaughter skipped away, leaving her grandmother speechless and shaken.

Never once had she passed beyond the fact of Peggy's mesalliance to the point of considering the possibility of any tangible results. And such a result! The sight of the small pink clad figure reappearing around the end of the garage filled Mrs. Warde with a delight that was akin to pain in its poignancy. . . . And with a resentment that was sheer pain in the thought that for all the empty years she had been denied—this! When it might have been living near her—or even with her, had Peggy, too, found it necessary to bring ugly charges against Garret—recipient of silver cups and plates, and woolly cats, and now, imported dolls.

Only—it wouldn't have been this! This was plainly her father's child.

"I can go," she reported, "if I don't talk too much."

Mrs. Warde accomplished her marketing in a kind of daze; warm little hand in hers, scuffy little shoes keeping difficult step with custom made brogues, happy treble chatter in her ears.

HER granddaughter! Her granddaughter's name was Ann, she learned. That it was her own name was doubtless mere coincidence, she thought in stern repression of the feeling of satisfaction rising within her. That e-less Ann was the height of fashion in girls' names nowadays, of course! She was seven. She would be in the third grade when school opened in the fall. Two years ahead of most children of her age, Mrs. Warde reflected. But a single glance was enough to class this as a child of more than average intelligence.

Her exasperation with her daughter and son-in-law swiftly mounting, Mrs. Warde invited her grandchild to lunch, a gold and blue and gingham fairy in the discreetly awninged midsummer gloom of the big white paneled room, filling the decorously appointed house with life and company for the brief time of her stay.

On her departure Mrs. Warde sent a note home with her—in painfully disguised backhand, and beginning: "My dear Mrs. Parker——" requesting that Ann be permitted to relieve the loneliness of the writer by lunching daily with her.

The writing on the envelope, fished the next day from a gingham pocket, racked Mrs. Warde afresh with the queer mixture of tenderness and ire which the sight of her daughter had aroused in her some weeks earlier; a brief little note, acceding to the request, beginning: "My dear Mrs. Warren," and ending: "Very sincerely yours, Margaret Parker." . . . "Margaret" now! Peggy's chauffeur hadn't cared for nicknames, her mother remembered.

Thereafter, her head buried deep in the warm golden sand of present happiness, Mrs. Warde lived only for her noon engagements. For her conferences with the elderly New York imported cook concerning such characterless — and vitamin loaded — vegetables as spinach and carrots; for the disinterring from her memory of wonderful stories she used to tell, productive now of quite as great effect as twenty years earlier, for the fashioning of wardrobes for dolls, cheap, faithful, crack complexioned creatures which their owner brought with her, and which presented startling contrast to the smart, glazed chintz of the sunroom chairs on which they sat.

The summer was before her. Beyond that she refused obstinately to look. . . . And now, like Jane de Peyster, she could at least bestow an imported doll!

She sent to New York for it, her fingers unmanageable with eagerness as she opened the elaborately packed box. . . . A dream of a doll, with an adorably pouting face and long, golden curls, the most abbreviated of hand embroidered peasant frocks, the most fetching of caped coats, and tassel topped berets.

Mrs. Warde repacked it carefully and, the waitress having an errand in the village that evening, entrusted it to her for delivery at the little yellow house.

John Parker returned it in the morning. Mrs. Warde being at breakfast, Jane ushered the tall young figure into the dining room. It struck his employer that for one obviously recovered from his illness and with the usual forty dollars a week coming in, his eyes looked peculiarly tired.

"It's quite out of her class of playthings, madam," he explained his move. "It would make everything else she has look down and out. Her mother feels the same—and thank you very much." The gesture with which he laid the gayly decorated box on the table was entirely final.

Mrs. Warde was completely taken aback.

"I consider your attitude most unreasonable," she said. "The idea that I mustn't give a little girl a doll is ridiculous!"

"We wouldn't have minded an ordinary one," replied her son-in-law, "but this is the kind that would be suitable for—your own grandchildren, perhaps . . . not for our little girl. I'm sorry, madam."

It was, indeed, the very thing for her grandchild! Mrs. Warde felt positively ill with indignation—and with an unnerving sense of incompetence to deal with the situation.

That this stiff necked pair who had in some inexplicable way managed to stand by their crazy mistake for eight years could calmly foil her attempts to indulge in clandestine grandmotherhood was insupportable; that she should, to achieve that end, disclose her identity and stage a weak minded reconciliation scene was impossible.

But her fingers were trembling as she cut the pattern some time later for a coat for an aging and inexpensive doll, Rose Ellen by name, Ann Parker having plainly neither seen nor heard of the confiscated importation. Even though she was refusing to look ahead, summer was inexorably passing — fall approaching. . . . Then—what?

THE slept badly that night; nor were her feelings toward her son-in-law softened by Mary's announcement at her very late breakfast that he had telephoned an hour or two earlier to the effect that he would be unable to report for work that day.

"Did he give any reason?" Mrs. Warde inquired with some asperity.

"No, ma'am," replied the elderly Mary defensively, it was obvious. "Just that he had to stay home and that Matt Whelan from Miller's garage would come up if you needed any one. . . . It was that dumb Fannie Pratt that comes to clean took the message," she added, "and I'm sure I hope there hasn't anything gone wrong about the baby. He's been worrin' sick about her."

"Who?" Mrs. Warde demanded in bewilderment.

"His wife, ma'am—she's been ailin' for the best part of two weeks now. Up and about and all, but seems she's had a hard time before and he's about scared to death. . . . He told Sarah . . . Guess he just had to tell somebody——."

Pushing back her coffee cup, Mrs. Warde rose from the table. "Why wasn't I told?" she demanded indignantly.

Everything was very quiet about the little yellow house she saw as she approached it. The door stood open; some of the shades were drawn. With a sense of sheer panic upon her, she knocked.

"Would you mind just coming in?" The voice of her son-in-law seemed very near but there was no sound of movement. She pushed open the screen door which led directly into the little living room.

On a sofa by the window lay her granddaughter, her eyes deep pools of blue shadow in a waxen little face, her hair a tangle of gold on her father's arm.

"She likes to have me hold her," he said, "and it's better if I don't make any move unless I—have to."

He spoke quietly, as if it were a casual matter, but Mrs. Warde looked quickly away from his eyes.

"I was in such a—hurry to tell you—about my baby brother——." There was a light, breathless quality to the little treble voice now. "He came—last evening and when I—ran across the road I—forgot to look out for cars."

She glanced apologetically up at the tortured young face above her—which managed to smile.

"It was silly, wasn't it?" agreed her father, "but we can't always remember everything."

Sick and shaken, Mrs. Warde dropped onto a chair beside the sofa and took in her own one of the strangely transparent little hands.

"I have Rose Ellen's coat all finished," she said. "I'll go right back for it as soon as I find out what will help you most."

But her heart failed her as she met the other blue eyes."

"Big words," her son-in-law answered her unspoken question. "Internal hemorrhage. The doctor said all we could do was—lie still."

"Could you leave her for a minute?" Mrs. Warde asked when she could speak. . . . "What does the doctor say?" she demanded as they stepped out of the door into the clear hot August sunshine.

"That there's—no hope." The words seemed to come with a vast physical effort. "There have been three——." He broke off, his hands clinching momentarily at his sides. "It's just a case of—keeping her as long as I—can," he added. "That's why she hasn't been moved or anything. . . . The local man brought a city one." His eyes strayed back through the open door as if he grudged the minutes lost. "I have a practical nurse for the others; but Ann likes to have—me."

Mrs. Warde felt suddenly very cold. Unthinkable that, through this liquid sunshine, across this drowsily smiling countryside, death should be seeking a little girl!—this boy's little girl.

Wordlessly she slipped her hand into one of the lean young brown ones. There was nothing antagonistic about the hard grip that closed upon it; only a desperate something that reminded her that thirty turns instinctively to sixty for help—even when there is no help.

"You see—" he said huskily, "her mother's had a pretty bad time of it—she thinks Ann's just bruised up a little."

Turning, he made his way blindly through the door.

PEGGY, too! As she ascended the path toward her house Mrs. Warde was shivering. No time, this, for revelations and reconciliations—no time for anything but action. Youth, stricken and defenseless, must wait passively for what might come. Age, armed with the mightiest of material weapons, could at least—fight.

Her hands were steady and her voice clear when she seated herself at the telephone. Called a Cincinnati number. A Baltimore number—and another. A Pittsfield number; another—the village garage—interviewed Sarah and Mary.

Within half an hour she was back in the yellow cottage, where weak little fingers closed contentedly on Rose Ellen's red coat.

"My old family doctor—" she announced, "told me that the best man in the country for this sort of thing was in Baltimore. . . . He's on his way now—by airplane. The man from the village garage will take my car to meet him at the airport, and four nurses have started from Pittsfield by taxi, two for Ann and two for the others. Sarah will see to their rooms and meals; Mary will come down here to help. Money has never been of any particular service to me in my life," she added grimly, "but if it can do anything now——"

Her son-in-law started to speak—but changed his mind.

The speed with which an airplane can deliver a Baltimore specialist in Massachusetts is surprising. But to the watchers in the little house—soon reinforced by the nurses—it seemed a long time until the gleaming nickel nose of Mrs. Warde's limousine slid silently across the window.

The great man was deft and brief—and uncompromising. An immediate operation, here and now—no, even the porcelain purity of Mrs. Warde's kitchen was too distant—might, and only might, be successful.

Without it . . . Tomorrow, perhaps. More likely, tonight.

There was a moment's utter silence.

"Go ahead!" said Ann's father hoarsely.

With competent hands Mrs. Warde helped scrub tables—fill kettles—mop—wash—boil; the nickel nosed limousine flying, meantime, for the local doctor, for things from the village, things from the house on the hill. And, finally, a limp little form carried into the kitchen in the arms of a gray faced boy.

For that was all he was, Mrs. Warde thought in a passion of pity as he emerged, and closing the door behind him, mounted the narrow stairs.

"She has everything there is to have now, dear," she heard him say evenly, as he opened a door above. "You see——"

It closed then, and there was nothing to do but wait—for what seemed hours instead of the ninety minutes it was—with ears strained to catch the import of every hushed sound and careful movement, till a quiet procession passed from the kitchen to the little downstairs bedroom across the hall. More waiting, then silence and dragging hours and slowly falling shadows—and an occasional thin little wail from the room above. Dusk had deepened till Mrs. Warde could no longer distinguish the bowed head of her fellow watcher, when a nurse came softly in.

"She's coming to," she said, "she wants her father."

More waiting—a night of it. But as the fifth stroke of the village clock died into silence, the door across the hall opened again.

"Doing marvelously!" With the great man's crisp, satisfied pronouncement, it was as though a breath of fresh cool air had swept through a stifling room. There was something

Books Help a Child to Know Nature World

Youngster's Interest in Outdoors Should Be Encouraged.

ural world, which could be a live thing in the life of a boy or girl will lag because no key in the form of information is available to unlock it. Often what might prove to be the basis of a man's life work or profession, or the delight of his leisure will languish for lack of the food that is contained in the right books. If it were only a matter of pleasure alone it would be enough. The outdoors can be made the source of a deeper pleasure through a deeper knowledge.

But of course there's more than pleasure that follows an intelligent attitude toward living things. I've seen the respect for life in its lower forms and the knowledge of it possessed by one child or two permeate and influence a number of children in a neighborhood. Destructiveness and the lack of imagination that is cruelty, will give way to collecting, watching, feeding, and hours of patient search for some tiny creature. Little snails and polywogs and sunnies will be hugged lovingly in bottles and be housed in tubs and saucepans needed for other purposes.

"What is this? How do I feed it? Can I keep it without its dying?" are all profit to a child, as well as pleasure.

For Field Use.

Now, there are different kinds of books to feed children's interest and observations of animals and plant life. We might divide them into two groups. First, there are the field books or hand books. These are guides with brief descriptions, carefully arranged and with lots of illustrations, so one can use them quickly for identifying. To the boy or girl whose special interest has become a permanent thing, a good simple field book is as interesting as a novel. Though they make good reading, primarily they are intended for field use.

The other group of books consists of those which are written for straight ahead home reading. They present their material in an entertaining way, while they remain scientifically accurate. There are many delightful books of this sort for children of different ages—books which are well written and well illustrated.

For Older Children.

In mentioning this second group of books I am not referring to that multitude of books for little children in which the animals they are interested in are made to talk, dress, and act in a most engaging way, but not as they really do. In fact, they are often dressed and talk and act like people. Such books are in the class with Peter Rabbit and Tom Kitten. I mean, rather, books which, while they are entertaining, are authentic accounts of animals and plants and are intended for older children than those "little books." Among these are, for instance, two books that have been mentioned before in this column—"Green Magic" and "The Astonishing Ant," by Louise Closson Kenly. These books deal with the world of plants and insects that lies close at hand, and are lively and unusual and vividly revealing of nature's magical and astonishing ways.

Two other recent books of the same sort which are unique are "Fingerfins" and "Paddlewings" by W. F. Bronson. These are not on familiar animals, being about a curious fish and a penguin, but they are intimate and entertaining and take a child behind Nature's scenes in an authentic way. These two books would be of interest to children of from 8 to 12, while the two of Louise Kenly's would interest those a little older, from 10 to 14 or 15.

I will not attempt to mention any others now. Being familiar with the confusion that confronts a person who gazes on the piles of books that are on the market, these days, or who looks at a long list, I have made a collection from among those that seem to "fill the bill," to give practical help on the subject of this article. It is not feasible to name these here, but a list will be sent on receipt of a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

This list is supplementary to our other list called "Books of the Outdoor World," and used with it covers the ground fairly well for children of various ages.

Little Louis was playing train in his yard when his Uncle John leaned out of the car which was parked at the side of the road and said: "Now, I say, Louis, have I a flat tire?"

"O, no," replied little Louis, with a smile. "It's only flat on the bottom, but it will get you to town."

The Better Ordering

By Marion Brandon

about splendid constitutions and the ability to sleep this way. . . . And about, the actual ordeal once over, everything being favorable—and about children being astonishing creatures, anyway.

And the nickel nosed limousine purred and slid away with its august passenger.

"Yours isn't the only one that's doing beautifully!" whispered the nurse from upstairs who had come down for something. "Mine are both asleep, too!"

Mrs. Warde and her son-in-law confronted each other, heavy eyed, in the dawn.

"You come with me!" she ordered. There was still something to be done before making any disclosures.

The spires of the domestic delphinium were flushed with a rosy overtone in the first rays of the sunlight as the two ascended the path toward the house. On her companion's stammered attempt at speech, Mrs. Warde laid a restraining hand on his arm.

"Don't be silly, my dear!" she said. "And can you keep simple accounts? There's a position——"

"I'm to have my old job back in the fall—and thank you just the same," was the reply. "They wrote me that they don't like the fellow they have, and to consider that he's just substituting for the time I couldn't leave Margaret."

MRS. WADE threw open the door on the wide white hall, with its air of correctly swept and garnished expectancy, and though it was barely six, its distant but pervasive aroma of freshly made coffee.

"The position I meant——" she said as she led the way into the chintz hung living room, "isn't that kind." She seated herself by the fire that crackled cheerful defiance to the early morning chill and motioned her guest to the big sofa opposite. "I'm out of an overseer for my own country place in New York—and I've loathed on sight every one of nineteen applicants. All that's necessary is a knowledge of machinery and motors for the farm and the ability to keep accounts and inspect things. It pays——" For the fraction of a second Mrs. Warde hesitated He would have no possible means of knowing what other overseers had received—and she added fifty dollars to her usual monthly stipend. . . . "And, of course, milk and butter and eggs and fruit, and anything else that's produced on the place. It ought to be good for your wife and children," she added, "and I do hope you'll feel like—considering it."

Never in her life had Mrs. Warde been so anxious about any one's reply to anything. If he would just accept this of her!

The rumpled head of her son-in-law went down on the sofa back.

"It's—it's having everything come right—all at once, like this," he apologized brokenly. "It takes the starch right out of you!"

Mrs. Warde transferred herself to the sofa and laid a hand on one of the tensed shoulders. "There!" she said, as the storm broke, "that's better!" Involuntarily she smoothed back the thick hair that felt live and springy under her hand. And since it was in some indefinable way plain that the treatment was welcome, she kept on.

After a while he talked—hesitantly, as if he had never talked in such fashion to any one before—of the hard things that had filled the eight years' married life of "Margaret" and himself. Ostensibly, in explanation of his "spilling over," every half apologetic word breathed the sheer relief of—telling.

There had been nothing but hard things as far as Mrs. Warde could see. Sickness, worry, doctors' bills. Even death; for Ann had had, very briefly, another little brother four years earlier.

"You see," he said finally, "I could have got into something with a future to it if we could have afforded to take the lower pay for a while. I'd finished a business course and some extra work in night school. But all those jobs start you in lower than the mechanical ones—and something was always coming up so we couldn't make the break. . . . I wouldn't mind for myself, of course—I've always been used to hard sledding—but it's been so darned hard on Margaret."

"Has — Margaret — complained?" asked Mrs. Warde with some heat. This kind of a boy didn't deserve to have difficult things made more difficult for him by complaints of what was none of his fault!

Margaret's husband raised his head, a look in his blue eyes that reminded his hearer of something she couldn't for the moment place.

"Margaret's never complained of—anything!" he said proudly. "But she wasn't brought up to be a poor man's wife—and that's what I've minded about getting stuck the way we have. . . . She wasn't just well off; she was plain rich—and she could be now, if she wanted to. We ran away, you see. . . . There wasn't any other way to do it," he explained. "She could have gone back to it any time she wanted to—without me. But——." The look that reminded Mrs. Warde of something deepened, "she wouldn't."

Sharp and clear across Mrs. Warde's mental vision flashed the picture of Peggy at that last stormy interview—a look in her eyes like the one in these. . . . Around her everything seemed to be growing rapidly brighter with a brightness that owed nothing to the rising sun. But she kept her own counsel.

"What you and I need right now is breakfast," she said, "and then I want to see the baby—and Margaret."

ALL was well in the little house. Downstairs Ann still slept quietly under watchful eyes. Upstairs—

Peggy's clear, dark young beauty was undimmed; but her pale face held a mature disciplined sweetness that caught at her mother's throat. . . .

"Margaret" now, in more ways than one!

"Your choice of son-in-law for me was a great improvement on my own, my dear," said Mrs. Warde as she gathered her daughter into her arms.

"Mother—I've been so sorry for you," Peggy whispered when things had settled down somewhat, "it seemed so dreadfully unfair when we've had each other—and been so happy!"

She slipped her hand into her husband's; and the look that passed between them was something that had never passed between Mrs. Warde and her husband—something she hadn't known could pass between people . . . something that rendered the mystery of Peggy's ability to stick to her bargain no mystery at all.

In all her wonderings Mrs. Warde had never once considered love. And with that it was suddenly and abundantly plain to her that everything had been far better directed than any plan of her own. That it was at the hands of people like this Margaret and her John that life should be handed on and great estates administered. Long tried in the balance of poverty and hardship and not found wanting, they were fitted to carry, unspoiled and undaunted, the heavy responsibilities of wealth. . . . "You can lie on anything—with the person you love!" Peggy had said. And it could work both ways.

Wiping her eyes, Mrs. Warde kissed her daughter. "I have so many things to see to I don't know where to begin!" she said. And felt gloriously like Jane de Peyster.

Her son-in-law accompanied her to the door. He had said little since the springing of the surprise, and she felt vaguely uneasy. He could make trouble for her if he wanted to, tall and square shouldered and steady eyed, and indefinably on his guard. She put out a somewhat tentative hand.

"You aren't going to do me out of a good overseer, are you?" she asked, with a sudden sense of inspiration.

Her son-in-law put a hard, strong young arm around her—and kissed her. Mrs. Warde reciprocated, wholeheartedly, gratefully.

"I was afraid," he said, in obvious relief, "that you were going to try to——." The smile with which he broke off was the most engaging that his mother-in-law had ever encountered.

"I was not!" she disclaimed, firmly. "I have a little sense—much as I haven't appeared to."

It was a blessing that she didn't feel old when life offered so much, she thought as she made her way briskly up the path. The quicker one started an architect on the problem of the overseer's house—which must be entirely remodeled and redone—the better. If it were immediately attacked and operations rendered as extensive and long drawn out as possible, that stiff necked young pair and their family would have to live with her for a while!

She would have to let them go to the little house, of course, being what they were; but the servants from the big one could take care of it. And in time——.

She thought thankfully of her son-in-law's kiss. And, blissfully, of imported dolls suitable for her grandchildren and, too, elaborate doll mansions, and of baby coaches copied from those used by infant royalty.

And, somewhat superciliously, of that moon faced grandchild of Jane de Peyster's who had taken the beauty prize.

As a good Episcopalian, Mrs. Warde was accustomed to approach her Creator with due formality. Now, however, in the morning sunshine, she paused and lifted up her eyes to the smiling hills. "Thank you," she said simply to One who had builded better than she knew.

Kidney Acidity

Disturbs Sleep and Causes Backache, Nervousness, Stiffness and Loss of Energy

Thousands of men and women past 40, and many far younger, often feel run-down and years older than they are by neglecting to use the right medicines for such conditions as Disturbed Sleep, Backache, Nervousness, Lumbago, Neuralgia, Sore Joints, Circles under eyes, Headaches, Smarting and Irritation caused by functional Kidney inactivity and Excess Acidity.

To combat these conditions you really need two different kinds of medicine, because you need two results in fighting these troubles. First, you need a medicine to act as a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys, to help them in their function of filtering and purifying the blood, thus reducing acidity. Second, you need another medicine to soothe and heal irritation and give nature a chance.

These two special kinds of medicine, known as Cystex, now may be had from your druggist under a guarantee of satisfaction or money back. They are in tasteless tablet form, easy to take, and pleasant to young or old, yet work so fast they start circulating thru the system in 11 minutes. Sufferers say they begin to feel marked improvement in 24 hours.

How to Train the Puppy Wisely

These young wire haired fox terriers are being taught how to behave like well bred puppies at a north side Chicago address. They respond quickly to such simple methods of training as are outlined in the accompanying article.

[TRIBUNE Photo.]

Dogs Respond Quickly to Good Care and Sane and Intelligent Methods of Instruction.

By Robert Joos.

IT IS always advisable to train your own dog; that is, buy him as a puppy and rear him as he should be brought up—a real pal. You have often heard, "It is hard to teach an old dog new tricks." A wise saying; but to this should be added, "And you cannot change his habits." Dogs, like children, must get their training young; and again, like children they must be taught to obey. You cannot let the dog "just grow up." He must have schooling.

The dog, or rather the puppy, is as a rule an apt pupil. True, some puppies are harder to train than others, requiring more patience. There is as much diversity of temperament in puppies as there is in children. Even in the same litter there is a marked difference in individual puppies. One may be quite stupid, another exceptionally bright, one lazy, and the other active; but the character which predominates in every dog is faithfulness. This faithfulness is the big factor which makes it possible to train any dog. There are many that are not trained, dogs that do not know anything about obedience. But those dogs are not to blame. Either their owners did not know how to train them, or did not care to spend any time doing so.

Training Takes Time.

In most cases it requires some patience to train the puppy correctly, but the true lover of dogs does not mind the effort and takes pleasure in spending time inculcating good habits and obedience. Do not be unmindful of the fact that the puppy's "school days" are of short duration and in a few months he will be a big dog, ready to repay you in many ways for the efforts and patience you have spent.

It is interesting to note how the puppy gradually begins to understand you and, when he does, how he tries to obey your every command. Like a good soldier he must have discipline. It pays to be stern, but not brutal. Be kind and sensible, but firm. If the puppy must be punished be sure he knows what he is punished for. If you will follow this rule he will soon understand that to disobey your commands means punishment.

Do not "baby" your dog too much. Treat him kindly, but let him know you are his master or mistress. If permitted to have too many liberties when little, he will be hard to control when he grows up. Dogs have a faculty of sensing when you are too lenient, and they take advantage of such leniency and grow up with bad habits. Too much indulgence in overlooking disobedience will result in indifference in the dog. Yet it is a grave mistake to make him fear you.

Using the Leash.

It is an excellent plan to train a puppy to the leash when he is about 5 months old. Puppies consider a leash a plaything, and therefore are easily trained in this direction. When they get older they are inclined to be more timid when first put on a leash. In the city it is almost necessary to train them for the leash. Especially is this true with dogs kept in apartment buildings and which must be taken out for exercise.

A simple way to train the puppy to the leash is to tie a narrow ribbon or cord around his neck and leave it there for a few days. Then tie a heavier cord to this temporary collar and permit him to drag it around the floor and play with it. After he gets over his first worries about this dangling cord, pick up the other end gently, but do not pull on it. Let him go wherever he wants for a while; in that way he will never suspect that something unusual is being done to him. A few days of this mild training and your pupil will be ready for the regular collar and leash, for a walk in the open. This simple method has proved successful with the most timid puppy.

Warn the Children.

It is not a good idea to permit children to play with the puppy when he is wearing a collar and is on a leash. They may pull and jerk the little fellow around, with the result that he will consider the collar and leash a punishment. In fact, it isn't good for the puppy to be fondled too much by children.

Good care has much to do with training a dog correctly. One should keep in mind that he is much like a baby, helpless and unable to tell his wants or its discomforts. Cleanliness, proper feeding, and a comfortable bed to sleep on are all essential. If the puppy is kept in an apartment, provide him with a sleeping basket, or a bed of some kind.

Fresh Air Vital.

Do not keep the puppy in a closed, stuffy room. Fresh air and sunshine will keep him in fit condition for training. Lack of sunshine, fresh air, and exercise will result in rickets. The last mentioned, exercise, is often overlooked in an apartment raised puppy, yet it is important.

Dogs have intelligence, are appreciative, and will mind you if given half a chance to understand you. Unjust punishment lingers in their memory. Punishment should be administered only when a dog is actually caught in the act of wrongdoing. Circumstantial evidence should be tabooed, nor should the dog be punished for something he did hours before.

Teach your dog to have confidence in you, and he will be faithful to you, always at your command. If, however, your dog hasn't this confidence in you and displays fear every time you approach him, the best advice is to get rid of him.

Tables for Comfort

Sturdy oak makes this artistic and practical reading table with its receptacles for books and magazines. It is just the right height for a lamp.

In Preparing Your Rooms for Long Winter Evenings, New Additions of Lamps and Tables Add Notes of Interest.

By Edith Weigle.

TABLES, tables, tables—they are as plentiful in the fall furniture display as autumn leaves are in the country. Now that winter is just around the corner and you're looking forward to those cozy, long evenings before the fireplace, with a book, many women are adding a touch here and there to make their homes more livable.

A new lamp, some new pillows for the couch, a new table for books and magazines or for after dinner coffee or afternoon tea will brighten up the living room and give it special notes of interest. And so attractive and practical are the myriad small tables now to be had that it will be difficult not to add three or four to one's furnishing equipment.

This attractive little early American coffee table is made of maple and fulfills a number of purposes.

An extra shelf below the top of this table is convenient for magazines, books and papers.

Many of them are exact copies of fine old pieces of bygone days. Under this heading are the Chippendale pie crust tables, the crotch mahogany tripod tip tables, the small stands with galleries around the tops and slides concealed underneath, the delightful Pembroke tables with their convenient drawer and drop leaves, the many types of butterfly maple tables and the reproductions of the delicately lovely tables of Hepplewhite and Sheraton.

Fruitwood book tables and night stands are popular for the French provincial room. A copy of an old French table that I saw recently at the American Furniture mart has two lower shelves for books and magazines, a drawer above and in the top are two sunken copper receptacles for holding pots of ivy. It is one of the nicest pieces of furniture I have seen in a long time as well as one of the most usable. It would look well with early American maple things, or with French provincial pieces, and as it is just the right height to hold a reading lamp it could be placed near a lounge chair and thus create a "reading group."

In choosing low tables for any room consideration should be given to the remainder of the furniture, but so varied are the styles that it is possible to bring in several, which, while different, are in spirit with the other furnishings. This is true of the small coffee table illustrated today. Its very simplicity and beauty of line are an open sesame to any informally decorated room.

Made of maple with an unusually beautiful, glowing finish, it has interesting trestle feet and legs supported by four spindles. A stretcher insures its solidity and a slight rim around the edge of the top tray section prevents objects from rolling off the table. It measures 25 by 19 inches and comes from a company noted for its high grade furniture, much of which is almost entirely hand made.

Nests of tables are perennially popular. And here is an opportunity to introduce a note of modern decoration in your room, for if you are still a bit timid about doing an entire room in contemporary style you can choose one or more small objects that will strike the new note and yet fit in with what you have. A perfectly stunning set of pewter top tables made in Sweden, seen recently, would be an ideal way to compromise with old and new. They are as smart as the latest gown from Vionnet, yet they adapt themselves to almost any living room, sun room, or game room. The pawter tops are etched in various amusing designs. One table fits neatly under another, there being three in all.

And with the increasing interest in oak this fall the reading table shown today is bound to find a place in many homes. It has a soft, mellow finish, and the sides of the top and corners are rubbed down so that it has a nice, aged appearance. The familiar linen fold design is seen on the front pieces. There are compartments for books on the sides and for magazines in front and on the lower shelf. It's a distinctly homey, comfortable table, don't you think? And its price is most reasonable.

All the woods are represented in these new table styles. Walnut is good, as is fruitwood, beech wood, maple, and mahogany. And the modern decor goes in for all sorts of beautiful and rare woods, as it depends for its furniture decoration on the unrelieved loveliness of woods.

There are the metal and glass tables, too, which are considered very chic and certainly prove to be most practical. Their surfaces, of course, are impervious to stains of various kinds and may easily be washed.

Another table seen at the American Furniture mart and just put on the market is a joy to the woman who likes to keep her living room looking tidy. It has an extra shelf below the top especially for those magazines and papers that have a way of littering up the couch, chairs and other tables. Piled neatly on this shelf they are out of the way yet may easily be referred to when needed. And the top surface of the table is thus left free for a lamp, smoking accessories, or anything you want to place on it.

This table, too, is the right height for a lamp and is made of maple. It is shown on this page.

A Friend in Need

Garments That Your Family Have Discarded Can Do Much to Make This Approaching Winter More Endurable for the Needy.

I want to be the medium through which the friends in need and the friends in deed may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy and you would gladly give it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send article to The Tribune, but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

By Sally Joy Brown.

OCTOBER with its nipping winds brings the first warning of the winter weather destined soon to be with us. Already most of you are making preparation for it by replenishing your wardrobes with heavier garments to take the place of the lighter ones you are discarding. You know the discomfort that would be yours if this business of fall clothes were neglected, and you are thankful, consciously or otherwise, that you are able to provide yourselves adequately with warm garments.

The poor and needy who struggled through the summer months with lack of sufficient and presentable apparel think about fall clothing, too, but to them it's a problem weightier and far more baffling than the one which confronts others. Actually buying this clothing was not a simple matter when there was plenty of employment, for the number of mouths to be fed in many families, and the number of bodies to be clothed had a way of eating up a man's wages. And now, with unemployment hanging over them, a matter of months for most of them, funds for new wardrobes are luxuries to be dreamed of only.

They'll suffer this fall, and suffer as they've never done before unless you who have been less hit by the depression donate the garments which you are planning to discard. A number of you will be casting off coats, dresses, suits, and shoes which still have wear left in them. Remember there are hundreds of people who would feel particularly blessed were these same garments in their possession.

Clothing is needed for the children who must attend school every day. It's quite likely that your young sons and daughters are outgrowing things which are still in fairly good condition. Won't you give these to one of the needy mothers who have written to me in despair? And there is the suit that your husband or your son is planning to dispose of because in his office he must keep up an appearance, and a coat or a pair of trousers that has begun to take on a shine would be quite out of place. I know of hundreds of men who feel that it's their shabby clothing that is hindering them from finding that much searched for job.

There are women who go out to work every day, too. They need clothing—warm and fairly respectable in appearance. If you are wavering between discarding a dress or coat and having it made over won't you think of one of these breadwinners—many of them widows with broods to support—before deciding?

Any garment you may be planning to discard can be put to good use, for clothing of every size and description is needed. Just how urgent this need is you all know, I am sure. Everything you donate will be placed where it will do much good, and it will help to solve the problem of fall clothing for some one.

Gift of Wool Would Help.

"Will you ask in your column for yarn? I knit afghans in different colors, so any color or amount will be useful to me. MRS. T. R."

Remnants left from your recent knitting could be converted into colorful afghans by this woman. She lives out of the city, and will be extremely grateful for any yarn sent to her.

Radio Would Give Pleasure.

"There are seven members in my family, and while I can hardly afford the necessities of life my little girl keeps asking me for a radio for her birthday. Perhaps you might be able to help me get one for her. If one of your readers has an old model he wants to discard, my little girl would be happy to get it. MRS. M. C."

Not only the little girl but this whole family of seven should get much enjoyment out of that old set you are about to replace. Won't you give it to her?

A Pitiful Request for Help.

"I need a stroller for my 5 year old boy. He was injured by an automobile and was in the hospital seven weeks with a broken leg. Now the cast has been removed and the doctor says he will be deformed. I cannot carry him and he tires so easily that a stroller would be a big help. "MRS. S. M."

This little fellow would not feel his handicap so keenly if he had the means to get out of doors now and then. The stroller you no longer need would help immensely.

Request for Layette.

"We own a small farm in the drought section, and during the last six years we have had to go deeply into debt in order to keep on living and to keep our family together. The bank closed a few months ago and we lost the few dollars I had been saving for expenses when my baby arrives. Now I shall have nothing for it unless you can help me. If you could get a layette, especially diapers, a 54 inch rubber sheet, and two or three bed sheets I would appreciate it so much. We need clothing, too. I wear size 40. My little girl is 8 years old and the boy is 5. I need a pair of low heeled shoes, size 5½ or 6. We'd be grateful for the clothing, but things for the new baby are most important. MRS. C. W."

This poor family seems to have had more than its share of the prevalent ills. If we can supply them with the much needed baby clothing and the garments for the other members of the family it will help them immensely.

Place for an Old Violin.

"I want to learn to play the violin. My mother has promised me enough money to take lessons but she cannot afford to buy me a violin. Do you know of some one who has one to give? R. C."

It does seem a pity that this aspiring young musician must see her ambitions thwarted just because she can't buy even the most inexpensive kind of a violin. Perhaps another musician who has graduated to the class where he needs a better instrument will give her the one he is about to discard.

Desires Old Radio Parts.

"I am a boy, 13 years old, experimenting with radio. If I could get some old sets or parts it would help me a great deal. I do not have the money to buy parts, but I managed to get a good short wave set. By my experiments I hope to get an amateur's license in a couple of years. "W. R."

If you are planning to invest in a new radio set, perhaps there will be parts of the old one that this young enthusiast could make use of in his experimental work. He'd be overjoyed to receive them.

A Riddle

Little and warm
And tucked in tight—
Who do you think
Is asleep in the night?

Sound in a nap
And rocking so soft;
Who do you think
Is sleeping aloft?

Is it a baby?
It's no child at all,
But just a cocoon
I hung in the hall!

FROM NINE TO FIVE.

An office is no place for dreams
Yet there two day dreams meet and cross.
In every firm some damsel beams
Upon the boss.

And always there's some hank o' hair
To whom the Commodore's a gob;
She eyes the guy who's set to snare
The boss' job.

THE VINE UNTWINES.

Ah, Mary, for the good old days
(This younger bunch of females prays)
Please do no more repining;
Could you point out some sturdy oak,
The kind that won't break down or choke
When wreathed with vines, you would—no joke—
Soon see some grade A twining.

But we who sense the modern man
Suggest a slender sapling plan
Would give his young growth clearance;
One follows each one's destined line,
Let oak be oak and vine be vine,
Producing lumber, flowers, wine,
With fair noninterference!

To PARENTS

Whose children don't eat
Don't gain in weight
Don't grow strong
Don't keep well

The stomach is not to blame when a child is finicky about food. Nor is every sluggish girl or boy constipated. Instead of a lot of medicine, give a little pure fig syrup. You'll see a change in twenty-four hours! In a couple of weeks, your youngster will have the appetite of a young animal! It's true, mothers; it's Nature. California fig syrup is bottled health for the little ones.

For Any Sluggish Child

Pale, sickly children whose tongues are always coated, and who are never really hungry, are suffering from stasis. That means a sluggish colon; a colon that is clogged with waste.

Don't give that bilious boy or girl cathartics that drain the whole system! Fig syrup will pass through the system without harming those twenty feet of sensitive bowels and act on the muscles of the lower colon where the trouble lies.

That's the simple treatment which does more for a child than all the diets, fad foods, or tonics!

You can give your children the "California treatment" anywhere, any time, at any age. Every druggist has California fig syrup all bottled, with full directions. It's as good for a babe of two years as the child in his teens. Its delicious taste makes it delightful to use; no child ever failed to like it, or ever tired of it. Start tonight, with enough to cleanse the colon of every bit of poisonous waste. Then a spoonful or so, every other day, until the child's appetite, color, weight, and general health tell you all sluggishness or constipation has been conquered.

When a bad cold or severe sickness has sapped a child's strength and stamina, remember California fig syrup.

IMPORTANT!

If you want to get real results, get the real California fig syrup. Do not accept any bottle which does not say plainly and unmistakably CALIFORNIA fig syrup.

Ingrown Nail Turns Right Out!

Pain Stops Instantly!

"Outgro" is a harmless antiseptic manufactured for chiropodists. However, anyone can buy from the drug store a tiny bottle containing directions.

A few drops of "Outgro" in the crevice of the ingrowing nail reduces inflammation and pain and so toughens the tender, sensitive skin underneath the toe nail, that it can not penetrate the flesh, and the nail turns naturally outward almost over night.

Too late! He had lost her. His carelessness about "B.O." had cost him his heart's desire

The Love Thief

He had been the favored suitor once. But now she was in another man's arms. Was it treachery or —?

SHATTERED hopes, blighted romances—how often they can be traced to carelessness on the part of one or the other about "B.O." (body odor).

If people only realized the untold harm this distressing fault can do! For "B.O." is a thief—stealing away our chances for success . . . happiness . . . love. And, like a thief, "B.O." gives no warning. We don't know when we're guilty. Our sense of smell quickly gets used to an ever-present odor. We think we're safe when we're not!

Guard against this danger

Pores are constantly giving off odor-causing waste—a quart daily. Watch out. You never know the moment you may offend or the harm "B.O." may do you—in business, in your social life. For "B.O." is something no one will overlook. Take no chances. Do as millions of particular men and women are doing. Make sure.

Wash and bathe often with Lifebuoy, the famous toilet soap that gives extra protection. Its rich, creamy, abundant lather deep-cleanses and purifies pores—removes every trace of body odor.

You feel so fresh and clean after a Lifebuoy bath—so safe from "B.O." worries. Lifebuoy's pleasant, extra-clean scent—that vanishes as you rinse, tells you, "No danger of 'B.O.' offending now!"

For a clear, fresh complexion—do this!

Give yourself a nightly Lifebuoy "facial". Work the pure, bland lather well into the skin. Then rinse. Pore-embedded impurities are gently washed away—dull, cloudy complexions toned to fresh, glowing radiance. You'll be amazed at the difference this simple treatment brings.

Try Lifebuoy Free

If you don't use Lifebuoy and want to try it, send a clipping of this offer with your name and address to Lever Brothers Co., Dept. S-11, Cambridge, Mass. Two full-sized cakes will be sent you without cost.

Presbytery of Chicago Ranks Second in Size

The Rev. Mudge's Report Reveals a Healthy Church Development.

By the Rev. John Evans.

THE presbytery of Chicago is now the second largest administrative unit in the Presbyterian church of the U. S. A. This, together with the fact that the Fourth Presbyterian church is the ninth largest congregation in the denomination was revealed in a report by the Rev. Dr. Lewis Seymour Mudge, moderator of the Presbyterian general assembly.

Dr. Mudge's report shows a healthy spiritual development as revealed by a notable increase of new communicant members during the last year. Those added on confession of faith during the year totaled 97,825, as compared with 70,724 during the preceding year. There were also added by certificate 59,192, as compared with 53,050. Restorations to membership were 11,682, as compared with 10,308. Deaths totaled 23,476, an increase of 168. Due, however, to rigid requirements for the retention of names upon local membership rolls, there were suspended 74,700 for disciplinary reasons. A total of 49,858 were dismissed to Presbyterian and other churches. The net gain in membership, therefore, was 15,023, and the total membership stands at 1,999,131. All Presbyterian statistics relating to membership are based solely on the number of communicants in good standing and not on the Presbyterian population or baptized members.

Increase in Sunday Schools.

Most encouraging also, reports Dr. Mudge, is the condition of the Sunday schools of the denomination, which show a net increase of 24,466, the enrolled membership totaling 1,620,496.

For the first time since 1928 the number of ministers passed the 10,000 mark, there being now 10,014, an increase of 27 over the preceding year. The movement to strengthen local churches by dissolving those having only a nominal existence and by combining those serving practically the same constituency, has reduced the number of congregations to 9,242, a decrease of 85 for the year, and a decrease of 323 since 1926. There were 44 new churches organized and 80 dissolved. The Presbyterian church in the U. S. A. continues a national body, with churches fully organized and operating in every state in the Union, grouped in 46 synods and 293 presbyteries. The churches are officered locally by 51,598 ruling elders and 22,057 deacons.

The general financial depression is reflected in the somewhat reduced giving of members to church causes. For the first time since 1925 the total contributions fell below $60,000,000, being $58,171,381 for the past year. This is a decrease of $4,876,682 from the preceding year and of $7,941,729 from the high water mark of 1929. The major decrease was that of $4,079,496 in local congregational receipts. These items necessarily fluctuate annually, due to local conditions and demands, building enterprises, repairs, etc. In support of the official boards of the church, the benevolence contributions totaled $8,420,235, which is only $550,742 less than during the previous year.

Sources of Funds.

These benevolence contributions were chiefly distributed as follows: National missions, $3,841,579; foreign missions, $3,364,882; Christian education, $842,684; pensions, $324,985 [for current needs but outside of the service pension fund]. The board of pensions reports a total of $12,125,715 paid on the pledges to the $15,000,000 endowment campaigned for three years ago, payable in five years. To the American Bible society $37,702 was contributed, and to the federal council of churches, $8,403. A total of $1,026,046 was raised by self-supporting synods for benevolences within their own jurisdiction. The per capita giving by Presbyterian communicant members to their own benevolence board was $4.32, a shrinkage of 31 cents.

Other statistics for the last year follow: Total communicant members, 1,999,131; net increase in membership, 15,023; total Sunday school members, 1,620,496; increase in Sunday school members, 24,466; total churches, 9,242; decrease in churches, 85; total ministers, 10,014; increase in ministers, 27; total contributions, $58,171,381; decrease in contributions, $4,876,682; decrease in congregational expenses, $4,079,496; contributions to official benevolence boards, $8,420,235.

The Rev. Edward V. Dailey of Our Lady of Mercy church will lecture on "Primitive Christianity" at the October meeting of the Holy Name Cathedral Converts' league, Thursday at 8 p. m., at Assembly hall, 11 E. Chicago avenue.

Oct. 15 will also mark the celebration of the second birthday of the Converts' league. Cathedral court of the Catholic Daughters of America, which is coöperating with the Converts' league in its work, and with which the Converts' league has been holding joint meetings, will supply the social part of the program.

The Converts' league was founded two years ago, originally as a parochial activity of the cathedral parish, for the benefit of converts to the Catholic faith who wished to extend their knowledge of the Catholic church and to enlarge their acquaintance among their fellow Catholics. The Rev. Francis M. Flaherty, since appointed pastor of St. Peter's church in Antioch, was the first spiritual director. Father Flaherty was succeeded by the Rev. Gregory C. Cloos, the present spiritual director. The league, since its inception, has been sponsored by the Rev. Joseph P. Morrison, pastor of the cathedral.

Smart Designs Needed in New Fall Wardrobe

Embody Latest Fashions for the Convenience of Home Dressmaker.

By Clotilde.

SLENDERNESS plays an important part in giving a woman a chic appearance, and pattern No. 3150 has paid attention to details that create that much desired silhouette.

The crossover bodice is decidedly smart with its one-sided rever, and the diagonal hip provides a trim fit, while the circular skirt, flaring gracefully at the hem, completes a dress that cannot fail to be becoming.

The dress is one that is especially suited to town wear. It may be made of any of the lovely printed or plain crêpes, or one of the new woolens.

The double breasted bodice has a dart at each underarm. Be sure and run a basting thread, indicating the center front on each front. In fitting the bodice, pin it together on the lines indicating the center front, and make any needed alterations at the underarm seams. The rever may be made of the dress material or something contrasting. It must be entirely finished before basting in position on the bodice. After it is basted in place, cut a narrow bias binding, baste it entirely around the neck—then stitch. Remove the bastings, turn in the opposite edge of the binding and hem down over the seam.

You can save considerable work if you buy the seam binding that is sold in silk or cotton, and all colors. The edges are turned in, pressed flat, and ready to use.

A narrow belt of the rever material is tacked to the right front of the bodice, brought around to the back, and then the end is tacked underneath the front edge of the right side of the bodice — a small perforation showing just where.

The sleeves, both pretty and comfortable, are cut three quarter length and are faced with the contrasting material.

The circular skirt is cut in two pieces, and measures at the bottom for size 36, about 3½ yards. The lower edge of the bodice is turned under a seam's width, and the upper edge of the skirt is set under it. Pin at the center front, center back, and then at the underarms. After this pin at close intervals before basting and stitching.

The small, one piece frock, made by pattern No. 3191, is a model that will provide a basis for many variations. Children's clothes are fascinating to make, and this is a particularly pretty dress. The prettily shaped yoke and the cuffs on the short sleeves are cut from a contrasting color or material. The opening is at the center front — the edges being bound and finished for closing. After this is done make the collar and put on the neck of the dress. The front edges may be finished to close, or may be left open.

The dress ripples beautifully at the bottom and may be finished with a narrow hem, or it may have a scalloped outline, in which case the edge would be bound.

Red and white printed batiste with a plain white yoke and cuffs, with red button trim; white linen with yacht blue linen for the contrasting color, and tiny gold buttons accenting the blue yoke; and ginghams, poplins, piquè, percale and light weight woolens are some of the materials that are suitable. Challis makes charming frocks for small girls, and provides sufficient warmth for cool days.

The sleeve fullness below the elbow of the dress made by pattern No. 3213 is an up-to-the-minute detail of many of the newest dresses. So much attention has not been paid to sleeves in years. The original model was made of black satin, combined with white. The upper part of the sleeves and the edge of the front of the dress, where it is cut out to give room for the vest, have scalloped edges.

Be careful in making the sleeve cuff bands that sufficient material is allowed to lap properly. Then use the smallest sized snaps, set on one-half inch apart, with the part of the snaps on the faced hem set back from the edge a good eighth of an inch. When fastened they will not show.

The skirt is cleverly gored at the front and slightly circular at the back. One of the sheer printed woolens in the rich new shade of brown, combined with a bright plain red woolen voile for contrast will be smart for less formal wear. Black transparent velvet will be lovely for a dressy frock.

Embarrassing Moments

What was the most embarrassing moment of your life? If you care to have it published address "Embarrassing Moments," Chicago Tribune. Please write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned.

Caught by the Boss.

Not having time during lunch to finish the chapter of a book I was reading, I decided to finish it during working hours in a little room next to my office which is rarely used. In the middle of my hookey escapade who should walk in (a place he never enters) but the boss, and I was supposed to have been working. If any one tells you the modern miss doesn't blush you can tell them she does, and how! M. D.

Seeking Confirmation.

During a vist to my mother-in-law's home I heard her relate to a friend that she and her family were going out to dinner the following Sunday. As soon as she had finished I asked her where they were going to dinner. No answer came from her nor from any of the members of her family.

Finally my husband spoke up and said, "Why, you asked them to come from work, he was sitting in his favorite chair in the living room and I crept up from behind and threw my to our house to dinner next Sunday."

And I had! K. M.

Affectionate Welcome.

My brother had just come home from college, and I could hardly wait until I saw him. When I came home arms impulsively around his neck, and gave him an affectionate, sisterly kiss.

Imagine my embarrassment when a perfectly strange, young man gazed at me with incredulous eyes. I only wish I could have sunk through the floor. My brother had just come in and laughed heartily, I felt worse than I did before. May I add that the stranger and I are now on the best of terms, and sometime in the near future we might—well, you know. J. T. P.

Not a Fair Exchange.

Walking into the lamp exchange department one day I passed a bag to the clerk and said, "Here are three globes I'd like to exchange."

The clerk peered into the bag and his face turned red as a smile appeared, "These aren't globes." I said, "What are they?" "Black walnuts," he answered.

In my hasty exit I mumbled something about having taken the wrong bag in my hurried departure from home. B. H.

Ingrowing Toenail —Swift, Sure Help

Soak a tiny bit of cotton in Moone's Emerald Oil and gently pack it under the corner of the nail. Change the cotton twice a day, each time making the cotton plug just a little larger, until the edge of the nail is free.

Your toe will no longer pain you.

The oil—marvelously soothing, penetrating, healing—instantly kills any infection, and soon softens the nail and surrounding cuticle so that you can easily lift it up.

Your druggist says if Emerald Oil doesn't correct your ingrowing nail, you can have your money back.

Notre Dame's Four Horsemen are riding again, but not on college gridirons. They are being featured, with Lew Ayres, in "The Spirit of Notre Dame," the current film at the State-Lake theater.

Alyce Chappele of the twinkling toes danced her way into Chicago theatergoers' hearts with Lou Holtz in "You Said It," at the Grand.

Indian Summer Brings Chicago Playhouses into Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

AFTER attending and reviewing six premières within eight days to celebrate the grand fall opening of the Chicago theatrical season, one's mind becomes a haze of mixed impressions. Floating around in the fog, however, there are a series of wonderments. For example:

I wonder if Walker Whiteside knows that his frequent expectoration upon the stage, in the rôle of the spitting Irishman in "Surf," dilutes rather than fortifies that South Seas melodrama?

I wonder if Phil Baker and Ted Healy, the aggressive and reckless jesters of the revue called "Crazy Quilt," know that dozens and hundreds of average theater-goers, before buying their tickets to any show, ask me: "Is it clean?"

I wonder if Maurice Browne, who is offering "The Venetian" under the auspices of the Dramatic League of Chicago, knows that the finger of destiny has begun to point in his direction as the Siegfried to arouse the Goodman theater from its present state of coma?

I wonder if Donald Brian, co-starring with Edith Taliaferro in "Private Lives," will tell me the location of the fountain of youth from which he apparently quaffs magic draughts that preserve him as a perpetual Prince Danilo?

I wonder if Beatrice Lillie of "The Third Little Show" isn't the only comedienne in history whose sense of humor refused to be ruined by the acquisition of a British title?

I wonder if Gregory Ratoff, who has brought "Girl Crazy" into Chicago in order to fulfill a vow made upon all the ikons of old Russia, is the Morris Gest of the future?

I wonder why Chicago theater managers continue to use the huddle system for their first nights?

I wonder if the play going year in this town will sustain the spirited pace at which it has started?

Finger of Destiny.

My speculations upon the possibility of Maurice Browne's assuming the directorate of a new repertory company at the Goodman theater, perhaps a year hence when Chicago is dressing its windows in readiness for the Century of Progress exposition, have a background in rumor. There has been some slow burning talk on the subject. The trustees of the Goodman, however, are saying nothing, according to their custom, and Mr. Browne himself has dropped no hint of ambitions in this direction.

He seems to be a logical candidate for this labor of Hercules, if Hubert Osborne does not return to the Goodman, and I rise to place him in nomination. His qualifications are numerous. He is a pioneer of the art theater movement in this country; he has a Chicago background, and a loyal following. He has risen from "little" to "big" theater status. His shy beginning on the fourth floor back of the Fine Arts building twenty years ago has carried him to leadership on the London stage and rating as an international impresario. He has given a convincing demonstration of executive prowess as well as art theater ideals.

On the other hand, his control of the Goodman might be too remote. He has many irons in the fire; he is the lessee or owner of two important theaters in London; he contributes plays to the commercial American stage. As a hypothetical director of the Goodman, his authority would probably be delegated, through most of the year, to the lieutenants that he might place in charge there.

These remarks are intended as first aid to the finger of destiny. If they are wasted, I shall have to find myself another candidate, and probably will begin to cast flirtatious eyes at Eva Le Gallienne.

Flaming Florentines.

Your affection for "The Venetian," which came to Chicago for its American première after a prosperous engagement in London, will depend largely upon your taste for "costume plays." When the drama gets into "costume" it also invades his-

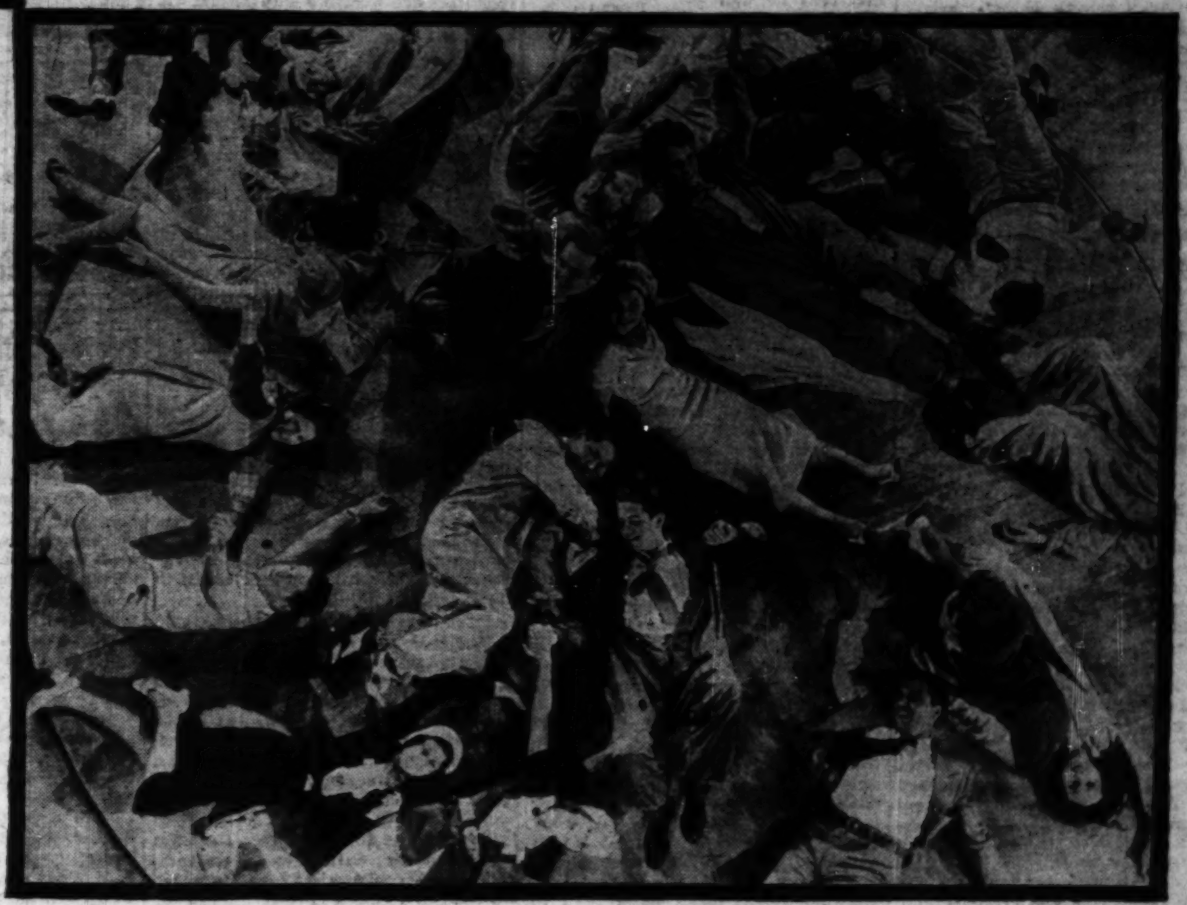
Despite all his medals, Warren Williams appears to be upset about something, but apparently his tirade is giving Bebe Daniels little to worry about. The picture is "Honor of the Family," and it's on display at the present time at the Oriental theater.

Regis Toomey is registering stark terror in this scene from "24 Hours," the photoplay adapted from Louis Bromfield's novel of the same name. Miriam Hopkins, shown above; Clive Brook, and Kay Francis also are in the picture, which is at the Chicago.



This is a puzzle picture. Try to find Hardie Albright, the smiling star of the stage success, "Young Sinners," and Maureen O'Sullivan, recently imported from the "Ould Sod," in this scene from "Skyline" at the Palace theater. (Note: They are in the center.)

Fresh from many movie triumphs in their laugh provoking shorts, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy may be seen at the Roosevelt in their first full-length picture. The gentleman with the mean looking forceps is James Santell. But maybe they're not real.

Here is something for the children as well as grownups. Leon Janney with "Zip-Zip the Cannaball" in "Penrod and Sam," from Booth Tarkington's famous novel of the same name. It is showing at the Woods for the week.

Civic Opera Company Promises Performances of "Magic Flute"

By Edward Moore.

ONE of the early performances of the season, promises the Chicago Civic Opera company, will be Mozart's "The Magic Flute." It will be, as far as Chicago's opera is concerned, a novelty, and it is also going to take a lot of casting.

About a quarter century has passed since the work went on here by a professional company. The last performance would seem to have been the time when Fritzi Scheff spilled the operatic beans by appearing as Papagena and getting more applause than the diva who sang the part of the Queen of the Night thought any Papagena was entitled to. It led to feelings and atmosphere not altogether those of sweetness and light, certainly not in the nature of Mozart's golden melodies.

Splendid Cast Chosen.

Papagena, by the way, is not mentioned in the program sent out by the opera company. But for the rest, here is what the company has assembled in the way of a stellar cast. It includes three highly specialized sopranos, a leading contralto, a leading tenor, a leading baritone, a buffo baritone, and a leading basso. They are thus itemized:

Sarastro	Alexander Kipnis
Astrofiammente	Nöel Eadie
Pamina, her daughter	Maria Rajdl
Queen's lady	Frida Leider
Queen's lady	Maria Olszewska
Prince Tamino	Paolo Marion
The Orator	Rudolf Bockelman
Papageno	Eduard Habich
Monostatos	Octave Dua

Conductor—Egon Pollak.

One of the reasons why Herbert Witherspoon made a trip to Europe last summer was to hunt up a coloratura soprano up to the music of Astrofiammente, who is otherwise known as the Queen of the Night. He had auditions here and there, in Paris, Berlin, Munich, and Salzburg, before making his choice. Finally he set-

By Mae Tinee.

Good morning!

"The Spirit of Notre Dame" is dedicated to the memory of the late Knute Rockne, famous and beloved head coach of a history making football team. You will remember that Mr. Rockne was on his way to the coast to complete a contract for some two reel football shorts when the airplane crash occurred that cost his life.

This picture's release at the start of the football season and on the eve of the Notre Dame-Northwestern game is timely and something in the nature of a stroke of genius on the part of the producers. Every football fan will want to see it. Every friend and admirer of Rockne will want to see it, while folks who don't know much about affairs of the gridiron, but like to keep up with current conversation, will buy tickets just to get a glimpse of the famous "Four Horsemen," Don Miller, Jim Crowley, Harry Stuhldreher, and Elmer Layden.

"Are those fellows really in this film?" you ask.

You bet they are! In closeups and in action.

You See Them at Work.

You see their work in the Notre Dame-Army encounter cleverly inserted via news reel. As for the closeup—don't they all autograph a football for a small, enthusiastic boy who sentimentally requests their signatures?

"And now, what are you going to do with it, Sonny?" asks one of the four, fatuously.

"I'm goin' to sell it to a guy for ten bucks," replies mamma's little business man.

O, before I forget it—don't ever again pronounce Carideo with the accent on the "rid." It's Car-ri-day-o, bearing down hard on the "day." If you don't believe it, hear Frank himself give you the lowdown in the picture. And he ought to know!

Little Love Stuff.

As far as the actual football stuff goes, "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is fine! And J. Farrell McDonald seems to me the best man who could have been picked to represent Rockne. He bears an astonishing resemblance to the great coach and is a seasoned and sincere actor. He and his team, at practice, at play, and in their little human communions are convincing. It is not their fault that soppy hokum has been introduced into the story, nor should they be criticized for participation in the same. I won't go into detail about the regrettable mush

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY RULE STILL GOOD IN SCHOOLS

Chicago a Pioneer in Physical Training.

BY IRENE STEYSKAL.

A lot of cold, unbiased testing seems to have forced oblivion upon any number of the good old axioms and maxims, but there is one—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," it goes—that apparently has not suffered from a waning of popularity. As far as we know it never has been so much as questioned; certainly not by our law making body in Springfield, which considered it worthy of legislation.

Since laws are generally couched in more formal terms, however, the gentlemen who make them downstate proclaimed that "physical culture" should be taught in the public schools. Since that time each locality has been working out, according to its immediate needs and means, its own program of execution.

In the Chicago schools an attempt to introduce instruction in physical education was made as early as 1863. Definite steps were taken in 1885 following a demonstration of exercises in the Ogden school made by the Chicago Turngemeinde. A committee was appointed by the board of education to formulate a program, an instructor was chosen and provision made for physical education classes at the Lincoln, Brown, Douglass, and King schools.

Chicago Leads Nation.

Chicago was the first city in the country to appoint [the following year] a supervisor of physical education. Henry Suder was the man appointed to the new post, a position which he held for 37 years.

A red letter year for Knute Rockne's alma mater, old Northwest Division High school, now Tuley, was 1890 when it erected the first fully equipped high school gymnasium for the teaching of physical education. Six years later the Franklin school claimed the same record for elementary schools.

In 1911 began the transition from the old swimmin' hole. Hyde Park High school was the first school for boys and girls erected with gymnasia and a swimming pool.

Pritzlaff Present Director.

The bureau of physical education was reorganized in 1925 with the appointment of one director and three supervisors. Two years ago the present director, August H. Pritzlaff, succeeded E. C. Delaporte to that position.

Mr. Pritzlaff had been instructor of physical education, coach and dean of boys at Senn High school preceding his appointment to the directorship. Associated with Mr. Pritzlaff on the bureau as supervisors are H. R. Crook, Vera Gardiner, and Maj. F. L. Beals. Maj. Beals, assisted by Maj. H. H. Moore, is in charge of military training in the high schools. Under him are twenty-six instructors directing the R. O. T. C. units which are established in twenty senior high schools.

Under the supervision of Miss Gardiner and Mr. Crook are the Normal college, with eight teachers of physical education; Crane college, with six; there are 204 instructors in twenty-four senior high schools; seventy-five in twenty-seven junior high schools; the 302 elementary schools have 228 teachers; eleven continuation schools have two instructors; and there are five in the six prevocational schools. There are also 16 physiotherapists employed in the city's four schools for crippled children.

Apart from the military training conducted by Maj. Beals, physical education in the public schools comprises physical education classes, corrective work, health education classes; athletic and after-school play; swimming instruction; and the safety patrols in the elementary and junior high schools.

Physical instruction in the kindergartens and elementary schools is, of course, more or less informal. In the kindergartens and through the third grade its consists largely of song games, story plays and the dramatization of activities in the school. From the third grade on a more formal course is provided which includes setting up exercises in the yard or gymnasium, where they are available; folk dancing, swimming in the three elementary schools where swimming polls are installed—Swift, Carter, and Scanlon—and exercises with gymnasium equipment in the schools where such equipment is available.

Diversified High School Program.

A more definite and diversified program, made possible by equipment, time allotment and the teaching staff, is carried out in the junior high schools. The number of instructors in physical education—one for approximately every 650 pupils—in the junior high schools varies from one to five. New junior high schools and those that have been remodeled are equipped with a girls' gymnasium, a boys' gymnasium, and a swimming pool.

In almost every high school in the city a girls' athletic association is established. Awards for athletic activities are based on a point system that considers not only achievement but sportsmanship, scholarship, and health activties. In both the senior and junior high schools girls' athletics are limited to intramural competition.

Boys of the junior high schools also have their athletic associations. While emphasis is placed in intramural competition, limited competition between schools is permitted in indoor baseball, basketball, swimming and track and field athletics. A doctor's certificate, parental permission, and scholastic eligibility are the requirements for membership on one of the school teams.

Bruno Kluge President.

The program for athletics in the senior high schools, superimposed upon the courses followed in the junior high schools, provides for much wider competition between schools. A board of control made up of representatives, who are physical education instructors, from each high school formulates rules and regulates the conducting of interscholastic competition. Heading this group as president is Bruno Kluge of Bowen High school. George W. Steffens of Austin is vice president, and Mr. Pritzlaff serves as secretary and treasurer.

Games played for coveted city championships range all the way from chess and checkers to football. Lindblom is present holder of the football title. Last season Lindblom won championships also for cross country running and novice and senior gymnastics.

Senn claims championships for golf, ice skating in the senior class, indoor and outdoor track in the senior division, and swimming [25 yards] in the senior and junior divisions.

Other title holders are: Lane for tennis, junior ice skating and baseball; Roosevelt for junior outdoor and indoor track and fencing; Crane for basketball in the heavyweight class and soccer; Marshall for basketball in the lightweight class; Lake View for rifle markmanship; Englewood for swimming [20 yards] in the senior division; Schurz for swimming [20 yards] in the junior division, and Tilden for wrestling.

Tuley claims the checkers champion, and Austin came out with flying colors in the ches tournament.

NOTABLES ATTEND BIRTHDAY PARTY OF "Y"

The Lincoln-Belmont Y. M. C. A. had three candles on its birthday cake Wednesday noon, when community organizations met at the "Y" to celebrate the third anniversary of its dedication. The Rev. John Timothy Stone, president of Presbyterian Theological seminary, delivered the anniversary address and W. A. Wieboldt, one of the founders of the department, was a special guest. In the front row of the picture, left to right, are William Francis, president of the Chicago Y. M. C. A.; Mr. Wieboldt, the Rev. Jacob Pister, and the Rev. Dr. Stone. Rear: Henry Dormeyer, district governor of Kiwanis International; Elton A. Gould, president of the Lake View Kiwanis club; George Huber, president of the Lake View Lions' club, and L. S. Westerman, executive secretary of the Lincoln-Belmont "Y." [TRIBUNE Photo.]

WHO'S WHO ON NORTH SIDE

Joseph A. Weber has been in the limelight recently in the Devon-Western avenue district through his activities in organizing the depositors of the North Town State bank. Mr. Weber, an attorney, with offices in the loop, resides with his family at 6512 Maplewood avenue.

From 1912 to 1918 he was state representative from the Sixth senatorial district and the Legislative Voters' league said of him that he was "the best representative sent to Springfield from this district" during that time.

Mr. Weber is active in civic affairs, and is secretary of the United Depositors' association. He is devoting a large proportion of his time to the welfare and interests of depositors of closed banks.

His favorite sport is bowling.

TRAFFIC LIGHTS ERECTED AT TWO UPTOWN CORNERS

Officers of the Clark-Wilson Center Business Men's association were jubilant last week over the installation of stop and go lights on Clark street at Wilson and Montrose avenues. The traffic lights were installed by the city department of gas and electricity, at the request of Ald. John A. Massen [48th] and Ald. John J. Hoellen [47th], according to Harry S. Merker, president of the association, and Al Boehm, secretary. The association has been campaigning for the installation of the lights for several years.

ANSHE EMET INSTALLS ASSISTANT RABBI AT FIRST FRIDAY SERVICE

Anshe Emet congregation opened its late Friday evening service for the season on Friday evening with a sermon by Rabbi Solomon Goldman, who spoke on "Rabbis—What For?" Rabbi Harry Z. Zwelling was installed at this service as assistant to Rabbi Goldman. Rabbi Zwelling is a graduate of Ohio State university, Columbia university, and the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, and has been connected with the youth movement for a number of years.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, Oct. 12.

Rake up bare spots in the lawn, scratch with steel toothed rake, sow grass seed over it, and germination will quickly occur. A little commercial fertilizer will stimulate the young plants into vigorous growth and enable them to endure through the winter. If it is desired to keep root crops outdoors through the winter prepare the place now, before severe frosts. Carrots, late cabbage, beets (not too old and woody), potatoes, sweet potatoes, and turnips may be kept by this method.

Tuesday, Oct. 13.

Some of the early hardy chrysanthemums are bursting into bloom. A new yellow sort, known as Valerine, is a low growing variety attractive for Chicago and vicinity. Keep an eye open for varieties that come into early bloom because only the extremely early kinds can be depended on for a display. Continue to make cuttings of tender plants that have been growing outdoors. Pot a few plants, cutting back at the time of lifting.

Gladiolus that have ripened their leaves should be dug, the excessive soil removed, the corms dried for a few hours, and later placed in a cool, dry basement over winter. Save all bulbils of the rare kinds for future planting. Exchange with gardening friends.

Dahlias may be dug, or the tubers left in the ground until frost. Lift the tubers without breaking because they keep better. Cut off the stems a few inches above the ground before digging. Do not neglect labeling securely. Place a six inch layer of sand on the cellar floor, pack the tubers in layers, covering each layer with dry sand or peatmoss, and cover the top layer with a five or six inch layer.

Wednesday, Oct. 14.

Try a few of the bulbous iris in a sheltered and well drained situation, such as a rock garden. Pansies and violas may be propagated from cuttings at this time, an excellent method of preserving an outstanding variety. Remove the side shoots, with a few roots attached, if possible, and insert them firmly in sandy soil in a cold frame or box which may be placed in the frame. Cover the sash with boards during cold weather. Many other plants may be increased in this way. Plant narcissus bulbs for their effect in the perennial borders, or for naturalizing with shrubs or in the outlying sections of the grounds.

Thursday, Oct. 15.

Bring in the amaryllis from out of doors, gradually dry them off by reducing the supply of water from day to day, and store in a dry, cool place. They become active toward January, at which time they may be repotted. Many inquiries regarding the proper distance apart that street trees should be planted have been received. The elm, which is popular, should be used on wide streets, and planted 50 feet apart. Elms never attain their maximum beauty if planted close together. The hard maple is also a large growing tree and should be used on wide streets. Plant the ash and tree of heaven on narrow streets and 40 feet apart. Use one species along a street instead of a miscellaneous assortment with a different habit of growth. The box elder, poplar, catalpa, and willow must be sparingly used, or planted where nothing else will grow. They are short lived and easily injured by storms.

Friday, Oct. 16.

When planting hedges, and especially the privet, plant at least three to six inches deeper than the lowest branch of the plant. These plants root along the stems and deep planting makes a thicker hedge. When planting cut to within six inches of the ground to force the dormant buds into vigorous activity. Mulch after the ground freezes. Plant a pussy willow (salix caprea has the largest catkins) for a supply of bouquet material in early spring. The native species (salix discolor) has smaller flowers, but is very good. Quarter inch mesh wire will keep rabbits from injuring trees.

Saturday, Oct. 17.

Plant a few shrubs or low trees to attract birds. Useful plants for this purpose are the chokeberry, spicebush, Japanese barberry, cornelian cherry, some dogwoods, Morrow's honeysuckle, mulberry, smooth and staghorn sumac, elderberry, mountain ash, snowberry, Indian currant, snowball, vinurnum dentatum, lantana, lentago, prunifolium, and tomentosum. Wild grape twiggy shrubs form nesting places. Plant some hybrid lilacs to furnish a range of free flowering tall shrubs, and in unusual colors.

Charles Bainbridge, receiver, and his attorney, Jacob L. Fox, agreed to abide by the depositors' decision. Mr. Fox expressed the belief that the bank will pay a minimum of 60 per cent when all accounts are settled.

Five of the largest depositors, with Joseph A. Weber, attorney, 6512 Maplewood avenue, as chairman, will confer with the receiver and act for the depositors.

Mr. Weber is secretary of the United Depositors' Committee of Illinois, an organization working for the depositors of all closed banks. John J. Henneberry, president of the North Town Kiwanis club; Paul A. Ford, A. L. Watts, and Eunice Jiranek are the other members of the North Town committee.

His visit to Chicago is occasioned by the meeting of the regional officers and directors of the Volunteers, beginning tomorrow at the Stevens hotel. The assembly will consider ways and means of bringing relief to the unemployed this winter.

CIVIC LEADERS PAY BIRTHDAY TRIBUTE TO "Y"

Luncheon for Founders of Lincoln-Belmont.

Three tiny flames atop three candles—symbols of its three years of progress—glowed above the birthday cake of the Lincoln-Belmont Y. M. C. A. on Wednesday noon. Elton A. Gould, president of the Lake View Kiwanis club, poised his shining knife over the cake with its three candles. The three years of progress had been a matter of faith, hope, and charity—the first two years having been faith and hope, while the last one has been largely a matter of charity, as one of the speakers said. Mr. Gould took a big breath and blew, and out went the candles. Then everybody had a piece of cake and made himself at home.

The third anniversary party of the Lincoln-Belmont department on Wednesday noon drew together representatives of nearly every men's organization in the comunity. All of the 125 persons present had been somehow instrumental in securing the establishment of the "Y" three years ago, and were there to celebrate its success.

John Timothy Stone Speaks.

Dr. John Timothy Stone, president of the Presbyterian Theological seminary, was the principal speaker on the program. Dr. Stone urged those present to maintain an emphasis on the spiritual side of life, and pointed out that the Y. M. C. A. has progressed by perseverance. In fact, Dr. Stone declared, the way to progress is to keep reaching out, to take on more burdens and responsibilities even before finishing with the ones already possessed. He complimented the department on its progress, and the business men on the coöperation.

The chairman, Mr. Gould, introduced W. A. Wieboldt as a special guest of the "Y," and called on him for a few remarks. Mr. Wieboldt made a short talk, in which he praised the community for its spirit, and declined to take credit for the success of the department, which he was largely instrumental in obtaining for the district. He preferred, he said, to have the credit go to those who have been working with the "Y" for the last three years.

Other Speakers Heard.

Others who made short talks were William J. Francis, president of the Chicago Y. M. C. A.; L. S. Wasterman, executive secretary of the Lincoln-Belmont department; Bud McCue, representing the boys' clubs; August Eich of the Lake View Kiwanis club, and George Huber, president of the Lake View Lions club. The Rev. Dore N. Ester gave the invocation, and songs were led by Harry E. Clohecy of the Kiwanis club. W. J. Parker, general secretary of the Chicago Y. M. C. A., was present.

Approximately 50 members of the Lake View Kiwanis club and 25 members of the Lake View Lions club attended the party. Other organizations represented were the Southport Business Men's association, the North End club, the Lake View Ministers' association, the Clark-Diversey Business Men's association, the Belmont Avenue Business Men's association, the Lincoln-Fullerton Business Men's association, the North Center Chamber of Commerce, the Lincoln-Belmont Business Men's association, the Clark-Belmont Business Men's association, the Ashland-Irving Business association, the Central Lake View Association of Commerce, the Mid-Town North Business Men's association, and the Central North Town Business association.

Paul Hughes was elected president of the February graduating class at Waller High school, in class balloting held recently. Other officers elected by the class are Wayne Proell, vice president, and Miss Lil Wukitz, secretary.

This production is not a part of its regular season of four plays, but is being given for the benefit of the Winnetka Community house building fund. The director of the play is Mrs. Sherman Goble, who last year directed the production of "Smilin' Through." She is being assisted by Mrs. Ray Feagans, who is also chairman of the benefit committee.

Included in the cast are Donald Morrison, Gordon Buck, Edward Baumann Jr., Charles Eastman, Stanford Sherman, Sherman Goble Jr., I. O. Hughes, F. J. Kaempfer, Dr. Davies, Lazear, Harry P. Clarke, David Kennicott, Charles J. Eastman Jr., Mrs. Charles Karnopp, Miss Helen English, Mrs. Dale Plympton and Mrs. W. O. Coleman.

All of the members of the club have enlisted in some phase of work in connection with the production in order that the contribution to the community house may be as large as possible. Assisting Mrs. Feagans on the benefit committee are Mrs. Roger K. Ballard, Mrs. Louis Sherman, Mrs. Gross Williams, and Mrs. Goble.

Included in the list of patrons and patronesses for the occasion are Mr. and Mrs. John C. Marshall, Dr. and Mrs. L. Harrison Mettler, Mrs. Frank T. Crawford, Mr. and Mrs. Ayres Boal, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Boynton, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Murray, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Norem, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. English, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Rumsey, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Neighborhood Theaters

Mundy's Jubilee Singers, Negro chorus of 75 voices, is featured in the stage show at the Uptown theater this week. The chorus was one of the prize winners at the first Chicagoland Musical festival, sponsored by THE TRIBUNE two years ago, and since then has achieved considerable prominence by its rendition of Negro spirituals and other chorus music.

"An American Tragedy," with Sylvia Sidney, Phillips Holmes, and Frances Dee, comprises the Uptown's screen attraction. This is the picture Mr. Theodore Dreiser, who wrote the story, tried to enjoin the producers from showing. Well, they're showing it, and there is some argument among reviewers as to whether the picture is suffering from too much Dreiser or too much Hollywood.

Double at Pantheon.

"Too Many Cooks" and "Sporting Blood" are double featured at the Pantheon. In the former Bert Wheeler (without Woolsey) is shown as a young bridegroom whose honeymoon is almost spoiled by too many of his wife's relations. Dorothy Lee plays the part of the bride, and the stuttering Roscoe Ates has a minor part that provides a few giggles. "Sporting Blood" is a horse racing picture with Clark Gable and Madge Evans, and has an exciting finish.

"Traveling Husbands" and "Transatlantic" are the two features on the double bill starting today for a two day run at the Teatro del Lago in No Man's Land. "Traveling Husbands," in which Evelyn Brent is starred, is an amusing and interesting, yet bitter tale of a salesman who is a respectable resident at home and a gay Lothario on the road. Edmund Lowe takes the honors as the star in "Transatlantic." There is plenty of fast action in the picture, which takes the audience on an exciting ocean voyage from New York to France.

"The Reckless Hour" and "Phantom of Paris" are to be shown on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Joan Crawford at Varsity.

The Varsity theater in Evanston has "This Modern Age," with Joan Crawford and Clarence Darrow's "Mystery of Life" as the two features on the double bill starting tomorrow and continuing through Wednesday. In "This Modern Age" Miss Crawford is just as glamorous as ever in the rôle of the young American girl who goes to Paris to join her divorced mother, Pauline Frederick, after the death of her father. Subsequently she falls in love with a snobbish young Bostonian, played by Neil Hamilton, and because of the gay and questionable past of her mother almost loses out, but young love triumphs in the end.

"Dirigible" at Vogue.

"Dirigible" and "Broadminded" are double featured at the Vogue. The former features Jack Holt, Fay Wray, and Ralph Graves in a thrilling story of air exploits by two chronic rivals who are likewise friends. Jack is the commander of a dirigible, and Ralph is the daredevil airplane pilot who is always making fun of the "gasbags."

"Broadminded" features Joe E. Brown, Ona Munson, William Collier Jr., Marjorie White, and Thelma Todd in a farce about a boy who is sent away from home to keep him away from women. Joe is the trusted cousin who is supposed to keep them away from feminine wiles. O, yeah!

Dirigible and "Too Many Cooks" are also at the North Center.

OUR TOWN

It was a cause of Our Town vs. the home town when Dick Vernet, erstwhile of the Cross class at the Edgewater Presbyterian church, went home to Providence, R. I., for his vacation recently. He liked the old home town so well that he decided to stay. Not so, however, with Dick's brother, Hank. The Vernet family still has its representative in Our Town, for Hank is hanging on.

More than 40 relatives and friends of Mrs. Simon Weinstock gathered recently at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Maurice Shapiro of 1346 Greenleaf avenue, to bid her good-by and good luck. She will leave shortly for an extended visit with another of her daughters, Mrs. Louis Cohen of Minneapolis. Mrs. Weinstock has seen our town grow since the time when her boys used to fish and play ball on the Michigan avenue lake front, before the present lake front existed.

Homer Klaworn of 4452 Hermitage avenue must have slept poorly last Sunday night, for he fell asleep on Monday morning while driving a roadster owned by John Smith, 4531 Nevada street. The car crashed a telephone pole at Catalpa and Lincoln avenues, injuring Mr. Smith, who was taken to the Swedish Covenant hospital for treatment of cuts on his forehead and left cheek.

A LOT of dental gold which was destined to go into Uptown teeth is now filling another destiny. A man with a gun snatched a briefcase containing $1,000 worth of gold from Miss Edna Wolf in the hallway of 4621 Broadway, where she was delivering it to our townsman, Dr. Harry E. Denen.

ALL EDGEWATER MEETS TUESDAY TO MAP RELIEF

Rogers Park to Sponsor Charity Ball.

Plans for unemployment relief throughout the north side began to take shape last week, with the calling of a meeting of all Edgewater organizations, to be held at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening at Trumbull school, Foster and Ashland avenues, and the setting of a date for the Rogers Park Charity ball, which will be sponsored by various community organizations on Oct. 28. Other relief measures included the establishment of relief stations and the appointment of joint relief committees in the wards.

The Edgewater meeting, which is believed to be the first attempt of a Chicago community to unite all groups behind a single relief program, is sponsored by the Edgewater Committee on Unemployment, representing schools, churches, charity agencies, fraternal organizations, social clubs, and business groups. The Senn High School band will play under the direction of Capt. C. D. Ostergren.

Dr. Bickham to Speak.

The mass meeting will be addressed by Dr. M. H. Bickham of the special work division of the Governor's commission; Roy Jacobson of the Worker's Committee on Unemployment, and by local leaders. To prevent overlapping, duplication, and abuse of charity by uniting community efforts at relief will be the chief object of the meeting. Churches and schools will be asked to care for their own, and to refer all others to the nearest station of the Governor's Joint Relief fund in Chase Park.

A plan to increase employment in the building trades will be presented, and a petition will be circulated, asking Gov. Emmerson to call a special session of the legislature to deal with relief needs, particularly by the release of funds for public works. The dire need of local school teachers will also be discussed.

Members of Committee.

Local plans for the raising of relief funds, apart from the Joint Relief fund, to be used in the Edgewater community, are also being considered by the committee, which includes: David M. Davidson, principal of Senn High school; Dr. Asa J. Ferry, pastor of the Edgewater Presbyterian church; the Rev. H. Truman Gordon, pastor of the Unity Lutheran church of Edgewater; the Rev. T. C. Hume of the Summerdale Congregational church; Carl J. Johnson, president of the Uptown Clark Street Business Men's association; Harry Klocke, president of the Rogers Park Lions club; Rabbi Aaron N. Sofer of the North Shore congregation; Miss Elizabeth Johnson, director of the Chase Park station of the Joint Relief fund, and Thomas F. Myers Jr., community publisher.

Lions to Start Station.

Meanwhile, the Uptown Lions club is busy establishing a relief station at 1106 Leland avenue, to take care of the needy in Uptown. Bruce L. Stocking, president; Thomas D. Bell, and John P. Keating, past president, are directing the club's campaign to collect clothes and food for the unemployed, but Mr. Keating reported that the entire club is actively assisting in the relief work.

According to the plan of the Lions club, any one wishing assistance will receive it upon presenting a note from some pastor in the community, or from one of the members of the club, or from any other person of recognized standing.

"This does away with a lot of the red tape connected with getting relief from the usual charitable organizations, which have to stop and investigate everything," Mr. Keating explained. "By having some one we know here in the community to vouch for the applicant, we are assured that the cases are really deserving, as we can presume that the person sending us a note is sure of the applicant's need. If we haven't what the applicant needs, we will try to get it for him.

"The North Shore Hotel association has voted to assist in establishing the station.

Ravenswood to Plan Relief.

Ravenswood relief work will be planned at a meeting of the Ravenswood Legion auxiliary on Tuesday at Chase Park, it was announced by Mrs. L. W. Mae, 6114 Paulina street, last week. Mrs. C. A Hubbard, new president, will preside.

The Rogers Park charity ball and card party will be held in the Loyola university gymnasium on Oct. 28, and is sponsored by the Rogers Park emergency relief committee, composed of representatives of civic and business organizations in Rogers Park. At a meeting of the committee held on Tuesday evening, Bruce E. Hakes was elected general chairman of the committee, and seven vice chairmen were elected to organize the special aspects of the work.

The vice chairmen are: Mrs. Victor R. Clark, Ludwig Sussman, Mrs. Bradley Carr, Cornelius Cole, Mrs. Charles Bison, Dr. Harry Bylan, and Capt. Patrick J. Harding. The vice chairmen elected Mr. Sussman treasurer and Mrs. Clark secretary. Mr. Cole was elected chairman of tickets for the ball, and other chairmen of special committees will be elected later.

3,000 Tickets to Be Sold.

On Thursday, 3,000 tickets for the ball were turned over to workers for sale throughout the community. Dr. Howard Dabbs, sponsor of the Shooting Stars club, has offered to donate the services of the club's 20 piece dance orchestra, and the Loyola gymnasium is being obtained at cost. The only charges will be for heat, light, and janitor service. It is planned to turn over the entire receipts to the relief of Rogers Park unemployed. Tickets are to be sold for $1 each, and will admit two.

Mr. Sussman, who is manager of the Adelphi motion picture theater at 7074 North Clark street, has offered to donate 10 per cent of his gross receipts, beginning last Monday and ending next Friday, to the Rogers Park relief work.

Mr. Myers, who called the meetings for the promotion of the ball, acted as chairman until the election of Mr. Hakes. Mr. Myers refused to be nominated as an officer of the committee, but promised his coöperation in the work.

Organizations Coöperating.

Organizations coöperating with the committee include the Rogers Park Woman's club, the Rogers Park Catholic Woman's club, the Howard District Business association, the Rogers Park-Clark Street Business association, the Rogers Park Legion post and auxiliary, the Harles post and auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Birchwood Improvement association, the women's department of the church federation, the Brownson circle, the Glenola club, the Rogers Park Improvement association, the Women's Neighborhood Club of Rogers Park, the Gale Parent-Teacher association, the Sullivan Parent-Teacher association, the Rogers Park Lions club, the Field Parent-Teacher association, and parents of children attending the Kilmer school, who have formed an organization to coöperate in the work.

At a dinner given by W. M. Dewey of the Edgewater Beach hotel on Monday evening, Ald. James R. Quinn [50th] and Joseph H. Voss, Democratic ward committeeman, volunteered to take charge of collections in the 50th ward for the joint relief fund.

John O'Shea to Head Drive.

John O'Shea, River Park commissioner, was appointed head of the drive for the area between Foster avenue, Clark street, Irving Park boulevard, and the north branch. W. G. Ziegler, Peter Lenz, and F. W. Passelt will help him. Ald. John J. Hoellen [47th] has promised to coöperate.

Numerous representatives of Uptown and Edgewater attended the dinner. Mr. Dewey is chairman of the joint emergency relief committee for the north side, and for the 48th ward Ald. John A. Massen [48th] and J. Frank Lyman, Democratic ward committeeman, agreed to serve as captains in the drive for funds. V. J. Curto will assist them. Perry Quinlan will head the Edgewater district, assisted by the Rev. Francis J. Martin of the Granville Avenue Presbyterian church, and James H. McIlvain. Others who are coöperating include the Rev. Mr. Gordon, the Rev. Mr. Hume, Lester Harris of the Sheridan-Plaza hotel, and the Rev. C. O. Bengtson. Ald. George A. Williston [49th] sent a telegram promising his coöperation.

FIRST BAPTIST, EVANSTON, GETS EASTERN PASTOR

The Rev. C. H. Heimsath Takes Post Nov. 15.

The Rev. Charles H. Heimsath, Bridgeport, Conn., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Evanston and will come to the church Nov. 1. He will preach his first sermon on Sunday, Nov. 15.

THE REV. C. H. HEIMSATH.

Since June 1, when Dr. James Madison Stifler, pastor for twenty-two years, resigned to take up new duties at the University of Chicago, Dr. John Milton Moore has filled the pulpit. The Rev. Mr. Moore will continue to preach until Nov. 15.

The Rev. Mr. Heimsath is regarded as one of the leaders among the younger Baptist ministers. He will come to the Evanston congregation from the First Baptist Church of Bridgeport, Conn., where he has been pastor five years. During his pastorate the Bridgeport congregation has grown steadily in size and the new parish house has been erected. He was also instrumental in establishing the community vacation church school, which now serves 300 boys and girls each summer.

His ministerial career began in his home town of San Antonio, Tex., where he was assistant pastor of the First Baptist church during the ministry of Dr. Samuel J. Porter, now of the First Baptist church of Washington, D. C.

Prior to studying for the ministry he received his bachelor of arts and master of arts degrees from the University of Texas, where he later served as a member of the faculty in the English department. He has graduated from the Yale Divinity school and has attended the Southern Baptist seminary at Louisville.

The Rev. Mr. Heimsath, who is 37 years old, is married and has two sons. His wife is also of Texas ancestry and is a graduate of Bryn Mawr. She is now completing work for her doctor of philosophy degree at Yale.

H. G. WELLS, ONCE FOE OF RADIO, TO MAKE U. S. BOW

Proves He's No Perfect Prognosticator.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

H. G. WELLS.
[Kadel & Herbert.]

H. G. Wells is by no means the perfect prognosticator. No longer ago than 1927 he ran up against radio and found it useless. The famous historian of the future pictured the invisible audience bored to death while a maze of aerials cluttered up the housetops like wire entanglements on the fields of France. Mr. Wells then doubted that even the most ardent fan's enthusiasm could last more than two weeks, and thought that radio listeners must be "very sedentary persons living in badly lighted houses or otherwise unable to read."

Since then Mr. Wells has got over his gloomy outlook and has been employing the ether waves to talk on "What I Would Do with the World." Next week he comes to New York and on Saturday evening he will speak over an NBC coast to coast net, including WENR.

Apparently no one gets homesick faster than a New Yorker abroad. As soon as Jimmy Walker hit the continent he was talking back over the radio. At 4 o'clock this afternoon Roxy is going to speak over NBC from Berlin.

The prince of Wales and John Masefield, poet laureate, will also be heard in international broadcasts this month. The prince is to speak at 2:45 p. m. Wednesday, Oct. 21, over CBS from London, and Masefield will discuss "Ships and Their Builders" at 2:30 the following afternoon on the same net.

When H. H. Rajput, Hindu graduate of Oxford and a former officer in the British intelligence service, came to Chicago to inaugurate his series of adventure stories based on war experiences he turned to the University of Chicago to get real Hindu music. He found there several students with native instruments, among them stringed affairs used in India for more than 2,000 years. Over the air they sound like flutes and other woodwinds.

James Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, dropped in to inspect the Hindu instruments, threw up his hands, and walked out.

Now that the nation's leading dance orchestras are playing college medleys nightly, MCA hastens to point out that 50 per cent of the nationally known orchestras attended college and that 70 per cent of the musicians employed in these orchestras are men of university training.

But not so many of them, possibly, are graduates. Nor does it make any difference.

Ferde Grofe presented a number Friday evening on the Whiteman hour memorializing the life of Knute Rockne. . . . Ernest Naftzger, the Something for Everyone man, has cracked 10,584 jokes over the air and has had his name misspelled 74 ways in fan mail. . . . Kate Smith has seen her fourth full moon come over the mountain from the Palace. . . . Red Cagle, the sometime pigskin carrier, has made his radio debut. . . . CBS is broadcasting football by television. It's the miniature scoreboard arrangement.

Art Jarrett, who has a style combining the lyric and downright, lowdown jazz, will make his bow as a band leader over CBS at 2:30 tomorrow. . . . Harry Stuhldreher, once one of Notre Dame's famed Four Horsemen, will be heard over NBC at 6:15 tonight. . . . Bob Becker, TRIBUNE outdoor writer, and Cal Johnson start a series titled "Around the Campfire" for NBC at 8:45 tomorrow evening. . . . "Seth Parker" and his Jonesport neighbors are going to tour the nation. They will be in Chicago on Oct. 25 and 26 and will broadcast from local studios.

Song hits, fashions, sports, and historic events of the '60s are woven into a new radio series titled Musical Memories, to be heard over CBS beginning next Sunday at 5:30 p. m. . . . Of Cantor's many Cantor for President slogans, we prefer "Don't say can't; say Cantor." . . . Ten minutes after Ted Weems introduced his new "Since I Broke That Record" [you can hear the crack], fans who heard it over the air appeared at the Trianon to hear more. . . . From Russ Columbo, girls: "My ideal girl has to be intelligent, a good sport, and be possessed of an infinite sweetness."

SEIDEL TO PLAY KREISLER SONG FRIDAY EVENING

Toscha Seidel will play one of Fritz Kreisler's most popular compositions over Columbia from 9 to 9:45 next Friday evening.

The "Liebeslied," or Love's Song," is one of the most charming pieces of melodic writing in the whole violin repertoire, and illustrates Kreisler's genius equally as composer and interpreter.

Theo Karle, American tenor, will sing Liza Lehmann's famous song, "Ah, Moon of My Delight," and Sam Lanin's orchestra will be heard in special arrangements of some of the hit numbers from "Sally," as well as "I'm with You," from the Follies."

Alice Mock Will Sing Over W-G-N on Tuesday

"Mighty Lak a Rose" will be sung by Alice Mock, contralto, in the program over W-G-N at 8 Tuesday evening. The orchestra, under the direction of Adolphe Dumont, will present "Valencia," "Thousand and One Nights" and other selections.

FEATURE W-G-N PROGRAMS THIS WEEK

Elizabeth Lennox (left), contralto, who will be featured over W-G-N at 8:30 tomorrow evening. Donald Brian, who plays the male lead in Noel Coward's "Private Lives," will speak over W-G-N at 5:15 this afternoon, inaugurating the new "Fifth Row Center" program. Edith Taliaferro, the feminine star of "Private Lives," will also speak on the theater hour this afternoon.

CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA AGAIN TO BE HEARD ON AIR

13 Saturday Programs Planned.

Chicago's world famous Civic opera will again be broadcast this year to a nation of music lovers by NBC. This announcement was made yesterday by M. H. Aylesworth, president of the company.

The stirring music, pageantry and drama of the opera will be brought to the fireside of American homes, no matter whether in the crowded city or the lonely back woods settlement for the third successive year through the coöperation of the Civic Opera company and NBC.

Many New Presentations.

Under the new directorship of Herbert Witherspoon, famous in his own right as an opera star and as a director, the opera company will this year offer new presentations never before heard in this country and will also bring to radio listeners a host of new and brilliant singers gathered by Mr. Witherspoon from all parts of Europe during a scouting trip for talent last summer.

This year, instead of cutting into the middle of the opera as has been the custom in the past, the broadcast will run from 8 to 8:30 p. m., central standard time, each Saturday night, beginning Nov. 7, thus allowing the radio listener to hear the overture and entire first act of the performance.

13 Operas to Be Presented.

Further perfections in broadcasting technique are expected to be introduced in the broadcasts this year allowing music lovers to hear the music nearly as perfectly as though they were sitting in the best seats in the house. The new parabolic microphones, known as the "human ears" of radio, will be used.

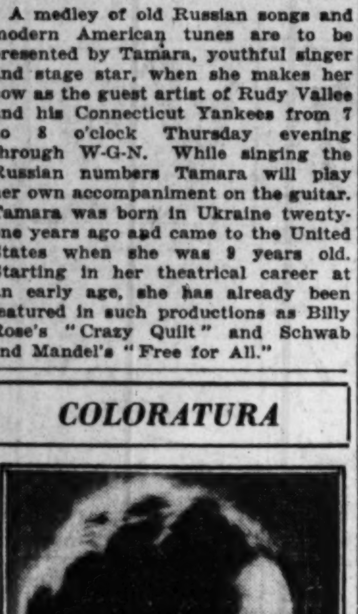
In all 13 operas are expected to be presented during the season of 1931-'32 including old favorites and American premiers.

The Chicago Civic opera was the first grand opera in the world to be broadcast direct from the stage.

TAMARA TO BE FEATURED WITH RUDY AND BAND

A medley of old Russian songs and modern American tunes are to be presented by Tamara, youthful singer and stage star, when she makes her bow as the guest artist of Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees from 7 to 8 o'clock Thursday evening through W-G-N. While singing the Russian numbers Tamara will play her own accompaniment on the guitar. Tamara was born in Ukraine twenty-one years ago and came to the United States when she was 9 years old. Starting in her theatrical career at an early age, she has already been featured in such productions as Billy Rose's "Crazy Quilt" and Schwab and Mandel's "Free for All."

COLORATURA



LETIZIA LEITA.
[Moffett-Russell Photo.]

W-G-N will present Signorina Letizia Leita, European coloratura soprano, who has just arrived in this country, at 9:15 this evening.

Signorina Leita has been singing with unusual success in Italy, having made her debut in Milan at the Theatre Del Verme as Gilda in "Rigoletto" a year ago, and also appeared in the "Barber of Seville" and "Lucia De Lammermoor" at the same opera house.

5TH ROW CENTER PREMIER IS SET FOR 5:15 TODAY

Miss Taliaferro, Brian to Be Presented.

From the theater box office comes the title of W-G-N'S new Sunday theater review, "Fifth Row Center," which will have its premier presentation at 5:15 this afternoon with Edith Taliaferro and Donald Brian, the stars of Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," as its opening attraction.

"Fifth Row Center" is dedicated to the legitimate theater and will present each Sunday intimate chatter about some outstanding show appearing on the Chicago stage, and feature the personal appearance of some star in the production.

Starred as Child.

Edith Taliaferro has appeared in scores of plays in America, England, and Australia. She started her stage career when she was two and a half years old and had star rôles in "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" as a child.

Donald Brian, who supports Miss Taliaferro, has been a stage favorite for many years, his first Broadway appearance having been in "Florodora." Real success, however, did not come to him until the night "The Merry Widow" was unfurled to a wildly enthusiastic audience. Brian made a great hit in the rôle of Prince Danilo and a new star was made. In recent seasons he has appeared in "How's Your Health," "The Queen's Husband," "Candlelight," and the Players' club revival of "Becky Sharp."

Many Stars Presented.

In presenting "Fifth Row Center," W-G-N is enlarging its already successful policy of giving its radio audience stage stars of prominence. During the last year it has brought before the microphone such famous personages as Otis Skinner, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Grace George, De Wolf Hopper, Tom Powers, Oscar Shaw, Blanche Ring, and Lillian Kemble Cooper.

Among the stage attractions which W-G-N will have in future "Fifth Row Center" programs are: "The Silent Witness," "The Third Little Show," "Girl Crazy," "Crazy Quilt," "The Venetian," and "Surf."

Yank Taylor to Talk on Going to Press Hour

O. N. (Yank) Taylor, vice president of the Newspaper Radio Editors' association and radio editor of the Chicago Daily Times, will greet radio listeners over Columbia during Bill Schudt's "Going to Press" from 5 to 5:15 p. m. Wednesday.

MEASURE EXTENT OF "BLIND" ZONE IN INDIAN OCEAN

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON. — Investigations have been carried on regarding the "blind" zones between India and Africa, spreading over a vast area of the Indian ocean and the Arabian sea. It is now ascertained that the zone only extends over the sea and not inland and that it is more completely blind nearer the African coast than near the Indian coast line. The "vacuum" in ether becomes more pronounced in the evenings near the African coast and during midday near the Indian coast. The moon has extraordinary effect on the ether pockets, sometimes removing the blindness and at other times intensifying it. The pockets are very intensive near the Kenya colony, although they are fairly strong round about Somaliland.

The W-G-N symphony orchestra will play the overture and Lawrence Salerno, baritone, will sing the "Sonia Waltz," "Clinging Vine," and "Garden of Girls" numbers. "Sonia" is the third of Mr. Wilson's musical comedies to be heard on W-G-N, his "Purple Towers" and "Lucky Jade" having been dramatized for air presentations. Mr. Wilson is at work upon an Armistice day overture which will have its initial presentation on W-G-N.

It is said that there are only four men in the world that can operate the Goofus and the genial Ted is naturally one of the four. The Goofus is a cylindrical brass instrument about two feet in length with reeds inside. Air is forced in through a pliable rubber tube, approximately three feet in length. There are twenty-two stops. The sounds emanating are "weirdly unique," Weems maintains.

Beethoven Is Available for Disk Collector

"Pastoral" Shows the Lyric Side of Famous Composer's Nature.

By Edward Moore.

THANKS to Brunswick, there is some more Beethoven available for the disk collectors. In album 86, Hall of Fame-International, 90189 to 90194, inclusive, the State Opera orchestra of Berlin plays the sixth, or "Pastoral" symphony under the direction of Hans Pfitzner.

It is no small undertaking to put a complete symphony on the disks, but as one looks back at the accretions of perhaps only a few months, one begins to see the great service the recording companies have been doing in spreading symphonic music around the musical world. This symphony classifies as an important addition to the list. It is Beethoven's finest lyric expression in all the music he wrote for symphony orchestra, and it has received a recording, in a good many respects, worthy of it.

It shows pretty nearly everything Beethoven thought of on the lyric side of his nature: sustained song, poetic imagination, humor, happiness, tenderness, all that one would expect in lyric expression, except one. Rather peculiarly, in spite of his life in Vienna, he would seem to have been little affected by the grace of the aristocratic dance. When he dances in music he is square-toed, even wooden-shod, and it is the only deficiency in the spiritual makeup of one of the greatest composers who ever lived.

An Expression of Feeling.

By no means, the least element in the greatness of this work is Beethoven's refusal to build it as a naturalistic picture of nature. He named it "Pastoral," but he insisted it was to be more an expression of feeling than a tone picture. Other composers might well borrow his restraint.

Mr. Pfitzner knows his Beethoven and conducts the symphony well. The recording is almost as good. Eleven sides are taken up by the reproduction, the twelfth being turned over to another Beethoven work, but one almost never heard in this country. It is the adagio movement from the "Street Song" trio, opus 11, written for piano, clarinet, and cello, and played by M. Raucheisen, L. Kohl, and J. Disclez. The performance is faithful and industrious, rather than inspired, but it is correct, and it is a chance to hear one of Beethoven's less known but quite charming works.

Rethberg Sings for Victor.

Victor, in the classification called Victrola, presents the extraordinary beautiful voice of the famous [illegible] soprano, Elisabeth Rethberg, in two excerpts not of opera, but of operetta. The Csardas from Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" occupies one side and "Hab' ich nur deine Liebe" from Von Suppe's "Boccaccio," the other number of 7415. They are uncommonly pleasant tunes, and Mme. Rethberg sings them with the same charming loveliness she gives to her rôle in "The Bartered Bride," which is another way of saying that if she had not made a name for herself in the lofty heights of grand opera, she would have been an equally famous figure in the lighter lyric field.

In this connection, there is place for another mention of Richard Tauber, the German tenor, who is about to try his first conclusions on the concert stages of America. Columbia presents him in number G-4052-M with two songs, Leoncavallo's "Mattinata" and Toselli's "Serenade," both accompanied by the Dajos Bela concert orchestra.

These songs do not belong to operetta, but both of them should. In fact, it is a great surprise that they are not sung at least two or three times a night over the radio stations. They fasten themselves to the ear and memory, and stay there indefinitely. And once again there is reason to believe that Mr. Tauber is going to be a hit when he appears in the flesh.

tled upon Miss Eadie, in which decision he agreed with Col. Blois, director of Covent Garden at London. For Miss Eadie sang the part at London and seems to have been well liked.

Another soprano, one of the queen's ladies in waiting, is likewise still to be chosen. Most of the rest of the cast made themselves favorably known in earlier performances. Mme. Leider and Mme. Olszewska have been here for several seasons. Mr. Marion has still to receive the verdict of Chicago audiences.

Talk About Masonry.

There is so much mysterious talk about the connection of "The Magic Flute" with Masonic orders that it is a bit difficult for one not a Mason to straighten out what it is all about. The work was written by Mozart for a carnival theater in Vienna at a time when there was much gossip about the attitude of the ruling classes toward the orders, especially the attitude of the empress, Maria Theresa. One not altogether respectful account tells of how a certain lodge was raided by the police one night under the empress' orders while meanwhile her husband, the emperor, made a quiet and unostentatious disappearance down the back stairs of the building where the meeting was being held.

It is supposed, though here I am subject to correction, that the character of Astrofiammente symbolically represents Maria Theresa, that Tamino in the same manner represents the emperor, that Pamina is the Austrian people, Sarastro is a high minded Viennese, famous in his time and high in Masonry, and so on.

But however hidden the allusions to persons of the period may be, they are most historical from our point of view. Schikaneder, who wrote the book and sang the part of Papageno, was a good showman of his time, and he evolved a story which stands pretty well on its own merits, rather complicated, partly comic, partly serious, but still a tale that can be followed.

Here Is the Story.

Here is the story, put in as few words as possible:

Prince Tamino, who has lost his way and been separated from his companions while in search of adventure, is saved from a huge serpent by three mysterious ladies who prove to be the waiting women of Astrofiammente, Queen of the Night. The queen takes advantage of the situation to implore Tamino to save her daughter, whom the sage old priest, Sarastro, has taken from her by force. Tamino is given a picture of the girl, falls in love with the likeness, and is filled with an ardent desire to serve her. He is given as a companion in his undertaking one Papageno, a gay and rather witless bird catcher.

When Tamino reaches Sarastro's castle his bitter feelings toward the high priest are changed to those of friendship by the assurance of the priests that their leader had acted only in Pamina's best interests and that she lives and is in no danger. Tamino is told that if he successfully passes a series of trials Pamina shall be his.

Tamino and Pamina, convinced of the righteousness of Sarastro's decision, resist every temptation and pass every trial and finally, the Queen of the Night having been confounded in her plots of vengeance, the two are united in the blazing light of truth, while evil and falsehood vanish and sink back into the night.

First Symphony of Season.

With Miss Bertha Ott beginning her list of concerts with three attractions this afternoon, with several other events this afternoon and here and there during the week, with the Chicago Symphony orchestra beginning its regular season Thursday night and its popular series Saturday night, the concert season of 1931-'32 may be considered to be officially opened. There will be plenty of events before it is officially closed. What is to happen this week is itemized in another column of this newspaper.

The orchestra begins its forty-first season; Dr. Stock begins his twenty-seventh as conductor and his thirty-seventh as a member of the organization. There will be no soloist on the opening program, though a considerable number, the first beginning next week, will appear in the course of the season.

For the opening program, Thursday at 8:30 o'clock, Dr. Stock has decreed Wagner's "Rienzi" Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Ballet Suite, a first class program at any time of any season. For the popular program Saturday night there will be Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Overture; Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, Glazounow's "Ruses d'Amour" Ballet Suite, and Strauss' "Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes, another program of distinct merit.

Correcting an Error.

"Dear Mr. Moore: May I correct your statement in THE TRIBUNE anent Rachmaninoff's fourth concerto? Mlle. Gitta Gradova played it last season on the twenty-first program, March 6 and 7. [Editor's note: Quite right. It was a slip of memory. Beg your pardon.]

"Do you not feel that the soloistic 'racket,' if it may be termed such in view of the amazing preponderance of soloists over purely orchestral programs this season, is not slightly overworked? The old story of the British gallery god needs to be dusted off. As you doubtless remember, the Britisher went to an orchestral concert, at which a famous diva was to assist as soloist. The affair disintegrated into a song recital, with the orchestra as accompanist. After about half a dozen encores, the gallery god felt that the thing had progressed far enough.

"'O, shut up!' he yelled. 'I came to listen to the orchestra!'

"There are a number of gallery gods of that description in Chicago, of which number I am proud to be able to count myself. In my personal opinion, which may not count for much, Frederick Stock is a greater musician than all save a possible two or three of the array of soloists. If he is to 'go 'way back and sit down,' and his fine orchestra with him, while the sainted audiences rave over personality possessed of one-tenth the musicianship and artistry which he possesses, would it not be a worth while change in the policy of the orchestral association to suspend operations, and reincorporate as a concert course, or a syndicate of impresarios?

In that event they could have all their soloists. They could also maintain an orchestra; it would not necessarily need to be as fine as the one we have now, as its only function would be that of an accompanist for these same 'personalities.'

"MALCOLM J. YOUNG."

This department agrees thoroughly with Mr. Young's estimate of Dr. Stock. It is necessary to add, however, that the business management of the orchestra began to discover through the most unassailable evidence, that of the box office, that not enough of its patrons were like Mr. Young. In other words, patronage was falling off. That is the reason for the soloists this year, also for the change of time from Saturday to Thursday night.

Music Notes.

Miss Rachel Busey Kinsolving's Musical Mornings will begin in the Crystal ballroom of the Blackstone hotel on Thursday, Nov. 5, with a joint recital by Maria Olszewska, contralto of the Civic Opera company, and Mischa Levitzki, pianist. John Charles Thomas, Civic Opera baritone, and Janet Fairbank, Chicago soprano, will appear jointly on Dec. 19. The third program will be presented by Nina Koshetz, soprano, Gabriel Leonoff, tenor, and Vladimir Dubinsky, baritone. Mario Chamlee, tenor, and Jacques Gordon, violinist, will appear Dec. 29, and Juliet Lippe, soprano, and Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, Jan. 7.

The Joseffer String quartet, a new women's organization, Anna Thelma Joseffer, first violin; Eva Pokoloff, second violin; Sara Shatz, viola, and Lillian Pringle, cello, announces a series of six chamber music evenings on the Sundays of Nov. 8, Dec. 13, Jan. 10, Feb. 14, March 3, and April 10 at the Cordon club.

Beginning next Friday, Arthur Dunham will enter upon his eighth season of Tuesday and Friday noonday organ recitals at the Methodist temple. About sixty recitals will be given. Mr. Dunham's Sonata for organ and about twenty other works of recent composition will be played.

Among the coming musical events will be a song recital by Yvonne Gall on Nov. 1. A similar appearance by her a year ago was one of the artistic successes of the season. Having sung at Ravinia in opera during the summer, she is now on the Pacific coast appearing with the San Francisco and Los Angeles companies. After leaving here she will return to Paris to sing in both of the opera companies of that city, also in Lille, Lyons, and Bordeaux.

When the Civic Opera company opens it doors Nov. 2 with "Tosca," the Metropolitan Opera company in New York will likewise greet its patrons, but with "La Traviata," balancing the cast of Rosa Ponselle, Giacomo Lauri-Volpi, and Giuseppe de Luca against Chicago's Claudia Muzio, Jan Kiepura, and Vanni-Marcoux. Early in the first week the Metropolitan will give the first American performance of Weinberger's "Schwanda, the Bagpipe Player," a work that would seem to have a number of good reasons in its score for being heard.

The Swift & Co. Male chorus has begun rehearsals for the 1931-'32 season under the direction of D. A. Clippinger, its conductor for fourteen years. The association's annual concert will be given at Orchestra hall March 1, with Florence Austral, soprano, as soloist. In addition it will appear in a sacred program at the University of Chicago April 10, and at other times before the Civic Music association at South Bend and for the benefit of the Lake Bluff orphanage at Lake Forest.

Four Horsemen Gallop Over Movie Screen

By Mae Tinee.

that here and there goes up the works. You'll recognize it.

Of the love angle, or, as the press representatives call it, "the woman's angle," there is little—and that's a refreshing omission in a movie of this kind. There's too much of a jittery ingénue in one of the first reels, but such as you see of a budding romance between Sally Blane and Lew Ayres is wholesome and satisfactory. Mr. Ayres plays a high school punk who enters Notre Dame and becomes a mighty football man.

Such faults as this movie has lie in story and direction. But I think you may forget the former, or, if not, still enjoy "The Spirit of Notre Dame" from the sports angle and because of the incentive behind the production.

DID YOU LIKE what you DIDN'T EXPECT? Don't forget we're playing the game again this month. Send in YOUR list of October's Six Best photoplays, having it in this office by Nov. 3. Write your name and address plainly on the sheet that bears the list. . . . VIRGINIA SALE, sister of "Chic," has been signed up for "Peach o' Reno." Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, and Dorothy Lee are featured. . . . DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR.'S next starring vehicle will be "Union Depot." . . . Speaking of the FAIRBANKSES — ROBERT SHERWOOD wrote in part of them in his New York column:

"You will hear numerous, varied rumors concerning the future prospects, personal as well as professional, of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. For one thing, there is the ominous report, recurrent in Hollywood, that the Royal Family of the Screen is about to break up — that after more than twelve years of veritably fabulous domestic bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have decided to go their separate ways, she to her church, he to his.

"You will also hear that they are about to make another picture together, that they are not going to make another picture together, but are now embarked on individual enterprises, that they have definitely retired from the films and will never appear before the public in professional capacities again.

"Needless to say, I am not privy to the inner secrets of the Fairbanks menage; but after two months of reasonably close observation of this conspicuous family in Hollywood I have come to the conclusion that there are no secrets worth mentioning. Mary and Doug have just about as much chance of keeping dark their private lives as has the statue of Civic Virtue in City Hall park, New York.

"For Mary and Doug, for all their outward grace and regal mien, were and are terribly, painfully self-conscious. Their exaggerated eminence frightened and appalled them. They clung to each other exactly as two soldiers will cling to each other when they find themselves in the same exposed shell hole during a heavy bombardment.

"Now the extraordinary circumstances of their lives have changed. The lofty pedestal on which they were precariously perched has vanished. Their reign as monarchs of the movies has ended, and they know it—and if there is one thing markedly noticeable in their manner at the present time it is in an overpowering sense of relief.

"It is inevitable that the relaxation of the strain under which both have lived should cause some form of change in the almost incredible relationship that has existed between them. But I think I can safely assure you that you are entitled to laugh in the face of any one who announces that Mary and Doug are going to be divorced.

"The habits of interdependence that they have formed in the past twelve years are far too firmly established to be shattered. Either would be hopelessly and helplessly lost without the other.

"For all I know, thunder and lightning may separate tomorrow. So may storm and strife, hither and yon, light wines and beer, corned beef and cabbage, give and take, and even Amos 'n' Andy. But I'll bet my all that Mary and Doug will stick together."

American Soprano Opens Rhythmic Season in Gotham

By Joan King.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—If other solo recitalists follow the example of Frances Sebel, New York's musical entertainment of 1931-'32 will depart from the trodden paths to embark upon a course both novel and refreshing. To Frances Sebel, American soprano, and native of Cincinnati, went the honor of acting as official inaugurator of the new rhythmic season here, Oct. 4, at Carnegie hall. Miss Sebel made excellent use of this auspicious opportunity by paying honor to her contemporaries. She chose only one number for her program from the well worn library. This was Mendelssohn's "Infelice, Gia dal mio sguardo," with which she opened the evening.

The audience, which was encouragingly large for so early in a new year, was greatly pleased with Miss Sebel's selections. Her second group included a number of novel Spanish songs, "El Vito," my Nin; "Nana," by De Falla; "El Tumba y le," and "La Moza y los Calvos," by Obradors, and "Los Dos Miedos" and "Las Locas Por Amor," by Turina. The Obradors numbers were sung for the first time here on this occasion and were especially well liked by the audience.

Offered First Performance.

Miss Sebel, who demonstrated her musicianship and feeling for the intent of the composer regardless of his nationality throughout the evening, offered a first performance in her third group. This was Mana-Zucca's air to athene from "Hypatia," still in manuscript, and described in program notes as "a grand opera in English based on Charles Kingsley's story." Strauss' "Mein Herz Ist Stumm and Nichts"; Weingartner's "Liebesfeier," "Nelken," and "Plauderwaesche"; Blech's "Eine Kleine Geige," "Strampelchen," "Tintenheinz und Plaetscherlottchen," and Hughes' "Jack and Jill" and "Hey Diddle, Diddle" concluded the written list.

In accordance with its custom since the organization was founded in 1928, the Schubert Memorial, Inc., held its annual auditions for candidates for its sponsorship here recently. Twenty-five musicians from eleven states were heard in earlier auditions, in September, all of these having met the entrance requirements, and four were selected for the recent hearing. But the judges, who included Richard Aldrich, Howard Brockway, Fritz Reiner, Nikolai Sokoloff, Sigismond Stojowski, and Willem Willeke, finally decided to make no award for this year. The Schubert Memorial has, thus far, presented nine young Americans in New York concerts. These have been Sadah Schuchari and Ruth Posselt, violinists; Muriel Kerr, Isabelle Yalkowski, and Sascha Gorodnitzski, pianists; Phyllis Kraeuter and Olga Zundel, cellists; Flora Collins, soprano, and Graham Harris, conductor.

To Introduce New Works.

When the Viennese conductor, Erich Kleiber, returned recently from Europe to open the season of the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, which he will direct for the first six weeks this year, he announced a number of new works which he intends to introduce during his stay. These include two compositions to be heard here for the first time by American composers, "The Pagan Symphony," by the late Henry Joslyn, and a rhapsody by Wallingford Riegger. He will also introduce new works by two European composers, Krenek's "Variations for Orchestra" and Weinberger's "Passacaglia," for large orchestra and organ, composed especially for its New York première and dedicated to Mr. Kleiber. Mr. Kleiber will also introduce extracts from Telemann's "Tafelmusik"; three symphonic dances of Roznicek; three extracts from the lyric suite of Alban Berg, arranged for string orchestra; Ravel's Minuet Antique, and the Kleine theater suite of Toch.

Remo Bolognini, well known to Chicago's orchestral audiences by reason of his years as assistant concert master of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, has just been awarded the post of assistant to Mishel Piastro, concert master of the New York Philharmonic. Bolognini is the second Chicago musician to attain important position with the New York orchestra, Alfred Wallenstein having taken the chair of head of the 'cello section two years ago.

Since 1929, when Bolognini left the Chicago orchestra to return to Europe to coach in repertoire with Eugene Ysaye, he has been engaged either in studying or recital giving. He was one of Ysaye's two pupils, the other being Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, during the last days before the Maestro's death. Last season he played in recitals with much success in London, Brussels, Berlin, Cologne, The Hague, Amsterdam, and Paris, also visiting this country for two months. He plays the famous "Baron Vitta" Guarnerius, dated 1730.

Carolina Author

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Paul Green, the university instructor who recently flashed into fame as a playwright, has turned his back on Broadway and returned to North Carolina, where his fame is that of a champion cotton picker.

Three days on the rialto were enough for the author of "The House of Connelly." He spent one of them in the theater and the others in a small room of an obscure hotel.

"I've a lot more work to do," he said, "and I'd rather do it on my little farm, where it is quiet and peaceful."

A part of that work will be the completion of "Potter's Field," his fourth play.

"Mr. Paul," as his southern neighbors call him, is an instructor of philosophy in the University of North Carolina. He has the heavy hands of a toiler. He is proud of the fact that the first prize he ever won was as the best cotton picker in a North Carolina county competition.

GREASY HAIR FROM—

LAZY GLANDS

Hair that is full of grease and has an odor is due to a gland disorder. Soap and water won't help. Face the truth about your hair and scalp!

When the scalp oozes oil from every pore, the glands are wasting nourishment and need attention. Stimulate those lazy glands and all that grease and scale will go. And watch what happens to the hair itself, when properly nourished!

Gland stimulation gives hair new life and new color. You won't have any streaks to "touch up" or gray locks to hide. Pigmentation will slowly but surely revive the natural color of any hair not completely and permanently gray.

Start stimulation of those lazy glands tonight! The way to wake them is by massage. Use your fingertips, dipped in Danderine. The Danderine will cut through the pore filth and get at the gummed glands. One treatment will dissolve every particle of dandruff. The first week will give you a healthy, wholesome scalp. But keep the treatments up until the very feel of your hair tells you it is in perfect condition.

You can get Danderine at any drugstore. It is a marvelous medicine for sick scalps.

WATCH YOUR GLANDS!

WHEN Lazy glands won't open, the hair is starved and faded.

WHEN lazy glands don't close, scalp is fouled by secretions.

ANY dandruff is a sign the hair glands need stimulating.

Adopted Child Has Easy Life in Hollywood

Fortunate Waifs Given Every Advantage in Film Star's Home.

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—All Hollywood people are not the carefree selfish egotists that one might think. The same instinct for a hearthstone with happy children's faces exists in the film capital that exists anywhere else in the world. In addition to the children born in Hollywood homes, there are many happy little folks who have been adopted by film stars when an eccentric stork refused to favor the family chimney.

This last year several charming children have been lucky enough to enter film homes where they were eagerly awaited. The most recent adoption was that of little Patricia Hamilton by a new papa and mama, Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hamilton. Patricia was seven weeks old when she was brought to her new home. Next year the Hamiltons plan to find a brother for Patricia.

Before that it was Harold Lloyd and his wife, Mildred, who, tired of the dilatory long legged bird, went out and found a lovely little girl, Peggy, as a playmate for Mildred Gloria. It brought good luck, for not many months later Mr. Stork hustled along with a baby brother, and now the Lloyds have three shining little faces about the table.

Brother for Little Gloria.

Gloria Swanson adopted a little brother for her daughter, Gloria; and Joseph at two became part of the Swanson household when Gloria II. was about four. Gloria did not believe that one child would be happy alone, and chose a boy because she loves the romping play the little fellow brings to the home.

Cecil de Mille has a whole family of adopted children in his home in addition to his own child. From the eldest to the youngest, love and care and advantages have been shared equally, and a family circle of youth and gayety and childish problems and serious character building welcome home the famous director when his day's work is done.

De Mille forbids the word "adopted" in reference to his children as he feels them too close to his heart to use any word suggesting that they are not wholly his.

Zasu Pitts has the small son left by Barbara Lamarr, whom she is raising with her own little girl. Barbara had adopted the little fellow herself when she lost her heart to him when she visited an orphanage in Texas.

Lead a Royal Life.

Mary Pickford long ago adopted her niece Gwendolyn, the daughter of her sister, Lottie. Wyn is Mary's constant companion and enjoys the sort of a room at Pickfair that most girls only dream of. At present, she is away at school.

Constance Bennett is the proud foster mother of a little four year old son, whom she brought back from one of her European trips. Peter is the constant playmate of little Adrienne Fox, sister Joan's baby by Joan's former husband.

Then there is Philippe de Lacey, the child-actor. His foster mother, Edith de Lacey, a nurse in France during the war, found the little orphaned fellow and brought him to America with her.

Polly Moran boasts a little son, also adopted. Of Italian ancestry, John Michael is Polly's joy and pride, and all the M-G-M lot rings with the tales Polly tells of his achievements at the military school which he attends.

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuri Aoki, last August adopted a little American-Japanese boy from a poor mother in Los Angeles' "Little Tokio." They will take the tot back to Japan with them and rear him there as a true son of the rising sun with all the advantages in Japanese life.

Conway Tearle Is Back.

Conway Tearle, who left Hollywood in a huff a couple of years ago, claiming he was being boycotted because he refused a salary cut, is back again and will play a prominent role in "The False Madonna." Kay Francis and William Boyd are the leads in the story.

Herbert Somborn [Mr. Gloria Swanson II.] has opened a fourth Brown Derby restaurant in Beverly Hills, and is doing well with it.

Gilbert Roland, formerly leading man for Norma Talmadge, is playing in a local stage production of "Camille," with Jane Cowl. It is his first stage experience, and he says it fussed him more than facing crowds as a bull fighter in Mexico in his boyhood days. He comes from a family noted for several generations for its matadors.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

United States Misrepresented.

Dear Miss Tinée: Despite the fact that I cannot allow myself the time to sit to write such a letter as this, I feel that what I should like to tell you needs telling so much that other things will have to wait.

I have noticed from time to time your kindly reviews of the German movies here, and when one considers that you admit ignorance of the language you are surprisingly tolerant and fair. I cannot believe that what the Germans are sending us is the best of what they can do, for most of the German talkies I have seen and heard were not one step above most of the mediocre ones concocted in Hollywood.

But all this does not get me to the point. A German talkie now current in Chicago, under the title of "Zwei Kravatten" (A Pair of Neckties), is thus far one of the most maudlin, the most stupid, the most imbecilic and the most effusively sentimental mush that has ever been grafted on a gullible public. Anything more emotionally silly has never been seen. It transcends in actual childish impossibility anything the most heroic in Hollywood have ever done. The scenes which the picture intends to be of the United States are, perhaps, the most impossible of all.

Imagine a wealthy home in America, such as the one presented in the picture, with a hundred or so servants in gaudy livery; the hostess and her dressing room with the thousand electric lights, which reminded one of nothing more than a lighting fixture store. Also, notice how the dining room table is set: the girls seated around in a circle with their legs bared up to the hips; the two American women bidding for the hand of the handsome German, one offering him twenty million and the other thirty million dollars.

Then, the absolutely impossible incident of the German girl suddenly inheriting forty million dollars. There is a lot more, equally silly. And the fact that there was a bit of good singing does not excuse the picture.

J. E. LORING.

Editor's note: I take it you didn't care for "Zwei Kravatten."

Ways that Mystify.

Dear Mae Tinée: For years the critics have said it in print and the public has said it with admission tickets, yet the producers go merrily on. So do not think that I expect this private protest to avail, but it may relieve my mind.

Some time ago Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote a story of Wyoming called "Lost Ecstasy," told with the tenderness of one who knows and loves that country. Our own haunt is not far from the ranch where she spends her summers. So, when we saw the story released under the title of "I Take This Woman," we made a special trip down to see the film. We were prepared to spend a happily miserable evening viewing the familiar beloved panorama of the range, the corrals, bunkhouse, and the little lonely cabins on the high plains.

Well, we were miserable, all right, without any qualifications. Doubtless we should have been warned by the change in title and by your faint praise. For it had not one thing in common with the book except the names of the principal characters; the minor ones were wholly omitted from the film. Not one incident remained unchanged.

The worst was first—the explanation of Kay's presence on the ranch. A worse miscast for the part could not be imagined. This jazz baby could never have portrayed the steadfast Kay of the story, and doubtless this hideous change was made to fit her personality. Gary acted as if he were ashamed to play the part of Tom, yet had the original been reproduced he would have been ideal.

The whole thing was so astounding that we searched for an explanation and found one. With economy in keeping with the times, they bought the story, used the names of the characters for this atrocity. Later they expect to produce the plot under the title of "Lost Ecstasy" and thus get double value. But here are two people who will not be there to see it. In fact, we have not attended a movie since.

TENSLEEP.

Editor's Note: For ways that are dark the heathen Chinee has little on the movie producer. (Sometimes.)

Likes "The Last Flight."

Dear Miss Tinée: I saw the picture "The Last Flight" and thought it delightful and touching, and this morning read your review of it, which expresses my reaction so perfectly I wanted to thank you. You have put into words just what I felt about the picture and think Helen Chandler was, as you say, "intuitive" in her rendition of the whimsical, gay but unsmiling Nikki.

I am sending this appreciation because from remarks made by several persons who sat near me in the audience that "it was the worst show they had ever seen," I have no doubt you will receive plenty of knocks from the undiscerning persons who are not the kind that would understand and value the underlying quality you describe so neatly as "vague, eerie, Alice in Wonderland-ish."

Here is one who was moved and charmed beyond measure, and I am sure there are many more who will likewise love this film, but may not tell you so. Sincerely, MARY CULP.

Editor's Note: It was a lovely picture, wasn't it! You were thoughtful to write.

A Kindly Letter.

Dear Miss Tinée: I'm right behind you when it comes to giving Lowell Sherman a big hand. I have my favorite screen actors and actresses who play excellently, but I'd walk across the city, if necessary, to see Lowell Sherman on the screen. I hardly know what it is, the play does not have to boast much of a plot, the dialogue can be as dull reading as so and so's expedition in the Far East, but when the curtain goes up and Sherman takes the center of the stage it's sure to be the best show in town.

He looks like a million dollars in his clothes, he has an A-1 stage presence, and when he speaks, no matter how dull and ordinary the lines, he puts them over with a bang; everything is done smoothly, well turned, polished, an eyebrow lifted here, a shrug of the shoulders, a wink, all done with a finesse and the perfection of a fine actor.

There, thank you for your "verie kind attention." I never miss your column and, though I've never written you before and perhaps won't again, I want to say that the World's Greatest Newspaper would lose some of its greatness if your column was left out.

Again I offer my profound admiration. It goes for all our house.

E. G. M.

Editor's Note: Mr. Sherman thanks you, THE TRIBUNE thanks you, and I thank you.

October Stirs Stage Season to Full Bloom

Aisle-Seat Impressions in Aftermath of Six Indian Summer Shows.

By Charles Collins.

ing, and some faint glimmering of intelligence in regard to the period in which its story has been placed is required of the playgoer.

The Italian Renaissance is the frame for "The Venetian." It corresponds to the Elizabethan period in England; and it implies, so far as the stage is concerned, a large amount of loose conduct, frequent back-stabbings and wine poisonings, and a bustling activity in artistic, intellectual and political affairs. In other words, it is an excellent background for a romantic play—a time of hot passions and gay pageantry in which every one burned the candle at both ends and had a high old time.

This play, handsomely staged by Maurice Browne, is a satisfactory treatment of its material from a modern point of view. It avoids the sawdust theatricalism which curses costume drama. Its characters are thoroughly alive, and they speak a forthright, lucid English which is as frank, at times, as the talk of comedians in a bawdy Broadway revue. If romance with historical trimmings is ever to make a fresh start on the American stage, it will be with plays like "The Venetian."

Romantic Acting.

But if you remain cold to the fascinations of the flamboyant years when the city of Florence was preparing itself as an objective point for future generations of American tourists, you will certainly respond to the acting of Margaret Rawlings as the alluring Bianca, and Wilfrid Walter as her princely paramour. Here are players of high skill and personalities of winning address. Miss Rawlings I have tagged as a little, unsentimentalized Jane Cowl. Mr. Walter has the gifts for leadership in robust romantic rôles.

When the accidental closing of a door caused a change in the destiny of "The Venetian's" heroine, I found myself skeptical about the existence of spring locks at the time of the Italian Renaissance. The author of this play may be an authority on antique devices, but I shall demand confirmation from the Chicago Museum of Industry before I believe in this episode.

Showboat Ahoy!

This column's outcry for showboats last summer seems to have started something. Ralph T. Kettering, manager of the Adelphi theater, says that he is rebuilding an ancient hulk, discovered in the shipyards of Sheboygan, and hopes to have a floating theater of 1,500 in the Chicago river before winter sets in.

Commodore Billy Bryant, now showboating in Cincinnati, is preparing to bring his company here to show us how his dock-end troupe can play Shakespeare. Instigated by George E. Wintz, known as "the king of the one-night stands," he hopes to secure a Chicago theater and turn his crew loose in it.

The showboat atmosphere, aside from the rough-and-ready acting, will be supplied by decorations in the lobby. There are at least three theaters available for this adventure—the Civic, the Princess, and the Cort. Rialto gossips are naming the Civic as the place where Commodore Bryant will hoist his ensign—possibly because that playhouse is on the river front.

New Plays for Gotham Stage; Five Openings

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Broadway will see five premières next week, including three dramas and two musical shows. Here are the announcements:

"Church Mouse"—Opens tomorrow night at the Playhouse. A comedy from the Hungarian which has been extensively produced abroad. William A. Brady is bringing forth the adaptation by the Hattons of the Paul Frank-Laszlo Fodor original. In the leading rôles will be Ruth Gordon and Bert Lytell.

"Lean Harvest"—Opens Tuesday night at the Forrest. A play by Ronald Jeans which ran during the summer in London. Leslie Banks and Nigel Bruce will be in the cast along with Vera Allen, Leonard Mudie, Patricia Calvert, Charles Esdale, and Molly Pearson.

"Everybody's Welcome" — Opens Tuesday night at the Shubert. The season's first musical comedy from the Shubert workshops. Harold Atteridge has prepared the libretto, Sam Fain the music, and Irving Kahal the lyrics. The players will include Frances Williams, Oscar Shaw, Harriette Lake, and Ann Pennington.

"Pillars of Society" — Opens Wednesday night at the 48th Street. The Ibsen play is the second production of Laurence Langner's repertory group. Among the actors will be Moffat Johnston, Armina Marshall, Dorothy Gish, Rollo Peters, Romney Brent, Fania Marinoff, Edgar Stehli, Jessie Busley, and Knowles Entrikin.

"The Cat and the Fiddle"—Opens Thursday night at the Globe. A romantic musical show by Jerome Kern and Otto Harbach. The large company will include Georges Metaxa, Bettina Hall, Eddie Foy Jr., Lawrence Grossmith, Dorothy Debenham, George F. Meader, Doris Carson, Odette Myrtil, and Jose Ruben.

Unknown Warrior

MAURICE BROWNE will appear in his London success, "The Unknown Warrior," at the Selwyn theater in four matinée performances, starting Sunday, Nov. 8 and closing the afternoon of Armistice day. Rosalinde Fuller is coming from London to play her original part. The play is from the pen of M. Paul Raynal.

After this engagement Mr. Browne will make an eight weeks' tour in "The Unknown Warrior" under the management of James B. Pond.

STAR IN "PRIVATE LIVES"

EDITH TALIAFERRO.

SHE has been leading ingenue and star of dozens of plays, of which "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" are the most easily remembered. Now, as a full blown, fascinating woman of the world, she co-stars with Donald Brian in Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," at the Erlanger theater.

Eugene O'Neill Ends Ten Year Solitude Hunt

Finds Content and Rest from City's Turmoil in Skyscraper.

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Eugene O'Neill has ended a ten year search for solitude. This isolation he has found in a luxurious apartment high above Park avenue's noisy taxicabs and hurrying throngs.

It is an ironic paradox that O'Neill should discover this escape from the crowds where he could work in peace right in the heart of the city.

He experimented with a half dozen other environments before he was won over as a hermit in the metropolis.

Lived in Lighthouse.

His first workshop was in a lonely lighthouse on the seacoast at Provincetown, Mass. Then he took a cottage amid the quiet of Bermuda, and from there slipped away to Shanghai, where he hoped to remain incognito.

Finally, he moved into an out-of-the-way chateau in Tours, France and stayed there for two years. He became weary of the place, and returned last summer with the announced intention of living on a plantation in Virginia.

He came to New York first, and fell in love once again with his old home town. He walked along the waterfront streets where, as a youth, he had mingled with sailors in the old-time saloons. He visited the old haunts he had frequented with his father, when the latter was a star in "Monte Cristo."

* *

Found City Best.

For ten years, O'Neill, weary of his wanderings, has been seeking a haven where he could settle down and work. And, like the prodigal son, he has returned home to find what he sought here in the city.

"I'm glad I spent those years abroad because it gave me a new perspective on my country and its people," he explained. "I think any writer must live abroad to get a true objective view of his native scene."

New Lady Teazle

ETHEL BARRYMORE will come to the Grand Opera House Oct. 19 in her revival of "The School for Scandal," in which she has just completed a tour of the Pacific coast and the northwest. She first acted the rôle of Lady Teazle in 1924 to the Sir Peter of her late uncle, John Drew, in a week's revival of Sheridan's comedy by the Players' club of New York.

This will be the first Chicago performances of the classic since Mrs. Insull's revival in June of 1925 in the Illinois theater.

Miss Barrymore is the third member of her family in direct descent to act Lady Teazle. Her grandmother, Mrs. John Drew, was a famed Lady Teazle, while it was the rôle in which her mother, Georgia Drew Barrymore, made her first appearance as the leading woman of Mrs. Drew's company in Philadelphia. Maurice Barrymore, Miss Barrymore's father, played not fewer than six rôles in "The School for Scandal" in his younger days on the English stage, while John Drew was a matinée idol forty years ago vis-à-vis with Ada Rehan and got his vogue largely on his performance as Charles Surface.

Miss Barrymore's company includes Walter Gilbert as Charles, McKay Morris as Joseph, C. H. Croker-King as Sir Peter, Henry Plimmer as Sir Oliver, A. G. Andrews as Moses, and Beatrice Terry as Mrs. Candour.

The engagement will be for two weeks, after which Miss Barrymore will take the play into New York.

Miss Cornell Wants to Act Roman Matron

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Katharine Cornell, who has become one of Broadway's foremost acting managers in her first year as a producer, already is planning her new play for next season. It is to be "The Rape of Lucrece," a French dramatization based upon Shakespeare's poem.

Miss Cornell sailed this week for a month's vacation in Bermuda. She will return Nov. 16 to reopen in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." This story of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's romance has been one of New York's leading hits since it opened last February, and its popularity forecasts that it will remain on Broadway all winter.

Miss Cornell's rôle requires her to be upon the stage every moment from the time the first curtain rises until a few seconds before the end. She found the task exhausting and decided upon a six weeks' rest.

Although there was no extraordinary success among the new plays of the past week, several of them offer diverting evenings. "Payment Deferred" is an English murder melodrama of novel aspects. In addition to its unusual plot it is distinguished by the performance of Charles Laughton from London.

"The Good Companions," another English importation, is a gigantic picturesque show of character parts. It is a dramatization of J. B. Priestley's novel. Elmer Rice, who revealed a panorama of New York life in his "Street Scene," does the same for Paris in "Left Bank." In this drama he chides the American expatriates who prefer a French Bohemia to the comforts of their native land.

"Cherries Are Ripe," which has been headed for Broadway for more than a year, again has been sidetracked. This is the Anita Loos and John Emerson comedy which was given on tour all last year by Rod La Rocque and Vilma Banky.

Several weeks ago these two were replaced by Basil Sydney and Mary Ellis, but a manager, Arch Selwyn, still was not satisfied with his cast. So the comedy has been temporarily withdrawn and will be brought forth later with two other stars.

Elmer Rice has already written a new drama called "Counsellor-at-Law," and it will have Paul Muni in the lead. . . . Jed Harris opens his season with "Wonder Boy," another satire on movie producers. Hazel Dawn is to be the star. . . . Nikita Balieff of "Chauve Souris" is back to stage a new show on Broadway.

In Classics

VIOLA ROACHE of the Chicago Civic Shakespeare society's company, began her career with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in London. Following several tours with Sir Charles Wyndham, she accepted an engagement in Johannesburg, South Africa, where she played in "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," "As You Like It," "Twelfth Night," and "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

As leading woman at the Copley theater in Boston she was seen in the plays of Shaw, Galsworthy, Milne, Barrie, and Shakespeare. A season with Milton Rosner in England followed, after which she returned to America for an engagement in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," with Ina Claire, and "The Woman Disputed," with Lowell Sherman and Ann Harding.

She has also appeared in many films for the M. G. M. and Paramount firms.

Travel Talk.

"France and the Colonial Exposition," first of the new series of E. M. Newman's travel talks, will be given at Orchestra hall next Wednesday and Friday evenings and Saturday afternoon.

Noel Coward's Plays Popular; B'way Gossip

"Improper Duchess," with Irene Bordoni as Star, to Be Withdrawn.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The prevalence of Noel Coward's works on the American stage—he wrote "Private Lives," you may remember, and some of the numbers in "The Third Little Show"—arouses interest in a project to revive his comedy called "Hay Fever." Constance Collier will have the rôle that Laura Hopes Crews acted at Maxine Elliott's theater several years ago. The most recent staging of "Hay Fever" was by the Goodman repertory theater of Chicago last winter, with Margaret Wycherly as the featured player.

Maurice Browne's production of "The Improper Duchess," by Bernard Fagan, will have only a brief life on the American stage, although it was a sizable hit in London. It will be offered next week in Hartford and Providence, but will go no farther. It was intended for the Shubert circuit of subscription theaters, including Chicago. Irene Bordoni has the leading rôle.

Sidney Howard's new play, called "Yellow Jacket," deals with the efforts to eradicate yellow fever from the Caribbean ports which followed the Spanish-American war. It derives, more or less, from a chapter of Paul De Kruif's interesting book called "Microbe Hunters." Arthur Hopkins has a lien on "Yellow Jacket."

"A Modern Virgin" closes its tour in Detroit tonight. Roger Pryor and Margaret Sullavan are probable members of the cast of "Blessed Event," a comedy that the Shuberts now have on their shelves.

Florence Nightingale, whose name will always be associated with women's relief work for armies in the field—she started in the Crimean war—will be the heroine of a play called "The Lady with a Lamp." Leslie Banks, the English actor now in "Lean Harvest," will stage the play for Managers McGowan and Reed, and Edith Evans will come from London to play the famous nurse. Rehearsals will begin Oct. 21. Reginald Berkeley is the author.

Queenie Smith's new operetta will be called "The Little Racketeer." It comes from the German stage, where it bore the same title—a fact which suggests that Berlin has gone in for rackets. Paul Ash and his band will figure in the entertainment.

An English actress rejoicing in the name of Lady George Cholmondoley will soon begin a Canadian tour in a series of plays and dance programs. Galsworthy's "The Silver Box" is on her list. The dance programs will include something called "a play by Rabelais."

Helen Hayes has returned to New York from Hollywood to begin rehearsals for Molnar's "The Good Fairy," which Gilbert Miller will stage. The first performance will be given in Washington Nov. 9, and a week in Pittsburgh will follow.

Irving Berlin and Moss Hart are writing a musical show which will employ a revolving stage and other elaborate mechanical devices. If nothing happens it will appear in New York before the Christmas holidays. The boys haven't agreed upon a title as yet. . . . Frank Craven has written a new play, variously described as a melodrama and a dramatic comedy. John Golden will produce it.

English Actor Wins Cheers on Gotham Stage

Charles Laughton, in "Payment Deferred," Plays Character Role.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The English actor who played Tony Perelli, gangster, in the London production of "On the Spot" has been brought to America by Gilbert Miller in a murder play called "Payment Deferred," which was done at the Lyceum last week.

His name is Charles Laughton, and he has had the somewhat unique experience at home of coming late to the theater and topping the list of character actors in five or six seasons. He was 27 when he made his first stage appearance in 1926, after winning a gold medal at a dramatic school. Since then he has played many parts, and his popularity with the crowd has increased with each of them.

In "Payment Deferred" he is given opportunity of running the gamut of the emotions about which less is heard these days than formerly. His character is that of William Marble, a flabby, beady eyed bank clerk, down on his luck and resentful. Living a lower middle class life in a lower middle class neighborhood, he is much in need of funds.

One evening, when he is fearing the collectors, there comes a young man to call on him. He is a nephew from Australia, has just arrived in London. He has no other relatives on that side of the world and, the estate of his parents having been recently settled, he is well supplied with money. He is also a cagey young man and refuses to loan uncle any of his money. So uncle poisons him and buries his body in the garden.

Haunted by Conscience.

Thereafter, for three tortured acts, William Marble, murderer, is haunted by his conscience as relentlessly as was Matthias in "The Bells." He fears the slamming of doors, the sound of bells, the chatter of people passing in the street, the shouts of children. If any one is seen even so much as raking the garden, he is threatened with hysteria.

He profits from his crime to the extent of some thirty thousand pounds and is able to set his wondering wife and daughter up in style. But disaster follows every move he makes.

He buys a new set of garish furniture, and riding into the house with it comes a little French shopkeeper from just around the corner who proceeds to seduce and blackmail him out of thousands.

He sends his daughter to a fine school in France, where she is promptly lifted out of her natural class and becomes so disgusted with her old home and her old father that when she comes back she takes to being a hostess in a night club.

He buys his wife a new outfit of clothes and a holiday at Bournemouth [so he may have his way with the French girl], but she comes back to him distressed in mind and suspicious. Finally, she has his secrets from him and the shock is so great that she herself drinks poison and is dead on the second floor when the doctor comes—dead of poison she had not the strength to come downstairs to get for herself, the doctor says, which makes it likely at the play's end that William Marble will swing for a murder he did not commit, even though the body buried in the garden is never discovered.

Heavy and Cheerless.

It is a heavy and cheerless play, but fascinating in the way mysteries are. Mr. Laughton, of course, acts Marble to the hilt, the picture of misery incarnate, a sensitive register for all the emotions haunted men are prey to.

For my own part, this type of acting leaves me cold. Character actors are bound to be stage conscious. Laughton is noticeably so, being deliberate in reaching for effects and toying with them. Too frequently it is possible to catch him working at his trade, and that is devastating to illusion and story. But that he is technical master of that trade there is no doubt. He has many believable and impressive moments in repose.

An actress in his company, Cicely Oates by name, outplayed her star in the quiet realities she brought to the rôle of the suspicious wife. She, too, started with fright, blanched with fear, trembled with apprehension, stood stark and staring at the realization of horrible truths, wept with sympathy, and comforted with understanding—and never once were you conscious of a single actress' trick.

"Payment Deferred" is the type of melodrama that makes theater going an exciting business for the young and for those of their elders who are open minded and susceptible. These have been standing to cheer Mr. Laughton at the close of each performance.

Merits High Praise.

I think there is more real drama, more depth of feeling, more sound artistry in the production of Paul Green's "The House of Connelly" by a Theater Guild subsidiary than in any other play of the new season, to date. This play, incidentally, has been in the Guild's possession for two seasons. Whether the managers lacked courage to do it, or were doubtful of its appeal, I do not know. In any event, last summer they turned it over to a group of their younger members with the promise that they could put it in rehearsal if they liked and see what would come of it.

The young people took the script and several others and went away into a sort of artists' camp in Connecticut. There they turned a barn into a theater and rehearsed their plays all summer. When they had "The House of Connelly" ready they asked Mr. Green and the Guild executives to see them play it. The result was so greatly in their favor that the Guild financed a production for the play.

Mr. Green's drama is the story of a disintegrating family, proud in its memory of happier days in the old south. The house of Connelly is a decaying house. Its men, down to the current generation represented by young Will Connelly, are lustful, lazy, washed out, through. Its women are led by a proud mother standing [with the aid of a crutch] firmly by her traditions and her memories, still leaning on the glory of old General Connelly, who fought the war and begat illegitimate offspring, and include a pair of spinster sisters crushed and anemic, but also loyal.

Fates Move In.

A family of poor whites, named Fate, move in as tenant farmers and the daughter, Patsy, hungry for land, plans to seduce Will for his, and Will, hungry for love, takes it from Patsy.

The result is cataclysmic in the Connelly family. Will's uncle Robert, lecherous and modestly alcoholic, shoots himself through his poor weak old head to preserve his pride, Mother Connelly dies of a stroke, and the sisters desert and flee to Atlanta.

But Will holds true, marries Patsy, and she, come to honor and believe in their true love, takes her place as mistress of the house of Connelly with her common blood surging exultantly through her veins. The Guild juniors are not all suited as a type to the rôles the aristocratic south suggests, but they are fine players. Franchot Tone gives a magnificent performance as Will, and Margaret Baker plays well as Patsy. Mary Morris is distinguished and fine as the mother.

"Good Companions" Staged.

Most of the characters, but little of the spirit of high adventure that endeared the story of "The Good Companions" to its public, have come to the stage in a dramatization of the J. B. Priestley novel, which is a common enough report with dramatized novels. Nothing the theater folk can do can preserve the bloom the imagination puts on book characters.

There is good entertainment in "The Good Companions" for perhaps half its length. The gathering of the various parties to the adventure is promising.

Jess Oakroyd, the robust Yorkshireman, quarrels with the nagging missus, takes his kit of tools and his bag and starts off down the road. The gallant spinster, Elizabeth Trant, bowls along the motor ways and breaks down twixt Tumbleby and Rawsley, where Oakroyd manages to set her engine going again.

The disgusted Inigo Jollifant tosses up his job as a submaster in the Taverns' school, bundles his wisps of songs into his bag, collects his fifty-two pounds sterling and is off with Susie Dean and Morton Mitcham, show folk looking for a job.

They all meet at Rawsley, and there it is they come upon the concert party that was the dinky-dos, stranded and unhappy. There the Good Companions company is organized, with the aid of Miss Trant's money, and the great adventure is started.

Six Months Later.

They're still going six months later, which is the second division of the play. Much the same as to personnel. Mr. Jollifant is in love with Susie Dean, which provides a thread of romance, but Susie is fearfully afraid a husband would interfere with her career and will have none of him.

It is at Gatford that the crash comes. Mr. Wimpers, the cinema man, hires his thugs to break up the show and they do it successfully, tossing vegetables at the warbling pierrots and finally setting fire to the theater.

As a play I think the weakness of "The Good Companions" is its failure to concentrate interest on the adventures of the honest Oakroyd and Miss Trant. In a book story an author can be as diffuse and rambling as he pleases, so long as he is interesting. But in a play he has no time to ramble, and the thinner he spreads his story the less interesting it is.

An English cast has been imported or picked up from the local English colony for the playing of "The Good Companions." Valerie Taylor, who was the lovely Gainsborough lady in "Berkeley Square," is the Miss Trant, and her young husband, Hugh Sinclair, is playing Jollifant. They are the strength of the company. George Carney is the Oakroyd and Vera Lennox a fairly rough and ready Susie Dean. Edward Knoblock helped Priestley with the dramatization.

Week's Plays Not So Good.

The rest of our drama this last week, though there was plenty of it, is not much worth talking about. A Vincent Lawrence play, "Washington Nights," was vicious in its nastiness and, praise be, lasted but a few days.

"Nikki," a musical comedy made from the John Monk Saunders stories, has found some friends, but hardly enough to keep it with us long. The musical hits of the town are the Aborn revivals of the older light operas. "The Chocolate Soldier" has just finished two big weeks, and "The Geisha" is to follow, with good old Jimmy Powers in his old rôle of Mun Hi, keeper of the teahouse.

IN MUSICAL COMEDY

FLORIA WEST.

SHE is one of the principal entertainers in "Girl Crazy," the musical comedy now at the Garrick theater. Miss West is the brisk soubrette who leads a song now and then while Benny Rubin and Blossom Seeley are changing costumes.

In "Little Show"

WALTER O'KEEFE, who appears as master of ceremonies in the "Third Little Show" at the Great Northern, was a newspaper, advertising, and vaudeville writer up to 1928, when he authored his first show, "Just a Minute." The next spring, in Hollywood, he wrote his first song hit, "Little by Little," with Bobby Dolan.

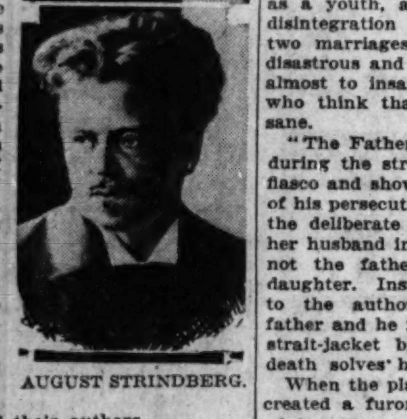
Three seasons as master of ceremonies at the Club Gallant, New York, prepared him for the "Third Little Show." Notre Dame is his alma mater.

The Armchair Playgoer

By Fanny Butcher.

IN NEW YORK.

The only openings in New York which armchair playgoers could attend last week were the revivals of two plays which have been revived often before, Dion Boucicault's "Streets of New York" and August Strindberg's "The Father." They will lure readers into the literature of their time, perhaps, and into the biographies of their authors.



AUGUST STRINDBERG.

Dion Boucicault was one of the most spectacular actor-playwrights of his day. His success began before he was 20 in a play called "London Assurance," which was produced in 1841. He died in New York in 1890, where he had made his home since 1875 and where as much of his reputation had been made as in London.

He was born in Dublin, the son of a French refugee and an Irish mother, and he was said to be the greatest stage Irishman of his day. Perhaps his most famous play was not an original play at all, but an adaptation of a novel by Gerald Griffin, called "The Collegians." The play was given the title "The Colleen Bawn." It was played in almost every city in the United Kingdom and the United States, and it made its author a handsome fortune.

August Strindberg, author of "The Father," was quite another sort of person. Born a generation later than Boucicault and in poverty, he lived his life long in suffering—physical privation as a child, mental turmoil as a youth, and hysterical spiritual disintegration as a man. He made two marriages, both of which were disastrous and both of which led him almost to insanity. There are many who think that he actually was insane.

"The Father" was written in 1887 during the stress of his first marital fiasco and shows the depressing effect of his persecution mania. It concerns the deliberate deluding by a wife of her husband into the belief that he is not the father of his much loved daughter. Insanity, always so near to the author himself, seizes the father and he is finally tricked into a strait-jacket by his old nurse. Only death solves his problem.

When the play appeared it naturally created a furor. It was a landmark of importance in the history of European realism. "Lady Julia" followed it in 1888, and other similar plays, most of which centered in the author's own marital tragedy. In those years [the years when Boucicault was living his last] Strindberg was writing his greatest novels, "The People of Hemso," which was published the same year as "The Father," and "In the Outer Skerries," which appeared in 1890, the year of Boucicault's death.

Strindberg's marriage was dissolved in 1891. His misery was accentuated by financial difficulties and insanity touched him more nearly than ever. He lived twenty-one years after that, however, piling up volumes. He is considered Sweden's greatest modern writer according to critics, and his work has exerted a deep and lasting influence on the European novel and drama.

Critics Often Too Severe with Cinema Epics

Pettey Tells Why There Is Nothing Basically Wrong with the Talkies.

By Tom Pettey.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The old days of poking fun at the movies have gone, but a lot of people still like to pick flaws in the celluloid epics. Among the favorite subjects for highbrow magazines and Sunday supplements alike are:

"What is wrong with the talking pictures?"

"Censorship, or the purification of the films."

"Wastefulness in making pictures."

"The dearth of good, original material."

"The lack of art among the film artists."

One could go on and on, filling the page with these topics and still not scratch the surface of what has been written. For the most part the deluge of words has been filled with criticism. Few write in defense of the movies; it just is not profitable. The talkies need no defense, according to their makers, and whatever is written about them is just so much publicity for the old publicity mill. Nevertheless, this column is written in defense of the movies.

No Basic Mistake.

To begin with, there is nothing wrong with the movies. That is, nothing wrong in the sense of a fundamental, basic mistake. On the contrary, the talkies have made magnificent strides this season. The producers have produced the best of pictures, the players have grown in fame and ability, the industry has managed to hold up its head in the midst of depression. When the talkie houses show such pictures as "Street Scene," "Alexander Hamilton," and "Five Star Final" it is foolish to speak ill of the industry.

When such actors as George Arliss, the Barrymore brothers, and others of great skill find their greatest roles in the movies, why should we search for minor flaws?

A second popular topic is censorship. From time to time some highly misinformed writer predicts the downfall of the entire motion picture structure through this evil of evils. Certainly censorship becomes ridiculous at times, but it is necessary and has contributed a great deal to the industry. Without some form of censorship the movies would have hit a burlesque house level and remained there until doomsday.

I have seen just about as many raw scenes in the movies as I ever saw on the stage. It is to the credit of the censor that the films are washing up while the stage is reeking more strongly than ever. No one in a normal frame of mind would wish to see the talkies filled with dirt. For every goofy job of censoring such as putting dresses on Micky Mouse, clothing statues, or making all mothers married women, there have been constructive jobs such as the elimination of the pictures that glorify gangsters, the cutting of shots featuring scenes that might upset the digestive functions and the ban on profanity, except where it is essential to the plot of the picture.

Wastefulness Exaggerated.

Wastefulness in making pictures has been too highly exploited. It is true that there has been and possibly still is a lot of waste about the studios. For that matter, there is a lot of waste about newspaper offices, and banks have been known to fail because of "overhead." One of last season's film hits, "Hell's Angels," has demonstrated that gigantic expenditures running into the millions of dollars is not always money thrown away. If I am informed correctly, the above mentioned picture has paid a tidy profit to young Mr. Hughes, the "spendthrift."

Those producers who hire "talent" at fancy salaries and then make no use of the "talent" are not always dumb-bells. They have learned from experience that it is cheaper to keep a herd of "brains" on the scenario pay roll and pick off the real "ideas," if any, than it is to try to make pictures out of every "masterpiece" that is turned in. The movie folks are not the only ones who go in for "talent" in a big way.

I recall several stories in which high powered "talent" entered into competition with the working press. The publishers spent a lot of money, but they put the staff man's story in the lead. The "talent" provided the filler stuff. In one case I remember a one dollar a word man who arrived on the scene too befuddled to get into action. The local correspondent wired his agency to "sober up another genius." I call that extravagance.

Plenty of Good Material.

As for the dearth of good, original material, why look for original material when the libraries are full of unpictured masterpieces? The classics still offer an almost untouched mine of film material. In case present day literary compositions still are to be desired, the market is good. I saw Louis Bromfield's "Twenty-Four Hours" after the novel had been made into a play. It was as good as one could hope for. And as for original products, just give Eddie Cantor or any one of the four Marx brothers a cameraman and a stage and they will produce original matter in quantity and frequently quality.

The lack of art among the artists needs little explanation. There is no lack. The movie actors and actresses are giving as finished performances as the stage stars.

Week's Films Pepless.

Now, to tell you about a current picture. Ann Harding is on Broadway again. Her picture is called "Devotion" and deals in a charming manner with romance in an English barrister's home. Miss Harding plays the part of a girl grown tired of the humdrum life in her household. She goes out into the world disguised as a middle aged governess and gets employment in the lawyer's home.

Ann Harding in wig and spectacles loses an indefinable something. I like her better as Ann Harding. Nevertheless, the picture will get you.

among the October attractions

Notre Dame's Four Horsemen are riding again, but not on college gridirons. They are being featured, with Lew Ayres, in "The Spirit of Notre Dame," the current film at the State-Lake theater.

'Alyce Chappele of the twinkling toes danced her way into Chicago theatergoers' hearts with Lou Holtz in "You Said It," at the Grand.

Indian Summer Brings Chicago Playhouses into Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

AFTER attending and reviewing six premières within eight days to celebrate the grand fall opening of the Chicago theatrical season, one's mind becomes a haze of mixed impressions. Floating around in the fog, however, there are a series of wonderments. For example:

I wonder if Walker Whiteside knows that his frequent expectoration upon the stage, in the rôle of the spitting Irishman in "Surf," dilutes rather than fortifies that South Seas melodrama?

I wonder if Phil Baker and Ted Healy, the aggressive and reckless jesters of the revue called "Crazy Quilt," know that dozens and hundreds of average theater-goers, before buying their tickets to any show, ask me: "Is it clean?"

I wonder if Maurice Browne, who is offering "The Venetian" under the auspices of the Dramatic League of Chicago, knows that the finger of destiny has begun to point in his direction as the Siegfried to arouse the Goodman theater from its present state of coma?

I wonder if Donald Brian, co-starring with Edith Taliaferro in "Private Lives," will tell me the location of the fountain of youth from which he apparently quaffs magic draughts that preserve him as a perpetual Prince Danilo?

I wonder if Beatrice Lillie of "The Third Little Show" isn't the only comedienne in history whose sense of humor refused to be ruined by the acquisition of a British title?

I wonder if Gregory Ratoff, who has brought "Girl Crazy" into Chicago in order to fulfill a vow made upon all the ikons of old Russia, is the Morris Gest of the future?

I wonder why Chicago theater managers continue to use the huddle system for their first nights?

I wonder if the play going year in this town will sustain the spirited pace at which it has started?

Finger of Destiny.

My speculations upon the possibility of Maurice Browne's assuming the directorate of a new repertory company at the Goodman theater, perhaps a year hence when Chicago is dressing its windows in readiness for the Century of Progress exposition, have a background in rumor. There has been some slow burning talk on the subject. The trustees of the Goodman, however, are saying nothing, according to their custom, and Mr. Browne himself has dropped no hint of ambitions in this direction.

He seems to be a logical candidate for this labor of Hercules, if Hubert Osborne does not return to the Goodman, and I rise to place him in nomination. His qualifications are numerous. He is a pioneer of the art theater movement in this country; he has a Chicago background, and a loyal following. He has risen from "little" to "big" theater status. His shy beginning on the fourth floor back of the Fine Arts building twenty years ago has carried him to leadership on the London stage and rating as an international impresario. He has given a convincing demonstration of executive prowess as well as art theater ideals.

On the other hand, his control of the Goodman might be too remote. He has many irons in the fire; he is the lessee or owner of two important theaters in London; he contributes plays to the commercial American stage. As a hypothetical director of the Goodman, his authority would probably be delegated, through most of the year, to the lieutenants that he might place in charge there.

These remarks are intended as first aid to the finger of destiny. If they are wasted, I shall have to find myself another candidate, and probably will begin to cast flirtatious eyes at Eva Le Gallienne.

Flaming Florentines.

Your affection for "The Venetian," which came to Chicago for its American première after a prosperous engagement in London, will depend largely upon your taste for "costume plays." When the drama gets into "costume" it also invades his-

Despite all his medals, Warren Williams appears to be upset about something, but apparently his tirade is giving Bebe Daniels little to worry about. The picture is "Honor of the Family," and it's on display at the present time at the Oriental theater.

Regis Toomey is registering stark terror in this scene from "24 Hours," the photoplay adapted from Louis Bromfield's novel of the same name. Miriam Hopkins, shown above; Clive Brook, and Kay Francis also are in the picture, which is at the Chicago.

This is a puzzle picture. Try to find Hardie Albright, the smiling star of the stage success, "Young Sinners," and Maureen O'Sullivan, recently imported from the "Ould Sod," in this scene from "Skyline" at the Palace theater. (Note: They are in the center.)

By Edward Moore.

ONE of the early performances of the season, promises the Chicago Civic Opera company, will be Mozart's "The Magic Flute." It will be, as far as Chicago's opera is concerned, a novelty, and it is also going to take a lot of casting.

About a quarter century has passed since the work went on here by a professional company. The last performance would seem to have been the time when Fritzi Scheff spilled the operatic beans by appearing as Papagena and getting more applause than the diva who sang the part of the Queen of the Night thought any Papagena was entitled to. It led to feelings and atmosphere not altogether those of sweetness and light, certainly not in the nature of Mozart's golden melodies.

Splendid Cast Chosen.

Papagena, by the way, is not mentioned in the program sent out by the opera company. But for the rest, here is what the company has assembled in the way of a stellar cast. It includes three highly specialized sopranos, a leading contralto, a leading tenor, a leading baritone, a buffo baritone, and a leading basso. They are thus itemized:

Sarastro	Alexander Kipnis
Astrofiammente	Nöel Eadie
Pamina, her daughter	Maria Rajdl
Queen's lady	Frida Leider
Queen's lady	Maria Olszewska
Prince Tamino	Paolo Marion
The Orator	Rudolf Bockelman
Papageno	Eduard Habich
Monostatos	Octave Dua

Conductor—Egon Pollak.

One of the reasons why Herbert Witherspoon made a trip to Europe last summer was to hunt up a coloratura soprano up to the music of Astrofiammente, who is otherwise known as the Queen of the Night. He had auditions here and there, in Paris, Berlin, Munich, and Salzburg, before making his choice. Finally he set-

Fresh from many movie triumphs in their laugh provoking shorts, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy may be seen at the Roosevelt in their first full length picture. The gentleman with the mean looking forceps is James Santell. But maybe they're not real.

Here is something for the children as well as grownups. Leon Janney with "Zip-Zip the Cannaball" in "Penrod and Sam," from Booth Tarkington's famous novel of the same name. It is showing at the Woods for the week.

By Mae Tinee.

Good morning!

"The Spirit of Notre Dame" is dedicated to the memory of the late Knute Rockne, famous and beloved head coach of a history making football team. You will remember that Mr. Rockne was on his way to the coast to complete a contract for some two reel football shorts when the airplane crash occurred that cost his life.

This picture's release at the start of the football season and on the eve of the Notre Dame-Northwestern game is timely and something in the nature of a stroke of genius on the part of the producers. Every football fan will want to see it. Every friend and admirer of Rockne will want to see it, while folks who don't know much about affairs of the gridiron, but like to keep up with current conversation, will buy tickets just to get a glimpse of the famous "Four Horsemen," Don Miller, Jim Crowley, Harry Stuhldreher, and Elmer Layden.

"Are those fellows really in this film?" you ask.

You bet they are! In closeups and in action.

You See Them at Work.

You see their work in the Notre Dame-Army encounter cleverly inserted via news reel. As for the closeup—don't they all autograph a football for a small, enthusiastic boy who sentimentally requests their signatures?

"And now, what are you going to do with it, Sonny?" asks one of the four, fatuously.

"I'm goin' to sell it to a guy for ten bucks," replies mamma's little business man.

O, before I forget it—don't ever again pronounce Carideo with the accent on the "rid." It's Car-ri-day-o, bearing down hard on the "day." If you don't believe it, hear Frank himself give you the lowdown in the picture. And he ought to know!

Little Love Stuff.

As far as the actual football stuff goes, "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is fine! And J. Farrell McDonald seems to me the best man who could have been picked to represent Rockne. He bears an astonishing resemblance to the great coach and is a seasoned and sincere actor. He and his team, at practice, at play, and in their little human communions are convincing. It is not their fault that soppy hokum has been introduced into the story, nor should they be criticized for participation in the same. I won't go into detail about the regrettable mush

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY RULE STILL GOOD IN SCHOOLS

Chicago a Pioneer in Physical Training.

BY IRENE STEYSKAL.

A lot of cold, unbiased testing seems to have forced oblivion upon any number of the good old axioms and maxims, but there is one—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," it goes—that apparently has not suffered from a waning of popularity. As far as we know it never has been so much as questioned; certainly not by our law making body in Springfield, which considered it worthy of legislation.

Since laws are generally couched in more formal terms, however, the gentlemen who make them downstate proclaimed that "physical culture" should be taught in the public schools. Since that time each locality has been working out, according to its immediate needs and means, its own program of execution.

In the Chicago schools an attempt to introduce instruction in physical education was made as early as 1863. Definite steps were taken in 1885 following a demonstration of exercises in the Ogden school made by the Chicago Turngemeinde. A committee was appointed by the board of education to formulate a program, an instructor was chosen and provision made for physical education classes at the Lincoln, Brown, Douglass, and King schools.

Chicago Leads Nation.

Chicago was the first city in the country to appoint [the following year] a supervisor of physical education. Henry Suder was the man appointed to the new post, a position which he held for 37 years.

A red letter year for Knute Rockne's alma mater, old Northwest Division High school, now Tuley, was 1890 when it erected the first fully equipped high school gymnasium for the teaching of physical education. Six years later the Franklin school claimed the same record for elementary schools.

In 1911 began the transition from the old swimmin' hole. Hyde Park High school was the first school for boys and girls erected with gymnasia and a swimming pool.

Pritzlaff Present Director.

The bureau of physical education was reorganized in 1925 with the appointment of one director and three supervisors. Two years ago the present director, August H. Pritzlaff, succeeded E. C. Delaporte to that position.

Mr. Pritzlaff had been instructor of physical education, coach and dean of boys at Senn High school preceding his appointment to the directorship. Associated with Mr. Pritzlaff on the bureau as supervisors are H. R. Crook, Vera Gardiner, and Maj. F. L. Beals. Maj. Beals, assisted by Maj. H. H. Moore, is in charge of military training in the high schools. Under him are twenty-six instructors directing the R. O. T. C. units which are established in twenty senior high schools.

Under the supervision of Miss Gardiner and Mr. Crook are the Normal college, with eight teachers of physical education; Crane college, with six; there are 204 instructors in twenty-four senior high schools; seventy-five in twenty-seven junior high schools; the 302 elementary schools have 228 teachers; eleven continuation schools have two instructors; and there are five in the six prevocational schools. There are also 16 physiotherapists employed in the city's four schools for crippled children.

Apart from the military training conducted by Maj. Beals, physical education in the public schools comprises physical education classes, corrective work, health education classes; athletic and after-school play; swimming instruction; and the safety patrols in the elementary and junior high schools.

Physical instruction in the kindergartens and elementary schools is, of course, more or less informal. In the kindergartens and through the third grade its consists largely of song games, story plays and the dramatization of activities in the school. From the third grade on a more formal course is provided which includes setting up exercises in the yard or gymnasium, where they are available; folk dancing, swimming in the three elementary schools where swimming pols are installed—Swift, Carter, and Scanlon—and exercises with gymnasium equipment in the schools where such equipment is available.

Diversified High School Program.

A more definite and diversified program, made possible by equipment, time allotment and the teaching staff, is carried out in the junior high schools. The number of instructors in physical education—one for approximately every 650 pupils—in the junior high schools varies from one to five. New junior high schools and those that have been remodeled are equipped with a girls' gymnasium, a boys' gymnasium, and a swimming pool.

In almost every high school in the city a girls' athletic association is established. Awards for athletic activities are based on a point system that considers not only achievement but sportsmanship, scholarship, and health activties. In both the senior and junior high schools girls' athletics are limited to intramural competition.

Boys of the junior high schools also have their athletic associations. While emphasis is placed in intramural competition, limited competition between schools is permitted in indoor baseball, basketball, swimming and track and field athletics. A doctor's certificate, parental permission, and scholastic eligibility are the requirements for membership on one of the school teams.

Bruno Kluge President.

The program for athletics in the junior high schools, superimposed upon the courses followed in the junior high schools, provides for much wider competition between schools. A board of control made up of representatives, who are physical education instructors, from each high school formulates rules and regulates the conducting of interscholastic competition. Heading this group as president is Bruno Kluge of Bowen High school. George W. Steffens of Austin is vice president, and Mr. Pritzlaff serves as secretary and treasurer.

Games played for coveted city championships range all the way from chess and checkers to football. Lindblom is present holder of the football title. Last season Lindblom won championships also for cross country running and novice and senior gymnastics.

Senn claims championships for golf, ice skating in the senior class, indoor and outdoor track in the senior division, and swimming [25 yards] in the senior and junior divisions.

Other title holders are: Lane for tennis, junior ice skating and baseball; Roosevelt for junior outdoor and indoor track and fencing; Crane for basketball in the heavyweight class and soccer; Marshall for basketball in the lightweight class; Lake View for rifle markmanship; Englewood for swimming [20 yards] in the senior division; Schurz for swimming [20 yards] in the junior division, and Tilden for wrestling.

Tuley claims the checkers champion, and Austin came out with flying colors in the ches tournament.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, Oct. 12.

Rake up bare spots in the lawn, scratch with steel toothed rake, sow grass seed over it, and germination will quickly occur. A little commercial fertilizer will stimulate the young plants into vigorous growth and enable them to endure through the winter. If it is desired to keep root crops outdoors through the winter prepare the place now, before severe frosts. Carrots, late cabbage, beets (not too old and woody), potatoes, sweet potatoes, and turnips may be kept by this method.

Tuesday, Oct. 13.

Some of the early hardy chrysanthemums are bursting into bloom. A new yellow sort, known as Valerine, is a low growing variety attractive for Chicago and vicinity. Keep an eye open for varieties that come into early bloom because only the extremely early kinds can be depended on for a display. Continue to make cuttings of tender plants that have been growing outdoors. Pot a few plants, cutting back at the time of lifting.

Gladiolus that have ripened their leaves should be dug, the excessive soil removed, the corms dried for a few hours, and later placed in a cool, dry basement over winter. Save all bulbils of the rare kinds for future planting. Exchange with gardening friends.

Dahlias may be dug, or the tubers left in the ground until frost. Lift the tubers without breaking because they keep better. Cut off the stems a few inches above the ground before digging. Do not neglect labeling securely. Place a six inch layer of sand on the cellar floor, pack the tubers in layers, covering each layer with dry sand or peatmoss, and cover the top layer with a five or six inch layer.

Wednesday, Oct. 14.

Try a few of the bulbous iris in a sheltered and well drained situation, such as a rock garden. Pansies and violas may be propagated from cuttings at this time, an excellent method of preserving an outstanding variety. Remove the side shoots, with a few roots attached, if possible, and insert them firmly in sandy soil in a cold frame or box which may be placed in the frame. Cover the sash with boards during cold weather. Many other plants may be increased in this way. Plant narcissus bulbs for their effect in the perennial borders, or for naturalizing with shrubs or in the outlying sections of the grounds.

Thursday, Oct. 15.

Bring in the amaryllis from out of doors, gradually dry them off by reducing the supply of water from day to day, and store in a dry, cool place. They become active toward January, at which time they may be repotted. Many inquiries regarding the proper distance apart that street trees should be planted have been received. The elm, which is popular, should be used on wide streets, and planted 50 feet apart. Elms never attain their maximum beauty if planted close together. The hard maple is also a large growing tree and should be used on wide streets. Plant the ash and tree of heaven on narrow streets and 40 feet apart. Use one species along a street instead of a miscellaneous assortment with a different habit of growth. The box elder, poplar, catalpa, and willow must be sparingly used, or planted where nothing else will grow. They are short lived and easily injured by storms.

Friday, Oct. 16.

When planting hedges, and especially the privet, plant at least three to six inches deeper than the lowest branch of the plant. These plants root along the stems and deep planting makes a thicker hedge. When planting cut to within six inches of the ground to force the dormant buds into vigorous activity. Mulch after the ground freezes. Plant a pussy willow (salix caprea has the largest catkins) for a supply of bouquet material in early spring. The native species (salix discolor) has smaller flowers, but is very good. Quarter inch mesh wire will keep rabbits from injuring trees.

Saturday, Oct. 17.

Plant a few shrubs or low trees to attract birds. Useful plants for this purpose are the chokeberry, spicebush, Japanese barberry, cornelian cherry, some dogwoods, Morrow's honeysuckle, mulberry, smooth and staghorn sumac, elderberry, mountain ash, snowberry, Indian currant, snowball, vinurnum dentatum, lantana, lentago, prunifolium, and tomentosum. Wild grape twiggy shrubs form nesting places. Plant some hybrid lilacs to furnish a range of free flowering, tall shrubs, and in unusual colors.

NORTHWEST SIDE TAX APPRAISERS READY TO REPORT

Findings to Be Presented to Assessors.

The 33 zone committees of the Northwest Federation of Improvement clubs have completed their work of appraising all property within the federation's boundaries for the 1931 quadrennial reassessment and will submit their reports to the board of assessors at a series of three meetings during the next three weeks.

The first of these meetings will be held at the Jefferson park fieldhouse Tuesday evening. At that time eleven zone committees will give detailed reports of their work and submit their recommendations for the appraisal of property in their districts to W. G. Merritt, director of land valuation of the board of assessors. A staff of assistants will be present to aid Mr. Merritt in checking the information presented by the committees and in questioning the committee members in regard to their appraisal recommendations.

Subsequent Meetings Planned.

Subsequent meetings will be held on Oct. 20 and Oct. 27, when reports will be received from the remaining committees in groups of eleven. In this way it is hoped to speed up the committees' work or reporting their findings, instead of having each group go to the offices of the board of assessors.

Reports that the committees would recommend approximately a 35 per cent reduction in assessments were denied by J. N. Fouchard, chairman of the special tax committee of the federation, under whose supervision the appraisal work has been carried on.

Refuses to Make Predictions.

"Until the reports of all committees are in and have been checked there will be no way of knowing just what recommendations have been made in regard to reductions," said Mr. Fouchard. "So it is a little immature to make any predictions or guesses now. There will be, no doubt, recommendations of reductions made, but what they will be and whether the assessors will follow them is something else again."

Mr. Fouchard pointed out that the purpose of the work, which was undertaken by the federation at the suggestion of the assessors, was primarily to help "establish a basis for fair valuations and uniformity of assessments."

DU PAGE VALLEY TEACHERS WILL HOLD MEETING

The Du Page valley division of the Illinois State Teachers' association will hold its third annual meeting at 9:30 Friday morning in the auditorium of Glenbard Township High school, Glen Ellyn.

Dr. Charles M. Thompson, dean of the college of commerce and business administration at the University of Illinois, will complete the program with an address on "Present Industrial Tendencies and the Probable Outlook." The Glenbard band and glee clubs will present a musical program. Edward Iler of Downers Grove will preside.

3 MILE AVONDALE PROJECT IS PUT UP TO COUNTY

Opening of Through Route Due to Start in Spring.

A petition for the opening and paving of Avondale avenue from Gettysburg street to Ozanam avenue, a distance of approximately three miles, was filed with the county board last week by Ald. James C. Moreland [41st]. The petition asked that the project, costing about $500,000, be financed from gasoline tax funds. At its session Friday the board referred the petition to its committee on roads and bridges. The committee will consult Maj. George A. Quinlan, county highway superintendent, who already has indicated his approval.

The contract for the project will probably be let this year, Ald. Moreland said, although actual construction may not be started until next spring. Ald. Moreland's petition was accompanied with plans and specifications for the improvement prepared by the county highway department and with resolutions of the Northwest Federation of Improvement Clubs, Northwest Real Estate board, the Norwood Park Citizens' association, and other northwest side organizations favoring the project.

Avert Delay in Litigation.

The plans prepared by the highway department for a 40 foot roadway with building lines 66 feet apart are in accordance with a proposal advanced some weeks ago by Ald. Moreland to abandon the original plan for the opening and widening of Avondale with building lines 86 feet apart, which would have involved extensive condemnation proceedings.

The new plans required encroachment on privately owned property at only two places. One of these tracts, at Gettysburg street, has already been dedicated by its owner, but the other, which is in Edison Park, will have to be acquired through purchase or condemnation, Ald. Moreland said.

Sections Already Open.

Avondale avenue is already opened at various points between Gettysburg street and Ozanam avenue, the city limit, while at other points it is opened but unpaved. It will be opened from Ozanam avenue to Oshkosh avenue in Edison Park. It is already paved from Oshkosh east to Olympia avenue, and is laid out but not paved between Olympia and Harlem avenues. This stretch has already been dedicated as a 66 foot street. The street is also paved from Harlem to Newark avenue, while from Newark avenue to Central avenue it is laid out as a 66 foot thoroughfare but is unpaved. From there the paving extends to Edmund street.

When opened and paved, Avondale avenue will connect with half a dozen important thoroughfares leading into Chicago, providing a direct traffic route from the northern lake region into Chicago and through the northwest side and into the loop.

Bids for the paving of Caldwell avenue from Cicero avenue to Green Point road were referred to the roads and bridges committee at a meeting of the board Thursday.

Neighborhood Theaters

Perhaps the noteworthy thing about "Bought," double featured at the Harding today with "The Brat," aside from the excellence of its acting and direction, is that it brings the two Bennetts, Constance and her father, Richard, together in two of the best screen rôles either has ever had. The glamorous Constance portrays a girl who sells herself for superficialities, only to discard them when she realizes they are destroying her chance for real happiness.

"The Brat," featuring Sally O'Neill, is a Cinderella story of a girl to whom romantic and glamorus things happen.

"Sporting Blood" at Congress.

"Sporting Blood" is the biography of a thoroughbred, so an introductory note announces. There's a romantic thread running through the story, handled by Madge Evans and Clark Gable. Ernest Torrence is extremely likable as the sage old Kentucky horse breeder. If you're a turf devotee and like horses, this is a pictuer to see.

"Daughter of the Dragon" marks the return of Fu Manchu, and also his demise. The picture also marks the return of Sessue Hayakawa as Ah Kee, the Chinese detective. Warner Oland is the dragon, and Anna May Wong is the dragon's daughter. Both pictures are at the Congress today.

Joan Crawford at Gateway.

Joan Crawford fans are due for a pleasing eyeful of their star in "This Modern Age" on the Gateway screen today with "Murder by the Clock." The vivacious Joan is at her ultramodern best in this one, aided by a capable supporting cast which includes Neil Hamilton, Pauline Frederick, and Monroe Owsley. "Murder by the Clock" is one of those unbelievably spooky mystery films in which the action hinges on the weird power a vampire holds over men, causing them to commit murder for her, and who then covers her tracks by vamping more men. William Boyd, Lilyan Tashman, Regis Toomey, and Sally O'Neill are in the cast.

"Huckleberry Finn" Back.

"Huckleberry Finn" is back again on the northwest side this week on a double bill at the Manor with "Trans-Atlantic." The screen version of Mark Twain's classic of boyhood, as portrayed by Junior Durkin and Jackie Coogan, is all that admirers of Twain's lovable boy characters could ask. Mitzi Green and Jackie Searle provide some excellent support in the other juvenile rôles.

"Trans-Atlantic," featuring Edmund Lowe, Lois Moran, Jean Hersholt, and Myrna Loy, is a story of drama aboard an ocean liner.

Double Bill at Two Houses.

"Secrets of a Secretary," featuring Claudette Colbert, is on the screen today at both the Embassy and Logan theaters. The Will Rogers vehicle, "Young as You Feel," is the other half of the double bill at the Embassy, while the Logan has "The Phantom of Paris," starring John Gilbert as a magician who flabbergasts the Paris police with his disappearing acts, to complete its double feature program.

"Trans-Atlantic" and "Traveling Husbands," starring Evelyn Brent, are billed on the Portage Park screen today.

Members of the Austin High school band parents association are making plans for a Halloween party to be held the evening of Oct. 27 at Austin town hall, Central avenue and Lake street. Proceeds from the affair will go to the support of the high school band. The party will be a costume affair.

Garfield Park Hadassah.

The Garfield Park Junior Hadassah will hold a dance at 8:30 o'clock this evening at the Washington Boulevard temple, 23 North Karlov avenue. Miss Marian Ruttenberg and Miss Jessie Notarius are co-chairmen in charge of the party.

H. G. WELLS, ONCE FOE OF RADIO, TO MAKE U. S. BOW

Proves He's No Perfect Prognosticator.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

H. G. WELLS. [Nadel & Herbert.]

H. G. Wells is by no means the perfect prognosticator. No longer ago than 1927 he ran up against radio and found it useless. The famous historian of the future pictured the invisible audience bored to death while a maze of aerials cluttered up the housetops like wire entanglements on the fields of France. Mr. Wells then doubted that even the most ardent fan's enthusiasm could last more than two weeks, and thought that radio listeners must be "very sedentary persons living in badly lighted houses or otherwise unable to read."

Since then Mr. Wells has got over his gloomy outlook and has been employing the other waves to talk on "What I Would Do with the World." Next week he comes to New York and on Saturday evening he will speak over an NBC coast to coast net, including WENR.

Apparently no one gets homesick faster than a New Yorker abroad. As soon as Jimmy Walker hit the continent he was talking back over the radio. At 4 o'clock this afternoon Roxy is going to speak over NBC from Berlin.

The prince of Wales and John Masefield, poet laureate, will also be heard in international broadcasts this month. The prince is to speak at 2:45 p. m. Wednesday, Oct. 21, over CBS from London, and Masefield will discuss "Ships and Their Builders" at 2:30 the following afternoon on the same net.

When H. H. Rajput, Hindu graduate of Oxford and a former officer in the British intelligence service, came to Chicago to inaugurate his series of adventure stories based on war experiences he turned to the University of Chicago to get real Hindu music. He found there several students with native instruments, among them stringed affairs used in India for more than 2,000 years. Over the air they sound like flutes and other woodwinds.

James Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, dropped in to inspect the Hindu instruments, threw up his hands, and walked out.

Now that the nation's leading dance orchestras are playing college medleys nightly, MCA hastens to point out that 50 per cent of the nationally known orchestras attended college and that 70 per cent of the musicians employed in these orchestras are men of university training.

But not so many of them, possibly, are graduates. Nor does it make any difference.

MRS. HOOVER TO SPEAK DURING BOAT CEREMONY

Mrs. Herbert Hoover will christen the American Clipper, a new flying boat with a capacity of 45 passengers, at 1:30 tomorrow, the ceremony to be described over both networks.

The event will take place at the Anacosta naval air station in Washington, after which an initial flight will be made, when Mrs. Hoover will be flown over the capital city.

Announcers will also accompany the ship on its flight, and by means of portable sets will broadcast interesting sights which will be witnessed. By means of a special receiving apparatus located on the ground, the description from the plane will be passed out through the network.

Among the notables who will take part in the ceremonies will be Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, Congressman Will Wood, Clyde W. Kelly, known as the father of the air mail act; Orestes Ferrara, ambassador from Cuba, and J. T. Trippe, president of the Pan-American Airways.

Edith Taliaferro, the feminine star of "Private Lives, will also speak on the theater hour this afternoon.

CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA AGAIN TO BE HEARD ON AIR

13 Saturday Programs Planned.

Chicago's world famous Civic opera will again be broadcast this year to a nation of music lovers by NBC. This announcement was made yesterday by M. H. Aylesworth, president of the company.

The stirring music, pageantry and drama of the opera will be brought to the fireside of American homes, no matter whether in the crowded city or the lonely back woods settlement for the third successive year through the coöperation of the Civic Opera company and NBC.

Many New Presentations.

Under the new directorship of Herbert Witherspoon, famous in his own right as an opera star and as a director, the opera company will this year offer new presentations never before heard in this country and will also bring to radio listeners a host of new and brilliant singers gathered by Mr. Witherspoon from all parts of Europe during a scouting trip for talent last summer.

This year, instead of cutting into the middle of the opera as has been the custom in the past, the broadcast will run from 8 to 8:30 p. m., central standard time, each Saturday night, beginning Nov. 7, thus allowing the radio listener to hear the overture and entire first act of the performance.

13 Operas to Be Presented.

Further perfections in broadcasting technique are expected to be introduced in the broadcasts this year allowing music lovers to hear the music nearly as perfectly as though they were sitting in the best seats in the house. The new parabolic microphones, known as the "human ears" of radio, will be used.

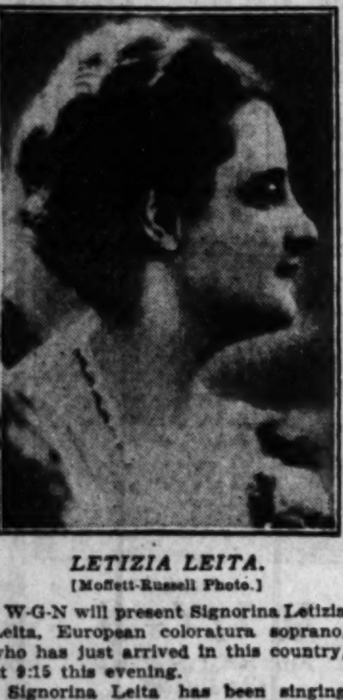
In all 13 operas are expected to be presented during the season of 1931-'32 including old favorites and American premiers.

The Chicago Civic opera was the first grand opera in the world to be broadcast direct from the stage.

TAMARA TO BE FEATURED WITH RUDY AND BAND

A medley of old Russian songs and modern American tunes are to be presented by Tamara, youthful singer and stage star, when she makes her bow as the guest artist of Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees from 7 to 8 o'clock Thursday evening through W-G-N. While singing the Russian numbers Tamara will play her own accompaniment on the guitar. Tamara was born in Ukraine twenty-one years ago and came to the United States when she was 9 years old. Starting in her theatrical career at an early age, she has already been featured in such productions as Billy Rose's "Crazy Quilt" and Schwab and Mandel's "Free for All."

COLORATURA



LETIZIA LEITA.

[Moffett-Russell Photo.]

W-G-N will present Signorina Letizia Leita, European coloratura soprano, who has just arrived in this country, at 9:15 this evening.

Signorina Leita has been singing with unusual success in Italy, having made her debut in Milan at the Theatre Del Verme as Gilda in "Rigoletto" a year ago, and also appeared in the "Barber of Seville" and "Lucia De Lammermoor" at the same opera house.

MEASURE EXTENT OF "BLIND" ZONE IN INDIAN OCEAN

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON. — Investigations have been carried on regarding the "blind" zones between India and Africa, spreading over a vast area of the Indian ocean and the Arabian sea. It is now ascertained that the zone only extends over the sea and not inland and that it is more completely blind nearer the African coast than near the Indian coast line. The "vacuum" in ether becomes more pronounced in the evenings near the African coast and during midday near the Indian coast. The moon has extraordinary effect on the ether pockets, sometimes removing the blindness and at other times intensifying it. The pockets are very intensive near the Kenya colony, although they are fairly strong round about Somaliland.

Hank Anderson to Open Football Series Friday

Hunk Anderson, pilot of Notre Dame's "Fighting Irish," will be first in the list of famous football coaches to face Columbia microphones in a weekly series starting Oct. 16, at 9:30 next Friday evening. Jock Sutherland, coach at the University of Pittsburgh, will speak during the Friday, Oct. 23, edition of the same series.

5TH ROW CENTER PREMIER IS SET FOR 5:15 TODAY

Miss Taliaferro, Brian to Be Presented.

From the theater box office comes the title of W-G-N'S new Sunday theater review, "Fifth Row Center," which will have its premier presentation at 5:15 this afternoon with Edith Taliaferro and Donald Brian, the stars of Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," as its opening attraction.

"Fifth Row Center" is dedicated to the legitimate theater and will present each Sunday intimate chatter about some outstanding show appearing on the Chicago stage, and feature the personal appearance of some star in the production.

Starred as Child.

Edith Taliaferro has appeared in scores of plays in America, England, and Australia. She started her stage career when she was two and a half years old and had star rôles in "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" as a child.

Donald Brian, who supports Miss Taliaferro, has been a stage favorite for many years, his first Broadway appearance having been in "Florodora." Real success, however, did not come to him until the night "The Merry Widow" was unfurled to a wildly enthusiastic audience. Brian made a great hit in the rôle of Prince Danilo and a new star was made. In recent seasons he has appeared in "How's Your Health," "The Queen's Husband," "Candlelight," and the Players' club revival of "Becky Sharp."

Many Stars Presented.

In presenting "Fifth Row Center," W-G-N is enlarging its already successful policy of giving its radio audience stage stars of prominence. During the last year it has brought before the microphone such famous personages as Otis Skinner, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Grace George, De Wolf Hopper, Tom Powers, Oscar Shaw, Blanche Ring, and Lillian Kemble Cooper.

Among the stage attractions which W-G-N will have in future "Fifth Row Center" programs are: "The Silent Witness," "The Third Little Show," "Girl Crazy," "Crazy Quilt," "The Venetian," and "Surf."

PLATINUM TENOR

BILLY WHITE.

[Theatrical Studios.]

Billy White, the "Platinum Tenor," who will be featured singer with Tweet Hogan's orchestra on W-G-N nightly at 12:30 o'clock. For three years Billy has been on the Pacific coast "doubling" his voice for famous talkie stars. Listen to him and then decide whose faces you have seen at the movies with his voice.

YALE BANQUET, GRID TILT WITH U. OF C. ON W-G-N

Angell, Hutchins, Stagg to Speak.

When Yale alumni invade Chicago next week-end for the Yale-Chicago football game most of their celebrations will be carried to the rest of the country over W-G-N, THE TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel.

Five speakers who will be heard at the banquet in the Stevens hotel Friday evening will be Dr. James R. Angell, president of Yale university; Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago and former dean of the Yale law school; George Vincent, chairman of the board of Rockefeller institute; Prof. William Lyon Phelps, Yale's famous writer and critic, and Amos Alonzo Stagg, graduate of Yale in 1888, who is celebrating his 40th year as Chicago's football coach.

Music to Be Broadcast.

In addition to its broadcast of the addresses, W-G-N will have specially located microphones in the banquet hall to pick up the music and revelry. There will be the music of the Yale band of almost a hundred pieces, which will be heard in a concert when W-G-N comes on the air at 7:30, and group singing of former members of the glee club who will be gathered at one table.

On Saturday afternoon the Yale football team will appear for the first time in Chicago, playing Alumnus Stagg's Maroons at Stagg field. And Albie Booth will make "his last appearance west of Chapel street," according to advance announcements.

Quin Ryan will take the air from the field at 1:45 next Saturday to give listeners the play by play story of the game and the attendant festivities.

Dr. G. W. Dowie to Speak.

Various religious denominations will be interested in the address of Dr. George W. Dowie, director of the United Spiritual Movement, who will speak at 1 o'clock Thursday on the W-G-N midday services. Many Chicago churches, particularly those of the Presbyterian denomination, are partiicipating in this movement..

Other speakers whom Dr. John L. Dickson, director of the midday services, has obtained for the week are: Dr. Herbert Whiting Virgin, pastor of the North Shore Baptist church, who will talk Monday, and Prof. A. C. McGiffert of the Chicago Theological seminary, who will give the address on Tuesday.

A layman of the Lutheran church, David Chindblom will speak Wednesday, and Dr. W. E. J. Bratz, editor of the Epworth Herald, a journal for young people, is to talk on Saturday. Dr. Dickson will speak at 12:45 on Friday.

10 GIRLS TO VIE IN STATE RADIO TEST ON W-G-N

Ten girls, winners in their home towns, will compete over W-G-N from 8 to 8:45 next Saturday evening in the state finals of the fifth national radio auditions. The contest to select the finalists among the young men singers, to be held Oct. 24, will also be heard over W-G-N.

In this state contest the winners—a young man and a young woman—will qualify to represent Illinois in the midwestern finals, to be broadcast Nov. 15 on W-G-N. The winners of this latter contest will then represent the entire middle west in the grand finals, to be held in New York some time in December.

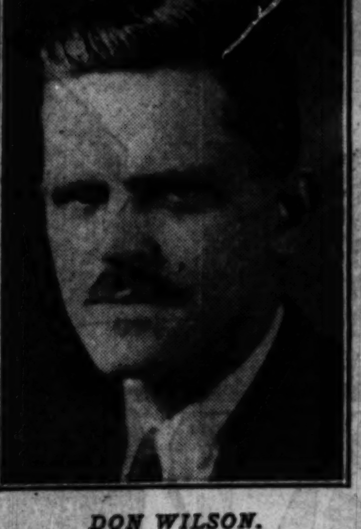
COMPOSER



DON WILSON.

Music from the operetta "Sonia," the work of Don Wilson, young Chicago composer, will be heard on the air for the first time from W-G-N at 9 o'clock Thursday night. The W-G-N symphony orchestra will play the overture and Lawrence Salerno, baritone, will sing the "Sonia Waltz," "Clinging Vine," and "Garden of Girls" numbers. "Sonia" is the third of Mr. Wilson's musical comedies to be heard on W-G-N, his "Purple Towers" and "Lucky Jade" having been dramatized for air presentations. Mr. Wilson is at work upon an Armistice day overture which will have its initial presentation on W-G-N.

GOOFUS MASTER

TED WEEMS.

Ted Weems, W-G-N orchestra leader, playing his own invention, the Goofus horn. It is said that there are only four men in the world that can operate the Goofus and the genial Ted is naturally one of the four. The Goofus is a cylindrical brass instrument about two feet in length with reeds inside. Air is forced in through a pliable rubber tube, approximately three feet in length. There are twenty-two stops. The sounds emanating are "weirdly unique," Weems maintains.

SENATOR LEWIS WILL BE SUNDAY EVENING SPEAKER

United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis will address the Chicago Sunday Evening club at the meeting to be held tonight at Orchestra hall. Starting at 7:30 p. m., the services will be broadcast through station WMAQ.

During the preliminary services an informal Bible talk on "The Trail of the Pathfiender" will be given by Clifford W. Barnes, president of the organization. Included on the musical program will be an organ recital by Stanley Martin and a vocal solo by Mark Love. Under the direction of Edgar Nelson the choir will sing a group of three anthems in one of which Mrs. Mabel Sharp-Herdien will be heard as soloist.

B. E. Sunny will read the scripture and the prayer is to be led by Dr. von Ogden Vogt of the First Unitarian society of Chicago.

Philadelphia Symphony to Open with Bach, Handel

The whole range of 17th century music, from the founding of modern opera in Italy to the great religious and symphonic school of Bach and Handel, will be surveyed by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia orchestra in the first concert of the season scheduled for 7:15 to 9 p. m. tomorrow.

Beethoven Is Available for Disk Collector

"Pastoral" Shows the Lyric Side of Famous Composer's Nature.

By Edward Moore.

THANKS to Brunswick, there is some more Beethoven available for the disk collectors. In album 56, Hall of Fame-International, 90189 to 90194, inclusive, the State Opera orchestra of Berlin plays the sixth, or "Pastoral" symphony under the direction of Hans Pfitzner.

It is no small undertaking to put a complete symphony on the disks, but as one looks back at the accretions of perhaps only a few months, one begins to see the great service the recording companies have been doing in spreading symphonic music around the musical world. This symphony classifies as an important addition to the list. It is Beethoven's finest lyric expression in all the music he wrote for symphony orchestra, and it has received a recording, in a good many respects, worthy of it.

It shows pretty nearly everything Beethoven thought of on the lyric side of his nature: sustained song, poetic imagination, humor, happiness, tenderness, all that one would expect in lyric expression, except one. Rather peculiarly, in spite of his life in Vienna, he would seem to have been little affected by the grace of the aristocratic dance. When he dances in music he is square-toed, even wooden-shod, and it is the only deficiency in the spiritual makeup of one of the greatest composers who ever lived.

An Expression of Feeling.

By no means the least element in the greatness of this work is Beethoven's refusal to build it as a naturalistic picture of nature. He named it "Pastoral," but he insisted it was to be more an expression of feeling than a tone picture. Other composers might well borrow his restraint.

Mr. Pfitzner knows his Beethoven and conducts the symphony well. The recording is almost as good. Eleven sides are taken up by the reproduction, the twelfth being turned over to another Beethoven work, but one almost never heard in this country. It is the adagio movement from the "Street Song" trio, opus 11, written for piano, clarinet, and cello, and played by M. Raucheisen, L. Kohl, and J. Disclez. The performance is faithful and industrious, rather than inspired, but it is correct, and it is a chance to hear one of Beethoven's less known but quite charming works.

Rethberg Sings for Victor.

Victor, in the classification called Victrola, presents the extraordinary beautiful voice of the famous operatic soprano, Elisabeth Rethberg, in two excerpts not of opera, but of operetta. The Csardas from Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" occupies one side and "Hab' ich nur deine Liebe" from Von Suppe's "Boccaccio," the other number of 7415. They are uncommonly pleasant tunes, and Mme. Rethberg sings them with the same charming loveliness she gives to her rôle in "The Bartered Bride," which is another way of saying that if she had not made a name for herself in the lofty heights of grand opera, she would have been an equally famous figure in the lighter lyric field.

In this connection, there is place for another mention of Richard Tauber, the German tenor, who is about to try his first conclusions on the concert stages of America. Columbia presents him in number G-4062-M with two songs, Leoncavallo's "Mattinata" and Toselli's "Serenade," both accompanied by the Dajos Bela concert orchestra.

These songs do not belong to operetta, but both of them should. In fact, it is a great surprise that they are not sung at least two or three times a night over the radio stations. They fasten themselves to the ear and memory, and stay there indefinitely. And once again there is reason to believe that Mr. Tauber is going to be a hit when he appears in the flesh.

tled upon Miss Eadie, in which decision he agreed with Col. Blois, director of Covent Garden at London. For Miss Eadie sang the part at London and seems to have been well liked.

Another soprano, one of the queen's ladies in waiting, is likewise still to be chosen. Most of the rest of the cast made themselves favorably known in earlier performances. Mme. Leider and Mme. Olszewska have been here for several seasons. Mr. Marion has still to receive the verdict of Chicago audiences.

Talk About Masonry.

There is so much mysterious talk about the connection of "The Magic Flute" with Masonic orders that it is a bit difficult for one not a Mason to straighten out what it is all about. The work was written by Mozart for a carnival theater in Vienna at a time when there was much gossip about the attitude of the ruling classes toward the orders, especially the attitude of the empress, Maria Theresa. One not altogether respectful account tells of how a certain lodge was raided by the police one night under the empress' orders while meanwhile her husband, the emperor, made a quiet and unostentatious disappearance down the back stairs of the building where the meeting was being held.

It is supposed, though here I am subject to correction, that the character of Astrofiammente symbolically represents Maria Theresa, that Tamino in the same manner represents the emperor, that Pamina is the Austrian people, Sarastro is a high minded Viennese, famous in his time and high in Masonry, and so on.

But however hidden the allusions to persons of the period may be, they are most historical from our point of view. Schikaneder, who wrote the book and sang the part of Papageno, was a good showman of his time, and he evolved a story which stands pretty well on its own merits, rather complicated, partly comic, partly serious, but still a tale that can be followed.

* *

Here Is the Story.

Here is the story, put in as few words as possible:

Prince Tamino, who has lost his way and been separated from his companions while in search of adventure, is saved from a huge serpent by three mysterious ladies who prove to be the waiting women of Astrofiammente, Queen of the Night. The queen takes advantage of the situation to implore Tamino to save her daughter, whom the sage old priest, Sarastro, has taken from her by force. Tamino is given a picture of the girl, falls in love with the likeness, and is filled with an ardent desire to serve her. He is given as a companion in his undertaking one Papageno, a gay and rather witless bird catcher.

When Tamino reaches Sarastro's castle his bitter feelings toward the high priest are changed to those of friendship by the assurance of the priests that their leader had acted only in Pamina's best interests and that she lives and is in no danger. Tamino is told that if he successfully passes a series of trials Pamina shall be his.

Tamino and Pamina, convinced of the righteousness of Sarastro's decision, resist every temptation and pass every trial and finally, the Queen of the Night having been confounded in her plots of vengeance, the two are united in the blazing light of truth, while evil and falsehood vanish and sink back into the night.

First Symphony of Season.

With Miss Bertha Ott beginning her list of concerts with three attractions this afternoon, with several other events this afternoon and here and there during the week, with the Chicago Symphony orchestra beginning its regular season Thursday night and its popular series Saturday night, the concert season of 1931-'32 may be considered to be officially opened. There will be plenty of events before it is officially closed. What is to happen this week is itemized in another column of this newspaper.

The orchestra begins its forty-first season; Dr. Stock begins his twenty-seventh as conductor and his thirty-seventh as a member of the organization. There will be no soloist on the opening program, though a considerable number, the first beginning next week, will appear in the course of the season.

For the opening program, Thursday at 8:30 o'clock, Dr. Stock has decreed Wagner's "Rienzi" Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Ballet Suite, a first class program at any time of any season. For the popular program Saturday night there will be Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Overture; Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, Glazounow's "Ruses d'Amour" Ballet Suite, and Strauss' "Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes, another program of distinct merit.

Correcting an Error.

"Dear Mr. Moore: May I correct your statement in THE TRIBUNE anent Rachmaninoff's fourth concerto? Mlle. Gitta Gradova played it last season on the twenty-first program, March 6 and 7. [Editor's note: Quite right. It was a slip of memory. Beg your pardon.]

"Do you not feel that the soloistic 'racket,' if it may be termed such in view of the amazing preponderance of soloists over purely orchestral programs this season, is not slightly overworked? The old story of the British gallery god needs to be dusted off. As you doubtless remember, the Britisher went to an orchestral concert, at which a famous diva was to assist as soloist. The affair disintegrated into a song recital, with the orchestra as accompanist. After about half a dozen encores, the gallery god felt that the thing had progressed far enough.

"'O, shut up!' he yelled. 'I came to listen to the orchestra!'

"There are a number of gallery gods of that description in Chicago, of which number I am proud to be able to count myself. In my personal opinion, which may not count for much, Frederick Stock is a greater musician than all save a possible two or three of the array of soloists. If he is to 'go 'way back and sit down,' and his fine orchestra with him, while the sainted audiences rave over personality possessed of one-tenth the musicianship and artistry which he possesses, would it not be a worth while change in the policy of the orchestral association to suspend operations, and reincorporate as a concert course, or a syndicate of impresarios?

In that event they could have all their soloists. They could also maintain an orchestra; it would not necessarily need to be as fine as the one we have now, as its only function would be that of an accompanist for these same 'personalities.'

"MALCOLM J. YOUNG."

This department agrees thoroughly with Mr. Young's estimate of Dr. Stock. It is necessary to add, however, that the business management of the orchestra began to discover through the most unassailable evidence, that of the box office, that not enough of its patrons were like Mr. Young. In other words, patronage was falling off. That is the reason for the soloists this year, also for the change of time from Saturday to Thursday night.

Music Notes.

Miss Rachel Busey Kinsolving's Musical Mornings will begin in the Crystal ballroom of the Blackstone hotel on Thursday, Nov. 5, with a joint recital by Maria Olszewska, contralto of the Civic Opera company, and Mischa Levitzki, pianist. John Charles Thomas, Civic Opera baritone, and Janet Fairbank, Chicago soprano, will appear jointly on Dec. 19. The third program will be presented by Nina Koshetz, soprano, Gabriel Leonoff, tenor, and Vladimir Dubinsky, baritone. Mario Chamlee, tenor, and Jacques Gordon, violinist, will appear Dec. 29, and Juliet Lippe, soprano, and Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, Jan. 7.

The Joseffer String quartet, a new women's organization, Anna Thelma Joseffer, first violin; Eva Pokoloff, second violin; Sara Shatz, viola, and Lillian Pringle, cello, announces a series of six chamber music evenings on the Sundays of Nov. 8, Dec. 13, Jan. 10, Feb. 14, March 3, and April 10 at the Cordon club.

Beginning next Friday, Arthur Dunham will enter upon his eighth season of Tuesday and Friday noonday organ recitals at the Methodist temple. About sixty recitals will be given. Mr. Dunham's Sonata for organ and about twenty other works of recent composition will be played.

Among the coming musical events will be a song recital by Yvonne Gall on Nov. 1. A similar appearance by her a year ago was one of the artistic successes of the season. Having sung at Ravinia in opera during the summer, she is now on the Pacific coast appearing with the San Francisco and Los Angeles companies. After leaving here she will return to Paris to sing in both of the opera companies of that city, also in Lille, Lyons, and Bordeaux.

When the Civic Opera company opens it doors Nov. 2 with "Tosca," the Metropolitan Opera company in New York will likewise greet its patrons, but with "La Traviata," balancing the cast of Rosa Ponselle, Giacomo Lauri-Volpi, and Giuseppe de Luca against Chicago's Claudia Muzio, Jan Kiepura, and Vanni-Marcoux. Early in the first week the Metropolitan will give the first American performance of Weinberger's "Schwanda, the Bagpipe Player," a work that would seem to have a number of good reasons in its score for being heard.

The Swift & Co. Male chorus has begun rehearsals for the 1931-'32 season under the direction of D. A. Clippinger, its conductor for fourteen years. The association's annual concert will be given at Orchestra hall March 1, with Florence Austral, soprano, as soloist. In addition it will appear in a sacred program at the University of Chicago April 10, and at other times before the Civic Music association at South Bend and for the benefit of the Lake Bluff orphanage at Lake Forest.

Four Horsemen Gallop Over Movie Screen

By Mae Tinee.

that here and there goes up the works. You'll recognize it.

Of the love angle, or, as the press representatives call it, "the woman's angle," there is little—and that's a refreshing omission in a movie of this kind. There's too much of a jittery ingénue in one of the first reels, but such as you see of a budding romance between Sally Blane and Lew Ayres is wholesome and satisfactory. Mr. Ayres plays a high school punk who enters Notre Dame and becomes a mighty football man.

Such faults as this movie has lie in story and direction. But I think you may forget the former, or, if not, still enjoy "The Spirit of Notre Dame" from the sports angle and because of the incentive behind the production.

DID YOU LIKE what you DIDN'T EXPECT? Don't forget we're playing the game again this month. Send in YOUR list of October's Six Best photoplays, having it in this office by Nov. 3. Write your name and address plainly on the sheet that bears the list. . . . VIRGINIA SALE, sister of "Chic," has been signed up for "Peach o' Reno." Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, and Dorothy Lee are featured. . . . DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR.'S next starring vehicle will be "Union Depot." . . . Speaking of the FAIRBANKSES — ROBERT SHERWOOD wrote in part of them in his New York column:

"You will hear numerous, varied rumors concerning the future prospects, personal as well as professional, of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. For one thing, there is the ominous report, recurrent in Hollywood, that the Royal Family of the Screen is about to break up — that after more than twelve years of veritably fabulous domestic bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have decided to go their separate ways, she to her church, he to his.

"You will also hear that they are about to make another picture together, that they are not going to make another picture together, but are now embarked on individual enterprises, that they have definitely retired from the films and will never appear before the public in professional capacities again.

"Needless to say, I am not privy to the inner secrets of the Fairbanks menage; but after two months of reasonably close observation of this conspicuous family in Hollywood I have come to the conclusion that there are no secrets worth mentioning. Mary and Doug have just about as much chance of keeping dark their private lives as has the statue of Civic Virtue in City Hall park, New York.

"For Mary and Doug, for all their outward grace and regal mien, were and are terribly, painfully self-conscious. Their exaggerated eminence frightened and appalled them. They clung to each other exactly as two soldiers will cling to each other when they find themselves in the same exposed shell hole during a heavy bombardment.

"Now the extraordinary circumstances of their lives have changed. The lofty pedestal on which they were precariously perched has vanished. Their reign as monarchs of the movies has ended, and they know it—and if there is one thing markedly noticeable in their manner at the present time it is in an overpowering sense of relief.

"It is inevitable that the relaxation of the strain under which both have lived should cause some form of change in the almost incredible relationship that has existed between them. But I think I can safely assure you that you are entitled to laugh in the face of any one who announces that Mary and Doug are going to be divorced.

"The habits of interdependence that they have formed in the past twelve years are far too firmly established to be shattered. Either would be hopelessly and helplessly lost without the other.

"For all I know, thunder and lightning may separate tomorrow. So may storm and strife, hither and yon, light wines and beer, corned beef and cabbage, give and take, and even Amos 'n' Andy. But I'll bet my all that Mary and Doug will stick together."

American Soprano Opens Rhythmic Season in Gotham

By Joan King.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—If other solo recitalists follow the example of Frances Sebel, New York's musical entertainment of 1931-'32 will depart from the trodden paths to embark upon a course both novel and refreshing. To Frances Sebel, American soprano, and native of Cincinnati, went the honor of acting as official inaugurator of the new rhythmic season here, Oct. 4, at Carnegie hall. Miss Sebel made excellent use of this auspicious opportunity by paying honor to her contemporaries. She chose only one number for her program from the well worn library. This was Mendelssohn's "Infelice, Gia dal mio sguardo," with which she opened the evening.

The audience, which was encouragingly large for so early in a new year, was greatly pleased with Miss Sebel's selections. Her second group included a number of novel Spanish songs, "El Vito," my Nin; "Nana," by De Falla; "El Tumba y le," and "La Moza y los Calvos," by Obradors, and "Los Dos Miedos" and "Las Locas Por Amor," by Turina. The Obradors numbers were sung for the first time here on this occasion and were especially well liked by the audience.

Offered First Performance.

Miss Sebel, who demonstrated her musicianship and feeling for the intent of the composer regardless of his nationality throughout the evening, offered a first performance in her third group. This was Mana-Zucca's air to athene from "Hypatia," still in manuscript, and described in program notes as "a grand opera in English based on Charles Kingsley's story." Strauss' "Mein Herz Ist Stumm and Nichts"; Weingartner's "Liebesfeier," "Nelken," and "Plauderwaesche"; Blech's "Eine Kleine Geige," "Strampelchen," "Tintenheinz und Plaetscherlottchen," and Hughes' "Jack and Jill" and "Hey Diddle, Diddle" concluded the written list.

In accordance with its custom since the organization was founded in 1928, the Schubert Memorial, Inc., held its annual auditions for candidates for its sponsorship here recently. Twenty-five musicians from eleven states were heard in earlier auditions, in September, all of these having met the entrance requirements, and four were selected for the recent hearing. But the judges, who included Richard Aldrich, Howard Brockway, Fritz Reiner, Nikolai Sokoloff, Sigismond Stojowski, and Willem Willeke, finally decided to make no award for this year. The Schubert Memorial has, thus far, presented nine young Americans in New York concerts. These have been Sadah Schuchari and Ruth Posselt, violinists; Muriel Kerr, Isabelle Yalkowski, and Sascha Gorodnitzski, pianists; Phyllis Kraeuter and Olga Zundel, cellists; Flora Collins, soprano, and Graham Harris, conductor.

To Introduce New Works.

When the Viennese conductor, Erich Kleiber, returned recently from Europe to open the season of the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, which he will direct for the first six weeks this year, he announced a number of new works which he intends to introduce during his stay. These include two compositions to be heard here for the first time by American composers, "The Pagan Symphony," by the late Henry Joslyn, and a rhapsody by Wallingford Riegger. He will also introduce new works by two European composers, Krenek's "Variations for Orchestra" and Weinberger's "Passacaglia," for large orchestra and organ, composed especially for its New York première and dedicated to Mr. Kleiber. Mr. Kleiber will also introduce extracts from Telemann's "Tafelmusik"; three symphonic dances of Roznicek; three extracts from the lyric suite of Alban Berg, arranged for string orchestra; Ravel's Minuet Antique, and the Kleine theater suite of Toch.

Remo Bolognini, well known to Chicago's orchestral audiences by reason of his years as assistant concert master of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, has just been awarded the post of assistant to Mishel Piastro, concert master of the New York Philharmonic. Bolognini is the second Chicago musician to attain important position with the New York orchestra, Alfred Wallenstein having taken the chair of head of the 'cello section two years ago.

Since 1929, when Bolognini left the Chicago orchestra to return to Europe to coach in repertoire with Eugene Ysaye, he has been engaged either in studying or recital giving. He was one of Ysaye's two pupils, the other being Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, during the last days before the Maestro's death. Last season he played in recitals with much success in London, Brussels, Berlin, Cologne, The Hague, Amsterdam, and Paris, also visiting this country for two months. He plays the famous "Baron Vitta" Guarnerius, dated 1730.

Carolina Author

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Paul Green, the university instructor who recently flashed into fame as a playwright, has turned his back on Broadway and returned to North Carolina, where his fame is that of a champion cotton picker.

Three days on the rialto were enough for the author of "The House of Connelly." He spent one of them in the theater and the others in a small room of an obscure hotel.

"I've a lot more work to do," he said, "and I'd rather do it on my little farm, where it is quiet and peaceful."

A part of that work will be the completion of "Potter's Field," his fourth play.

"Mr. Paul," as his southern neighbors call him, is an instructor of philosophy in the University of North Carolina. He has the heavy hands of a toiler. He is proud of the fact that the first prize he ever won was as the best cotton picker in a North Carolina county competition.

GREASY HAIR FROM—

LAZY GLANDS

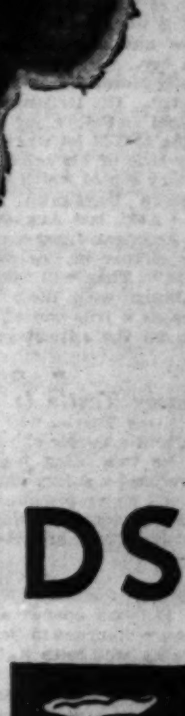
Hair that is full of grease and has an odor is due to a gland disorder. Soap and water won't help. Face the truth about your hair and scalp!

When the scalp oozes oil from every pore, the glands are wasting nourishment and need attention. Stimulate those lazy glands and all that grease and scale will go. And watch what happens to the hair itself, when properly nourished!

Gland stimulation gives hair new life and new color. You won't have any streaks to "touch up" or gray locks to hide. Pigmentation will slowly but surely revive the natural color of any hair not completely and permanently gray.

Start stimulation of those lazy glands tonight! The way to wake them is by massage. Use your fingertips, dipped in Danderine. The Danderine will cut through the pore filth and get at the gummed glands. One treatment will dissolve every particle of dandruff. The first week will give you a healthy, wholesome scalp. But keep the treatments up until the very feel of your hair tells you it is in perfect condition.

You can get Danderine at any drugstore. It is a marvelous medicine for sick scalps.



WATCH YOUR GLANDS!

WHEN lazy glands won't open, the hair is starved and faded.

WHEN lazy glands don't close, hair is flooded by excretions.

ANY dandruff is a sign the hair glands need stimulating.

Adopted Child Has Easy Life in Hollywood

Fortunate Waifs Given Every Advantage in Film Star's Home.

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—All Hollywood people are not the carefree selfish egotists that one might think. The same instinct for a hearthstone with happy children's faces exists in the film capital that exists anywhere else in the world. In addition to the children born in Hollywood homes, there are many happy little folks who have been adopted by film stars when an eccentric stork refused to favor the family chimney.

This last year several charming children have been lucky enough to enter film homes where they were eagerly awaited. The most recent adoption was that of little Patricia Hamilton by a new papa and mama, Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hamilton. Patricia was seven weeks old when she was brought to her new home. Next year the Hamiltons plan to find a brother for Patricia.

Before that it was Harold Lloyd and his wife, Mildred, who, tired of the dilatory long legged bird, went out and found a lovely little girl, Peggy, as a playmate for Mildred Gloria. It brought good luck, for not many months later Mr. Stork hustled along with a baby brother, and now the Lloyds have three shining little faces about the table.

Brother for Little Gloria.

Gloria Swanson adopted a little brother for her daughter, Gloria; and Joseph at two became part of the Swanson household when Gloria II. was about four. Gloria did not believe that one child would be happy alone, and chose a boy because she loves the romping play the little fellow brings to the home.

Cecil de Mille has a whole family of adopted children in his home in addition to his own child. From the eldest to the youngest, love and care and advantages have been shared equally, and a family circle of youth and gayety and childish problems and serious character building welcome home the famous director when his day's work is done.

De Mille forbids the word "adopted" in reference to his children as he feels them too close to his heart to use any word suggesting that they are not wholly his.

Zasu Pitts has the small son left by Barbara Lamarr, whom she is raising with her own little girl. Barbara had adopted the little fellow herself when she lost her heart to him when she visited an orphanage in Texas.

Lead a Royal Life.

Mary Pickford long ago adopted her niece Gwendolyn, the daughter of her sister, Lottie. Wyn is Mary's constant companion and enjoys the sort of a room at Pickfair that most girls only dream of. At present, she is away at school.

Constance Bennett is the proud foster mother of a little four year old son, whom she brought back from one of her European trips. Peter is the constant playmate of little Adrienne Fox, sister Joan's baby by Joan's former husband.

Then there is Philippe de Lacey, the child-actor. His foster mother, Edith de Lacey, a nurse in France during the war, found the little orphaned fellow and brought him to America with her.

Polly Moran boasts a little son, also adopted. Of Italian ancestry, John Michael is Polly's joy and pride, and all the M-G-M lot rings with the tales Polly tells of his achievements at the military school which he attends.

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuri Aoki, last August adopted a little American-Japanese boy from a poor mother in Los Angeles' "Little Tokio." They will take the tot back to Japan with them and rear him there as a true son of the rising sun with all the advantages in Japanese life.

Conway Tearle Is Back.

Conway Tearle, who left Hollywood in a huff a couple of years ago, claiming he was being boycotted because he refused a salary cut, is back again and will play a prominent role in "The False Madonna." Kay Francis and William Boyd are the leads in the story.

Herbert Somborn [Mr. Gloria Swanson II.] has opened a fourth Brown Derby restaurant in Beverly Hills, and is doing well with it.

Gilbert Roland, formerly leading man for Norma Talmadge, is playing in a local stage production of "Camille," with Jane Cowl. It is his first stage experience, and he says it fussed him more than facing crowds as a bull fighter in Mexico in his boyhood days. He comes from a family noted for several generations for its matadors.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

United States Misrepresented.

Dear Miss Tinée: Despite the fact that I cannot allow myself the time to sit to write such a letter as this, I feel that what I should like to tell you needs telling so much that other things will have to wait.

I have noticed from time to time your kindly reviews of the German movies here, and when one considers that you admit ignorance of the language you are surprisingly tolerant and fair. I cannot believe that what the Germans are sending us is the best of what they can do, for most of the German talkies I have seen and heard were not one step above most of the mediocre ones concocted in Hollywood.

But all this does not get me to the point. A German talkie now current in Chicago, under the title of "Zwei Kravatten" (A Pair of Neckties), is thus far one of the most maudlin, the most stupid, the most imbecilic and the most effusively sentimental mush that has ever been grafted on a gullible public. Anything more emotionally silly has never been seen. It transcends in actual childish impossibility anything the most heroic in Hollywood have ever done. The scenes which the picture intends to be of the United States are, perhaps, the most impossible of all.

Imagine a wealthy home in America, such as the one presented in the picture, with a hundred or so servants in gaudy livery; the hostess and her dressing room with the thousand electric lights, which reminded one of nothing more than a lighting fixture store. Also, notice how the dining room table is set: the girls seated around in a circle with their legs bared up to the hips; the two American women bidding for the hand of the handsome German, one offering him twenty million and the other thirty million dollars.

Then, the absolutely impossible incident of the German girl suddenly inheriting forty million dollars. There is a lot more, equally silly. And the fact that there was a bit of good singing does not excuse the picture.

J. E. LORING.

Editor's note: I take it you didn't care for "Zwei Kravatten."

Ways that Mystify.

Dear Mae Tinée: For years the critics have said it in print and the public has said it with admission tickets, yet the producers go merrily on. So do not think that I expect this private protest to avail, but it may relieve my mind.

Some time ago Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote a story of Wyoming called "Lost Ecstasy," told with the tenderness of one who knows and loves that country. Our own haunt is not far from the ranch where she spends her summers. So, when we saw the story released under the title of "I Take This Woman," we made a special trip down to see the film. We were prepared to spend a happily miserable evening viewing the familiar beloved panorama of the range, the corrals, bunkhouse, and the little lonely cabins on the high plains.

Well, we were miserable, all right, without any qualifications. Doubtless we should have been warned by the change in title and by your faint praise. For it had not one thing in common with the book except the names of the principal characters; the minor ones were wholly omitted from the film. Not one incident remained unchanged.

The worst was first—the explanation of Kay's presence on the ranch. A worse miscast for the part could not be imagined. This jazz baby could never have portrayed the steadfast Kay of the story, and doubtless this hideous change was made to fit her personality. Gary acted as if he were ashamed to play the part of Tom, yet had the original been reproduced he would have been ideal.

The whole thing was so astounding that we searched for an explanation and found one. With economy in keeping with the times, they bought the story, used the names of the characters for this atrocity. Later they expect to produce the plot under the title of "Lost Ecstasy" and thus get double value. But here are two people who will not be there to see it. In fact, we have not attended a movie since.

TENSLEEP.

Editor's Note: For ways that are dark the heathen Chinee has little on the movie producer. (Sometimes.)

Likes "The Last Flight."

Dear Miss Tinée: I saw the picture "The Last Flight" and thought it delightful and touching, and this morning read your review of it, which expresses my reaction so perfectly I wanted to thank you. You have put into words just what I felt about the picture and think Helen Chandler was, as you say, "intuitive" in her rendition of the whimsical, gay but unsmiling Nikki.

I am sending this appreciation because from remarks made by several persons who sat near me in the audience that "it was the worst show they had ever seen," I have no doubt you will receive plenty of knocks from the undiscerning persons who are not the kind that would understand and value the underlying quality you describe so neatly as "vague, eerie, Alice in Wonderland-ish."

Here is one who was moved and charmed beyond measure, and I am sure there are many more who will likewise love this film, but may not tell you so. Sincerely, MARY CULP.

Editor's Note: It was a lovely picture, wasn't it! You were thoughtful to write.

A Kindly Letter.

Dear Miss Tinée: I'm right behind you when it comes to giving Lowell Sherman a big hand. I have my favorite screen actors and actresses who play excellently, but I'd walk across the city, if necessary, to see Lowell Sherman on the screen. I hardly know what it is, the play does not have to boast much of a plot, the dialogue can be as dull reading as so and so's expedition in the Far East, but when the curtain goes up and Sherman takes the center of the stage it's sure to be the best show in town.

He looks like a million dollars in his clothes, he has an A-1 stage presence, and when he speaks, no matter how dull and ordinary the lines, he puts them over with a bang; everything is done smoothly, well turned, polished, an eyebrow lifted here, a shrug of the shoulders, a wink, all done with a finesse and the perfection of a fine actor.

There, thank you for your "verie kind attention." I never miss your column and, though I've never written you before and perhaps won't again, I want to say that the World's Greatest Newspaper would lose some of its greatness if your column was left out.

Again I offer my profound admiration. It goes for all our house.

E. G. M.

Editor's Note: Mr. Sherman thanks you, THE TRIBUNE thanks you, and I thank you.

October Stirs Stage Season to Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

try, and some faint glimmering of intelligence in regard to the period in which its story has been placed is required of the playgoer.

The Italian Renaissance is the scene for "The Venetian." It corresponds to the Elizabethan period in England; and it implies, so far as the stage is concerned, a large amount of base conduct, frequent back-stabbings and wine poisonings, and a bustling activity in artistic, intellectual and political affairs. In other words, it is an excellent background for a romantic play—a time of hot passions and gay pageantry in which every one burned the candle at both ends and had a high old time.

This play, handsomely staged by Maurice Browne, is a satisfactory treatment of its material from a modern point of view. It avoids the sawdust theatricalism which curses costume drama. Its characters are thoroughly alive, and they speak a forthright, lucid English which is as frank, at times, as the talk of comedians in a bawdy Broadway revue. If romance with historical trimmings is ever to make a fresh start on the American stage, it will be with plays like "The Venetian."

Romantic Acting.

But if you remain cold to the fascinations of the flamboyant years when the city of Florence was preparing itself as an objective point for future generations of American tourists, you will certainly respond to the acting of Margaret Rawlings as the alluring Bianca, and Wilfrid Walter as her princely paramour. Here are players of high skill and personalities of winning address. Miss Rawlings I have tagged as a little, unsentimentalized Jane Cowl. Mr. Walter has the gifts for leadership in great romantic rôles.

When the accidental closing of a door caused a change in the destiny of "The Venetian's" heroine, I found myself skeptical about the existence of spring locks at the time of the Italian Renaissance. The author of this play may be an authority on antique doorlocks, but I shall demand confirmation from the Chicago Museum of Industry before I believe in this episode.

Showboat Ahoy!

This column's outcry for showboats last summer seems to have started something. Ralph T. Kettering, manager of the Adelphi theater, says that he is rebuilding an ancient hulk, discovered in the shipyards of Sheboygan, and hopes to have a floating theater of 1,500 in the Chicago river before winter sets in.

Commodore Billy Bryant, now showboating in Cincinnati, is preparing to bring his company here to show us how his dock-end troupe can play Shakespeare. Instigated by George E. Wintz, known as "the king of the one-night stands," he hopes to secure a Chicago theater and turn his crew loose in it.

The showboat atmosphere, aside from the rough-and-ready acting, will be supplied by decorations in the lobby. There are at least three theaters available for this adventure—the Civic, the Princess, and the Cort. Rialto gossips are naming the Civic as the place where Commodore Bryant will hoist his ensign—possibly because that playhouse is on the river front.

New Plays for Gotham Stage; Five Openings

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Broadway will see five premières next week, including three dramas and two musical shows. Here are the announcements:

"Church Mouse"—Opens tomorrow night at the Playhouse. A comedy from the Hungarian which has been extensively produced abroad. William A. Brady is bringing forth the adaptation by the Hattons of the Paul Frank-Laszlo Fodor original. In the leading rôles will be Ruth Gordon and Bert Lytle.

"Lean Harvest"—Opens Tuesday night at the Forrest. A play by Ronald Jeans which ran during the summer in London. Leslie Banks and Nigel Bruce will be in the cast along with Vera Allen, Leonard Mudie, Patricia Calvert, Charles Esdale, and Molly Pearson.

"Everybody's Welcome" — Opens Tuesday night at the Shubert. The season's first musical comedy from the Shubert workshops. Harold Atteridge has prepared the libretto, Sam Fain the music, and Irving Kahal the lyrics. The players will include Frances Williams, Oscar Shaw, Harriette Lake, and Ann Pennington.

"Pillars of Society" — Opens Wednesday night at the 48th Street. The Ibsen play is the second production of Laurence Langner's repertory group. Among the actors will be Moffat Johnston, Armina Marshall, Dorothy Gish, Rollo Peters, Romney Brent, Fania Marinoff, Edgar Stehli, Jessie Busley, and Knowles Entrikin.

"The Cat and the Fiddle"—Opens Thursday night at the Globe. A romantic musical show by Jerome Kern and Otto Harbach. The large company will include Georges Metaxa, Bettina Hall, Eddie Foy Jr., Lawrence Grossmith, Dorothy Debenham, George F. Meader, Doris Carson, Odette Myrtil, and Jose Ruben.

Unknown Warrior

MAURICE BROWNE will appear in his London success, "The Unknown Warrior," at the Selwyn theater in four matinée performances, starting Sunday, Nov. 8 and closing the afternoon of Armistice day. Rosalinde Fuller is coming from London to play her original part. The play is from the pen of M. Paul Raynal.

After this engagement Mr. Browne will make an eight weeks' tour in "The Unknown Warrior" under the management of James B. Pond.

STAR IN "PRIVATE LIVES"

EDITH TALIAFERRO.

SHE has been leading ingenue and star of dozens of plays, of which "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" are the most easily remembered. Now, as a full blown, fascinating woman of the world, she co-stars with Donald Brian in Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," at the Erlanger theater.

Eugene O'Neill Ends Ten Year Solitude Hunt

Finds Content and Rest from City's Turmoil in Skyscraper.

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Eugene O'Neill has ended a ten year search for solitude. This isolation he has found in a luxurious apartment high above Park avenue's noisy taxicabs and hurrying throngs.

It is an ironic paradox that O'Neill should discover this escape from the crowds where he could work in peace right in the heart of the city.

He experimented with a half dozen other environments before he was won over as a hermit in the metropolis.

Lived in Lighthouse.

His first workshop was in a lonely lighthouse on the seacoast at Provincetown, Mass. Then he took a cottage amid the quiet of Bermuda, and from there slipped away to Shanghai, where he hoped to remain incognito.

Finally, he moved into an out-of-the-way chateau in Tours, France and stayed there for two years. He became weary of the place, and returned last summer with the announced intention of living on a plantation in Virginia.

He came to New York first, and fell in love once again with his old home town. He walked along the waterfront streets where, as a youth, he had mingled with sailors in the old-time saloons. He visited the old haunts he had frequented with his father, when the latter was a star in "Monte Cristo."

* *

Found City Best.

For ten years, O'Neill, weary of his wanderings, has been seeking a haven where he could settle down and work. And, like the prodigal son, he has returned home to find what he sought here in the city.

"I'm glad I spent those years abroad because it gave me a new perspective on my country and its people," he explained. "I think any writer must live abroad to get a true objective view of his native scene."

New Lady Teazle

ETHEL BARRYMORE will come to the Grand Opera House Oct. 19 in her revival of "The School for Scandal," in which she has just completed a tour of the Pacific coast and the northwest. She first acted the rôle of Lady Teazle in 1924 to the Sir Peter of her late uncle, John Drew, in a week's revival of Sheridan's comedy by the Players' club of New York.

This will be the first Chicago performances of the classic since Mrs. Insull's revival in June of 1925 in the Illinois theater.

Miss Barrymore is the third member of her family in direct descent to act Lady Teazle. Her grandmother, Mrs. John Drew, was a famed Lady Teazle, while it was the rôle in which her mother, Georgia Drew Barrymore, made her first appearance as the leading woman of Mrs. Drew's company in Philadelphia. Maurice Barrymore, Miss Barrymore's father, played not fewer than six rôles in "The School for Scandal" in his younger days on the English stage, while John Drew was a matinée idol forty years ago vis-à-vis with Ada Rehan and got his vogue largely on his performance as Charles Surface.

Miss Barrymore's company includes Walter Gilbert as Charles, McKay Morris as Joseph, C. H. Croker-King as Sir Peter, Herry Plimmer as Sir Oliver, A. G. Andrews as Moses, and Beatrice Terry as Mrs. Candour.

The engagement will be for two weeks, after which Miss Barrymore will take the play into New York.

Miss Cornell Wants to Act Roman Matron

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Katharine Cornell, who has become one of Broadway's foremost acting managers in her first year as a producer, already is planning her new play for next season. It is to be "The Rape of Lucrece," a French dramatization based upon Shakespeare's poem.

Miss Cornell sailed this week for a month's vacation in Bermuda. She will return Nov. 16 to reopen in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." This story of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's romance has been one of New York's leading hits since it opened last February, and its popularity forecasts that it will remain on Broadway all winter.

Miss Cornell's rôle requires her to be upon the stage every moment from the time the first curtain rises until a few seconds before the end. She found the task exhausting and decided upon a six weeks' rest.

Although there was no extraordinary success among the new plays of the past week, several of them offer diverting evenings. "Payment Deferred" is an English murder melodrama of novel aspects. In addition to its unusual plot it is distinguished by the performance of Charles Laughton from London.

"The Good Companions," another English importation, is a gigantic picturesque show of character parts. It is a dramatization of J. B. Priestley's novel. Elmer Rice, who revealed a panorama of New York life in his "Street Scene," does the same for Paris in "Left Bank." In this drama he chides the American expatriates who prefer a French Bohemia to the comforts of their native land.

"Cherries Are Ripe," which has been headed for Broadway for more than a year, again has been sidetracked. This is the Anita Loos and John Emerson comedy which was given on tour all last year by Rod La Rocque and Vilma Banky.

Several weeks ago these two were replaced by Basil Sydney and Mary Ellis, but a manager, Arch Selwyn, still was not satisfied with his cast. So the comedy has been temporarily withdrawn and will be brought forth later with two other stars.

Elmer Rice has already written a new drama called "Counsellor-at-Law," and it will have Paul Muni in the lead. . . . Jed Harris opens his season with "Wonder Boy," another satire on movie producers. Hazel Dawn is to be the star. . . . Nikita Balieff of "Chauve Souris" is back to stage a new show on Broadway.

In Classics

VIOLA ROACHE of the Chicago Civic Shakespeare society's company, began her career with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in London. Following several tours with Sir Charles Wyndham, she accepted an engagement in Johannesburg, South Africa, where she played in "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," "As You like It," "Twelfth Night," and "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

As leading woman at the Copley theater in Boston she was seen in the plays of Shaw, Galsworthy, Milne, Barrie, and Shakespeare. A season with Milton Rosner in England followed, after which she returned to America for an engagement in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," with Ina Claire, and "The Woman Disputed," with Lowell Sherman and Ann Harding.

She has also appeared in many films for the M. G. M. and Paramount firms.

Travel Talk.

"France and the Colonial Exposition," first of the new series of E. M. Newman's travel talks, will be given at Orchestra hall next Wednesday and Friday evenings and Saturday afternoon.

Noel Coward's Plays Popular; B'way Gossip

"Improper Duchess," with Irene Bordoni as Star, to Be Withdrawn.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The prevalence of Noel Coward's works on the American stage—he wrote "Private Lives," you may remember, and some of the numbers in "The Third Little Show"—arouses interest in a project to revive his comedy called "Hay Fever." Constance Collier will have the rôle that Laura Hopes Crews acted at Maxine Elliott's theater several years ago. The most recent staging of "Hay Fever" was by the Goodman repertory theater of Chicago last winter, with Margaret Wycherly as the featured player.

Maurice Browne's production of "The Improper Duchess," by Bernard Fagan, will have only a brief life on the American stage, although it was a sizable hit in London. It will be offered next week in Hartford and Providence, but will go no farther. It was intended for the Shubert circuit of subscription theaters, including Chicago. Irene Bordoni has the leading rôle.

Sidney Howard's new play, called "Yellow Jacket," deals with the efforts to eradicate yellow fever from the Caribbean ports which followed the Spanish-American war. It derives, more or less, from a chapter of Paul De Kruif's interesting book called "Microbe Hunters." Arthur Hopkins has a lien on "Yellow Jacket."

"A Modern Virgin" closes its tour in Detroit tonight. Roger Pryor and Margaret Sullavan are probable members of the cast of "Blessed Event," a comedy that the Shuberts now have on their shelves.

Florence Nightingale, whose name will always be associated with women's relief work for armies in the field—she started in the Crimean war—will be the heroine of a play called "The Lady with a Lamp." Leslie Banks, the English actor now in "Lean Harvest," will stage the play for Managers McGowan and Reed, and Edith Evans will come from London to play the famous nurse. Rehearsals will begin Oct. 21. Reginald Berkeley is the author.

Queenie Smith's new operetta will be called "The Little Racketeer." It comes from the German stage, where it bore the same title—a fact which suggests that Berlin has gone in for rackets. Paul Ash and his band will figure in the entertainment.

An English actress rejoicing in the name of Lady George Cholmondoley will soon begin a Canadian tour in a series of plays and dance programs. Galsworthy's "The Silver Box" is on her list. The dance programs will include something called "a play by Rabelais."

Helen Hayes has returned to New York from Hollywood to begin rehearsals for Molnar's "The Good Fairy," which Gilbert Miller will stage. The first performance will be given in Washington Nov. 9, and a week in Pittsburgh will follow.

Irving Berlin and Moss Hart are writing a musical show which will employ a revolving stage and other elaborate mechanical devices. If nothing happens it will appear in New York before the Christmas holidays. The boys haven't agreed upon a title as yet. . . . Frank Craven has written a new play, variously described as a melodrama and a dramatic comedy. John Golden will produce it.

English Actor Wins Cheers on Gotham Stage

Charles Laughton, in "Payment Deferred," Plays Character Role.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The English actor who played Tony Perelli, gangster, in the London production of "On the Spot" has been brought to America by Gilbert Miller in a murder play called "Payment Deferred," which was done at the Lyceum last week.

His name is Charles Laughton, and he has had the somewhat unique experience at home of coming late to the theater and topping the list of character actors in five or six seasons. He was 27 when he made his first stage appearance in 1926, after winning a gold medal at a dramatic school. Since then he has played many parts, and his popularity with the crowd has increased with each of them.

In "Payment Deferred" he is given opportunity of running the gamut of the emotions about which less is heard these days than formerly. His character is that of William Marble, a flabby, beady eyed bank clerk, down on his luck and resentful. Living a lower middle class life in a lower middle class neighborhood, he is much in need of funds.

One evening, when he is fearing the collectors, there comes a young man to call on him. He is a nephew from Australia, has just arrived in London. He has no other relatives on that side of the world and, the estate of his parents having been recently settled, he is well supplied with money. He is also a cagey young man and refuses to loan uncle any of his money. So uncle poisons him and buries his body in the garden.

Haunted by Conscience.

Thereafter, for three tortured acts, William Marble, murderer, is haunted by his conscience as relentlessly as was Matthias in "The Bells." He fears the slamming of doors, the sound of bells, the chatter of people passing in the street, the shouts of children. If any one is seen even so much as raking the garden, he is threatened with hysteria.

He profits from his crime to the extent of some thirty thousand pounds and is able to set his wondering wife and daughter up in style. But disaster follows every move he makes.

He buys a new set of garish furniture, and riding into the house with it comes a little French shopkeeper from just around the corner who proceeds to seduce and blackmail him out of thousands.

He sends his daughter to a fine school in France, where she is promptly lifted out of her natural class and becomes so disgusted with her old home and her old father that when she comes back she takes to being a hostess in a night club.

He buys his wife a new outfit of clothes and a holiday at Bournemouth [so he may have his way with the French girl], but she comes back to him distressed in mind and suspicious. Finally, she has his secrets from him and the shock is so great that she herself drinks poison and is dead on the second floor when the doctor comes—dead of poison she had not the strength to come downstairs to get for herself, the doctor says, which makes it likely at the play's end that William Marble will swing for a murder he did not commit, even though the body buried in the garden is never discovered.

Heavy and Cheerless.

It is a heavy and cheerless play, but fascinating in the way mysteries are. Mr. Laughton, of course, acts Marble to the hilt, the picture of misery incarnate, a sensitive register for all the emotions haunted men are prey to.

For my own part, this type of acting leaves me cold. Character actors are bound to be stage conscious. Laughton is noticeably so, being deliberate in reaching for effects and toying with them. Too frequently it is possible to catch him working at his trade, and that is devastating to illusion and story. But that he is technical master of that trade there is no doubt. He has many believable and impressive moments in repose.

An actress in his company, Cicely Oates by name, outplayed her star in the quiet realities she brought to the rôle of the suspicious wife. She, too, started with fright, blanched with fear, trembled with apprehension, stood stark and staring at the realization of horrible truths, wept with sympathy, and comforted with understanding—and never once were you conscious of a single actress' trick.

"Payment Deferred" is the type of melodrama that makes theater going an exciting business for the young and for those of their elders who are open minded and susceptible. These have been standing to cheer Mr. Laughton at the close of each performance.

Merits High Praise.

I think there is more real drama, more depth of feeling, more sound artistry in the production of Paul Green's "The House of Connelly" by a Theater Guild subsidiary than in any other play of the new season, to date. This play, incidentally, has been in the Guild's possession for two seasons. Whether the managers lacked courage to do it, or were doubtful of its appeal, I do not know. In any event, last summer they turned it over to a group of their younger members with the promise that they could put it in rehearsal if they liked and see what would come of it.

The young people took the script and several others and went away into a sort of artists' camp in Connecticut. There they turned a barn into a theater and rehearsed their plays all summer. When they had "The House of Connelly" ready they asked Mr. Green and the Guild executives to see them play it. The result was so greatly in their favor that the Guild financed a production for the play.

Mr. Green's drama is the story of a disintegrating family, proud in its memory of happier days in the old south. The house of Connelly is a decaying house. Its men, down to the current generation represented by young Will Connelly, are lustful, lazy, washed out, through. Its women are led by a proud mother standing [with the aid of a crutch] firmly by her traditions and her memories, still leaning on the glory of old General Connelly, who fought the war and begat illegitimate offspring, and include a pair of spinster sisters crushed and anemic, but also loyal.

* *

Fates Move In.

A family of poor whites, named Fate, move in as tenant farmers and the daughter, Patsy, hungry for land, plans to seduce Will for his, and Will, hungry for love, takes it from Patsy.

The result is cataclysmic in the Connelly family. Will's uncle Robert, lecherous and modestly alcoholic, shoots himself through his poor weak old head to preserve his pride, Mother Connelly dies of a stroke, and the sisters desert and flee to Atlanta.

But Will holds true, marries Patsy, and she, come to honor and believe in their true love, takes her place as mistress of the house of Connelly with her common blood surging exultantly through her veins. The Guild juniors are not all suited as a type to the rôles the aristocratic south suggests, but they are fine players. Franchot Tone gives a magnificent performance as Will, and Margaret Baker plays well as Patsy. Mary Morris is distinguished and fine as the mother.

"Good Companions" Staged.

Most of the characters, but little of the spirit of high adventure that endeared the story of "The Good Companions" to its public, have come to the stage in a dramatization of the J. B. Priestley novel, which is a common enough report with dramatized novels. Nothing the theater folk can do can preserve the bloom the imagination puts on book characters.

There is good entertainment in "The Good Companions" for perhaps half its length. The gathering of the various parties to the adventure is promising.

Jess Oakroyd, the robust Yorkshireman, quarrels with the nagging missus, takes his kit of tools and his bag and starts off down the road. The gallant spinster, Elizabeth Trant, bowls along the motor ways and breaks down twixt Tumbleby and Rawsley, where Oakroyd manages to set her engine going again.

The disgusted Inigo Jollifant tosses up his job as a submaster in the Taverns' school, bundles his wisps of songs into his bag, collects his fifty-two pounds sterling and is off with Susie Dean and Morton Mitcham, show folk looking for a job.

They all meet at Rawsley, and there it is they come upon the concert party that was the dinky-dos, stranded and unhappy. There the Good Companions company is organized, with the aid of Miss Trant's money, and the great adventure is started.

Six Months Later.

They're still going six months later, which is the second division of the play. Much the same as to personnel, Mr. Jollifant is in love with Susie Dean, which provides a thread of romance, but Susie is fearfully afraid a husband would interfere with her career and will have none of him.

It is at Gatford that the crash comes. Mr. Wimpers, the cinema man, hires his thugs to break up the show and they do it successfully, tossing vegetables at the warbling pierrots and finally setting fire to the theater.

As a play I think the weakness of "The Good Companions" is its failure to concentrate interest on the adventures of the honest Oakroyd and Miss Trant. In a book story an author can be as diffuse and rambling as he pleases, so long as he is interesting. But in a play he has no time to ramble, and the thinner he spreads his story the less interesting it is.

An English cast has been imported or picked up from the local English colony for the playing of "The Good Companions." Valerie Taylor, who was the lovely Gainsborough lady in "Berkeley Square," is the Miss Trant, and her young husband, Hugh Sinclair, is playing Jollifant. They are the strength of the company. George Carney is the Oakroyd and Vera Lennox a fairly rough and ready Susie Dean. Edward Knoblock helped Priestley with the dramatization.

* *

Week's Plays Not So Good.

The rest of our drama this last week, though there was plenty of it, is not much worth talking about. A Vincent Lawrence play, "Washington Nights," was vicious in its nastiness and, praise be, lasted but a few days.

"Nikki," a musical comedy made from the John Monk Saunders stories, has found some friends, but hardly enough to keep it with us long. The musical hits of the town are the Aborn revivals of the older light operas. "The Chocolate Soldier" has just finished two big weeks, and "The Geisha" is to follow, with good old Jimmy Powers in his old rôle of Mun Hi, keeper of the teahouse.

SHE is one of the principal entertainers in "Girl Crazy," the musical comedy now at the Garrick theater. Miss West is the brisk soubrette who leads a song now and then while Benny Rubin and Blossom Seeley are changing costumes.

The Armchair Playgoer

By Fanny Butcher.

IN NEW YORK.

The only openings in New York which armchair playgoers could attend last week were the revivals of two plays which have been revived often before, Dion Boucicault's "Streets of New York" and August Strindberg's "The Father." They will lure readers into the literature of their time, perhaps, and into the biographies of their authors.

AUGUST STRINDBERG.

Dion Boucicault was one of the most spectacular actor-playwrights of his day. His success began before he was 20 in a play called "London Assurance," which was produced in 1841. He died in New York in 1890, where he had made his home since 1875 and where as much of his reputation had been made as in London.

He was born in Dublin, the son of a French refugee and an Irish mother, and he was said to be the greatest stage Irishman of his day. Perhaps his most famous play was not an original play at all, but an adaptation of a novel by Gerald Griffin, called "The Collegians." The play was given the title "The Colleen Bawn." It was played in almost every city in the United Kingdom and the United States, and it made its author a handsome fortune.

August Strindberg, author of "The Father," was quite another sort of person. Born a generation later than Boucicault and in poverty, he lived his life long in suffering—physical privation as a child, mental turmoil as a youth, and hysterical spiritual disintegration as a man. He made two marriages, both of which were disastrous and both of which led him almost to insanity. There are many who think that he actually was insane.

"The Father" was written in 1887 during the stress of his first marital fiasco and shows the depressing effect of his persecution mania. It concerns the deliberate deluding by a wife of her husband into the belief that he is not the father of his much loved daughter. Insanity, always so near to the author himself, seizes the father and he is finally tricked into a strait-jacket by his old nurse. Only death solves his problem.

When the play appeared it naturally created a furor. It was a landmark of importance in the history of European realism. "Lady Julia" followed it in 1888, and other similar plays, most of which centered in the author's own marital tragedy. In those years [the years when Boucicault was living his last] Strindberg was writing his greatest novels, "The People of Hemso," which was published the same year as "The Father," and "In the Outer Skerries," which appeared in 1890, the year of Boucicault's death.

Strindberg's marriage was dissolved in 1891. His misery was accentuated by financial difficulties and insanity touched him more nearly than ever. He lived twenty-one years after that, however, piling up volumes. He is considered Sweden's greatest modern writer according to critics, and his work has exerted a deep and lasting influence on the European novel and drama.

In "Little Show"

WALTER O'KEEFE, who appears as master of ceremonies in the "Third Little Show" at the Great Northern, was a newspaper, advertising, and vaudeville writer up to 1928, when he authored his first show, "Just a Minute." The next spring, in Hollywood, he wrote his first song hit, "Little by Little," with Bobby Dolan.

Three seasons as master of ceremonies at the Club Gallant, New York, prepared him for the "Third Little Show." Notre Dame is his alma mater.

Critics Often Too Severe with Cinema Epics

By Tom Pettey.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The old days of poking fun at the movies have gone, but a lot of people still like to pick flaws in the celluloid epics. Among the favorite subjects for highbrow magazines and Sunday supplements alike are:

"What is wrong with the talking pictures?"

"Censorship, or the purification of the films."

"Wastefulness in making pictures."

"The dearth of good, original material."

"The lack of art among the film artists."

One could go on and on, filling the page with these topics and still not scratch the surface of what has been written. For the most part the deluge of words has been filled with criticism. Few write in defense of the movies; it just is not profitable. The talkies need no defense, according to their makers, and whatever is written about them is just so much publicity for the old publicity mill. Nevertheless, this column is written in defense of the movies.

No Basic Mistake.

To begin with, there is nothing wrong with the movies. That is, nothing wrong in the sense of a fundamental, basic mistake. On the contrary, the talkies have made magnificent strides this season. The producers have produced the best of pictures, the players have grown in fame and ability, the industry has managed to hold up its head in the midst of depression. When the talkie houses show such pictures as "Street Scene," "Alexander Hamilton," and "Five Star Final" it is foolish to speak ill of the industry.

When such actors as George Arliss, the Barrymore brothers, and others of great skill find their greatest roles in the movies, why should we search for minor flaws?

A second popular topic is censorship. From time to time some highly misinformed writer predicts the downfall of the entire motion picture structure through this evil of evils. Certainly censorship becomes ridiculous at times, but it is necessary and has contributed a great deal to the industry. Without some form of censorship the movies would have hit a burlesque house level and remained there until doomsday.

I have seen just about as many raw scenes in the movies as I ever saw on the stage. It is to the credit of the censor that the films are washing up while the stage is reeking more strongly than ever. No one in a normal frame of mind would wish to see the talkies filled with dirt. For every goofy job of censoring such as putting dresses on Micky Mouse, clothing statues, or making all mothers married women, there have been constructive jobs such as the elimination of the pictures that glorify gangsters, the cutting of shots featuring scenes that might upset the digestive functions and the ban on profanity, except where it is essential to the plot of the picture.

Wastefulness Exaggerated.

Wastefulness in making pictures has been too highly exploited. It is true that there has been and possibly still is a lot of waste about the studios. For that matter, there is a lot of waste about newspaper offices, and banks have been known to fail because of "overhead." One of last season's film hits, "Hell's Angels," has demonstrated that gigantic expenditures running into the millions of dollars is not always money thrown away. If I am informed correctly, the above mentioned picture has paid a tidy profit to young Mr. Hughes, the "spendthrift."

Those producers who hire "talent" at fancy salaries and then make no use of the "talent" are not always dumb-bells. They have learned from experience that it is cheaper to keep a herd of "brains" on the scenario pay roll and pick off the real "ideas," if any, than it is to try to make pictures out of every "masterpiece" that is turned in. The movie folks are not the only ones who go in for "talent" in a big way.

I recall several stories in which high powered "talent" entered into competition with the working press. The publishers spent a lot of money, but they put the staff man's story in the lead. The "talent" provided the filler stuff. In one case I remember a one dollar a word man who arrived on the scene too befuddled to get into action. The local correspondent wired his agency to "sober up another genius." I call that extravagance.

Plenty of Good Material.

As for the dearth of good, original material, why look for original material when the libraries are full of unpictured masterpieces? The classics still offer an almost untouched mine of film material. In case present day literary compositions still are to be desired, the market is good. I saw Louis Bromfield's "Twenty-Four Hours" after the novel had been made into a play. It was as good as one could hope for. And as for original products, just give Eddie Cantor or any one of the four Marx brothers a cameraman and a stage and they will produce original matter in quantity and frequently quality.

The lack of art among the artists needs little explanation. There is no lack. The movie actors and actresses are giving as finished performances as the stage stars.

Week's Films Pepless.

Now, to tell you about a current picture. Ann Harding is on Broadway again. Her picture is called "Devotion" and deals in a charming manner with romance in an English barrister's home. Miss Harding plays the part of a girl grown tired of the humdrum life in her household. She goes out into the world disguised as a middle aged governess and gets employment in the lawyer's home.

Ann Harding in wig and spectacles loses an indefinable something. I like her better as Ann Harding. Nevertheless, the picture will get you.

among the October attractions

Notre Dame's Four Horsemen are riding again, but not on college gridirons. They are being featured, with Lew Ayres, in "The Spirit of Notre Dame," the current film at the State-Lake theater.

Alyce Chappele of the twinkling toes danced her way into Chicago theatergoers' hearts with Lou Holtz in "You Said It," at the Grand.

Indian Summer Brings Chicago Playhouses into Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

AFTER attending and reviewing six premières within eight days to celebrate the grand fall opening of the Chicago theatrical season, one's mind becomes a haze of mixed impressions. Floating around in the fog, however, there are a series of wonderments. For example:

I wonder if Walker Whiteside knows that his frequent expectoration upon the stage, in the rôle of the spitting Irishman in "Surf," dilutes rather than fortifies that South Seas melodrama?

I wonder if Phil Baker and Ted Healy, the aggressive and reckless jesters of the revue called "Crazy Quilt," know that dozens and hundreds of average theater-goers, before buying their tickets to any show, ask me: "Is it clean?"

I wonder if Maurice Browne, who is offering "The Venetian" under the auspices of the Dramatic League of Chicago, knows that the finger of destiny has begun to point in his direction as the Siegfried to arouse the Goodman theater from its present state of coma?

I wonder if Donald Brian, co-starring with Edith Taliaferro in "Private Lives," will tell me the location of the fountain of youth from which he apparently quaffs magic draughts that preserve him as a perpetual Prince Danilo?

I wonder if Beatrice Lillie of "The Third Little Show" isn't the only comedienne in history whose sense of humor refused to be ruined by the acquisition of a British title?

I wonder if Gregory Ratoff, who has brought "Girl Crazy" into Chicago in order to fulfill a vow made upon all the ikons of old Russia, is the Morris Gest of the future?

I wonder why Chicago theater managers continue to use the huddle system for their first nights?

I wonder if the play going year in this town will sustain the spirited pace at which it has started?

Finger of Destiny.

My speculations upon the possibility of Maurice Browne's assuming the directorate of a new repertory company at the Goodman theater, perhaps a year hence when Chicago is dressing its windows in readiness for the Century of Progress exposition, have a background in rumor. There has been some slow burning talk on the subject. The trustees of the Goodman, however, are saying nothing, according to their custom, and Mr. Browne himself has dropped no hint of ambitions in this direction.

He seems to be a logical candidate for this labor of Hercules, if Hubert Osborne does not return to the Goodman, and I rise to place him in nomination. His qualifications are numerous. He is a pioneer of the art theater movement in this country; he has a Chicago background, and a loyal following. He has risen from "little" to "big" theater status. His shy beginning on the fourth floor back of the Fine Arts building twenty years ago has carried him to leadership on the London stage and rating as an international impresario. He has given a convincing demonstration of executive prowess as well as art theater ideals.

On the other hand, his control of the Goodman might be too remote. He has many irons in the fire; he is the lessee or owner of two important theaters in London; he contributes plays to the commercial American stage. As a hypothetical director of the Goodman, his authority would probably be delegated, through most of the year, to the lieutenants that he might place in charge there.

These remarks are intended as first aid to the finger of destiny. If they are wasted, I shall have to find myself another candidate, and probably will begin to cast flirtatious eyes at Eva Le Gallienne.

* *

Flaming Florentines.

Your affection for "The Venetian," which came to Chicago for its American première after a prosperous engagement in London, will depend largely upon your taste for "costume plays." When the drama gets into "costume" it also invades his-

Despite all his medals, Warren Williams appears to be upset about something, but apparently his tirade is giving Bebe Daniels little to worry about. The picture is "Honor of the Family," and it's on display at the present time at the Oriental theater.

Regis Toomey is registering stark terror in this scene from "24 Hours," the photoplay adapted from Louis Bromfield's novel of the same name. Miriam Hopkins, shown above; Clive Brook, and Kay Francis also are in the picture, which is at the Chicago.

This is a puzzle picture. Try to find Hardie Albright, the smiling star of the stage success, "Young Sinners," and Maureen O'Sullivan, recently imported from the "Ould Sod," in this scene from "Skyline" at the Palace theater. (Note: They are in the center.)

Fresh from many movie triumphs in their laugh provoking shorts, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy may be seen at the Roosevelt in their first full length picture. The gentleman with the mean looking forceps is James Santell. But maybe they're not real.

Here is something for the children as well as grownups. Leon Janney with "Zip-Zip the Cannaball" in "Penrod and Sam," from Booth Tarkington's famous novel of the same name. It is showing at the Woods for the week.

By Edward Moore.

ONE of the early performances of the season, promises the Chicago Civic Opera company, will be Mozart's "The Magic Flute." It will be, as far as Chicago's opera is concerned, a novelty, and it is also going to take a lot of casting. About a quarter century has passed since the work went on here by a professional company. The last performance would seem to have been the time when Fritzi Scheff spilled the operatic beans by appearing as Papagena and getting more applause than the diva who sang the part of the Queen of the Night thought any Papagena was entitled to. It led to feelings and atmosphere not altogether those of sweetness and light, certainly not in the nature of Mozart's golden melodies.

Splendid Cast Chosen.

Papagena, by the way, is not mentioned in the program sent out by the opera company. But for the rest, here is what the company has assembled in the way of a stellar cast. It includes three highly specialized sopranos, a leading contralto, a leading tenor, a leading baritone, a buffo baritone, and a leading basso. They are thus itemized:

Sarastro	Alexander Kipnis
Astrofiammente	Nöel Eadie
Pamina, her daughter	Maria Rajdl
Queen's lady	Frida Leider
Queen's lady	Maria Olszewska
Prince Tamino	Paolo Marion
The Orator	Rudolf Bockelman
Papageno	Eduard Habich
Monostatos	Octave Dua

Conductor—Egon Pollak.

One of the reasons why Herbert Witherspoon made a trip to Europe last summer was to hunt up a coloratura soprano up to the music of Astrofiammente, who is otherwise known as the Queen of the Night. He had auditions here and there, in Paris, Berlin, Munich, and Salzburg, before making his choice. Finally he set-

By Mae Tinee.

Good morning!

"The Spirit of Notre Dame" is dedicated to the memory of the late Knute Rockne, famous and beloved head coach of a history making football team. You will remember that Mr. Rockne was on his way to the coast to complete a contract for some two reel football shorts when the airplane crash occurred that cost his life.

This picture's release at the start of the football season and on the eve of the Notre Dame-Northwestern game is timely and something in the nature of a stroke of genius on the part of the producers. Every football fan will want to see it. Every friend and admirer of Rockne will want to see it, while folks who don't know much about affairs of the gridiron, but like to keep up with current conversation, will buy tickets just to get a glimpse of the famous "Four Horsemen," Don Miller, Jim Crowley, Harry Stuhldreher, and Elmer Layden.

"Are those fellows really in this film?" you ask.

You bet they are! In closeups and in action.

* *

You See Them at Work.

You see their work in the Notre Dame-Army encounter cleverly inserted via news reel. As for the closeup—don't they all autograph a football for a small, enthusiastic boy who sentimentally requests their signatures?

"And now, what are you going to do with it, Sonny?" asks one of the four, fatuously.

"I'm goin' to sell it to a guy for ten bucks," replies mamma's little business man.

O, before I forget it—don't ever again pronounce Carideo with the accent on the "rid." It's Car-ri-day-o, bearing down hard on the "day." If you don't believe it, hear Frank himself give you the lowdown in the picture. And he ought to know!

Little Love Stuff.

As far as the actual football stuff goes, "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is fine! And J. Farrell McDonald seems to me the best man who could have been picked to represent Rockne. He bears an astonishing resemblance to the great coach and is a seasoned and sincere actor. He and his team, at practice, at play, and in their little human communions are convincing. It is not their fault that soppy hokum has been introduced into the story, nor should they be criticized for participation in the same. I won't go into detail about the regrettable mush

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY RULE STILL GOOD IN SCHOOLS

Chicago a Pioneer in Physical Training.

BY IRENE STEYSKAL.

A lot of cold, unbiased testing seems to have forced oblivion upon any number of the good old axioms and maxims, but there is one—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," it goes—that apparently has not suffered from a waning of popularity. As far as we know it never has been so much as questioned; certainly not by our law making body in Springfield, which considered it worthy of legislation.

Since laws are generally couched in more formal terms, however, the gentlemen who make them downstate proclaimed that "physical culture" should be taught in the public schools. Since that time each locality has been working out, according to its immediate needs and means, its own program of execution.

In the Chicago schools an attempt to introduce instruction in physical education was made as early as 1863. Definite steps were taken in 1885 following a demonstration of exercises in the Ogden school made by the Chicago Turngemeinde. A committee was appointed by the board of education to formulate a program, an instructor was chosen and provision made for physical education classes at the Lincoln, Brown, Douglass, and King schools.

Chicago Leads Nation.

Chicago was the first city in the country to appoint [the following year] a supervisor of physical education. Henry Suder was the man appointed to the new post, a position which he held for 37 years.

A red letter year for Knute Rockne's alma mater, old Northwest Division High school, now Tuley, was 1890 when it erected the first fully equipped high school gymnasium for the teaching of physical education. Six years later the Franklin school claimed the same record for elementary schools.

In 1911 began the transition from the old swimmin' hole. Hyde Park High school was the first school for boys and girls erected with gymnasia and a swimming pool.

Pritzlaff Present Director.

The bureau of physical education was reorganized in 1925 with the appointment of one director and three supervisors. Two years ago the present director, August H. Pritzlaff, succeeded E. C. Delaporte to that position.

Mr. Pritzlaff had been instructor of physical education, coach, and dean of boys at Senn High school preceding his appointment to the directorship. Associated with Mr. Pritzlaff on the bureau as supervisors are H. R. Crook, Vera Gardiner, and Maj. F. L. Beals. Maj. Beals, assisted by Maj. H. H. Moore, is in charge of military training in the high schools. Under him are twenty-six instructors directing the R. O. T. C. units which are established in twenty senior high schools.

Under the supervision of Miss Gardiner and Mr. Crook are the Normal college, with eight teachers of physical education; Crane college, with six; there are 204 instructors in twenty-four senior high schools; seventy-five in twenty-seven junior high schools; the 302 elementary schools have 228 teachers; eleven continuation schools have two instructors; and there are five in the six prevocational schools. There are also 16 physiotherapists employed in the city's four schools for crippled children.

Apart from the military training conducted by Maj. Beals, physical education in the public schools comprises physical education classes, corrective work, health education classes; athletic and after-school play; swimming instruction; and the safety patrols in the elementary and junior high schools.

Physical instruction in the kindergartens and elementary schools is, of course, more or less informal. In the kindergartens and through the third grade its consists largely of song games, story plays and the dramatization of activities in the school. From the third grade on a more formal course is provided which includes setting up exercises in the yard or gymnasium, where they are available; folk dancing, swimming in the three elementary schools where swimming polls are installed—Swift, Carter, and Scanlon—and exercises with gymnasium equipment in the schools where such equipment is available.

Diversified High School Program.

A more definite and diversified program, made possible by equipment, time allotment and the teaching staff, is carried out in the junior high schools. The number of instructors in physical education—one for approximately every 650 pupils—in the junior high schools varies from one to five. New junior high schools and those that have been remodeled are equipped with a girls' gymnasium, a boys' gymnasium, and a swimming pool.

In almost every high school in the city a girls' athletic association is established. Awards for athletic activities are based on a point system that considers not only achievement but sportsmanship, scholarship, and health activties. In both the senior and junior high schools girls' athletics are limited to intramural competition.

Boys of the junior high schools also have their athletic associations. While emphasis is placed in intramural competition, limited competition between schools is permitted in indoor baseball, basketball, swimming and track and field athletics. A doctor's certificate, parental permission, and scholastic eligibility are the requirements for membership on one of the school teams.

Bruno Kluge President.

The program for athletics in the senior high schools, superimposed upon the courses followed in the junior high schools, provides for much wider competition between schools. A board of control made up of representatives, who are physical education instructors, from each high school formulates rules and regulates the conducting of interscholastic competition. Heading this group as president is Bruno Kluge of Bowen High school. George W. Steffens of Austin is vice president, and Mr. Pritzlaff serves as secretary and treasurer.

Games played for coveted city championships range all the way from chess and checkers to football. Lindblom is present holder of the football title. Last season Lindblom won championships also for cross country running and novice and senior gymnastics.

Senn claims championships for golf, ice skating in the senior class, indoor and outdoor track in the senior division, and swimming [25 yards] in the senior and junior divisions.

Other title holders are: Lane for tennis, junior ice skating and baseball; Roosevelt for junior outdoor and indoor track and fencing; Crane for basketball in the heavyweight class and soccer; Marshall for basketball in the lightweight class; Lake View for rifle markmanship; Englewood for swimming [20 yards] in the senior division; Schurz for swimming [20 yards] in the junior division, and Tilden for wrestling.

Tuley claims the checkers champion, and Austin came out with flying colors in the ches tournament.

World Series Opens Friday in Austin

Warming up for the world series membership drive at the Austin Y. M. C. A., 501 North Central avenue. These workers discussed plans for the campaign to open Friday when they met at the Y. M. C. A. building. In the front, left to right: Gus G. Heurlin, umpire; Harry T. Moyer, catcher; Sidney Antzak, batter, and Edward E. Kretschmer, pitcher. The fielders, left to right, are Fred Vincent, Ralph W. Olmstead, Mrs. Harry T. Moyer, and Charles H. Dreiske.

WHO'S WHO ON WEST SIDE

R. HAROLD ZOOK.

R. Harold Zook, Hinsdale architect and leader in civic affairs, has set his stamp on a good share of buildings in westeru suburbs. His latest contribution to his home town is a book plate for the Hinsdale Public library.

After his graduation from Armour institute Mr. Zook opened a Chicago office and has followed his profession for more than 25 years. Among his contributions are the Katherine Legge memorial in Hinsdale, Maine Township High school in Des Plaines, and the fieldhouse and outdoor theater to be erected on Burns field, Hinsdale.

Mr. Zook is identified with a number of Hinsdale organizations and holds membership in the Illinois chapter of the American Institute of Architects. He resides with Mrs. Zook at 157 South Oak street, Hinsdale.

SERVICE TO BE HELD TODAY FOR 5 DOMINICANS

A service this afternoon at St. Pius' Catholic church, 19th street and Ashland avenue, will celebrate the departure of five young Dominicans for the American mission field in China. In recognition of the service of four of the men in the world war, the bugle and drum corps and other members of the Lawndale-Crawford post of the American Legion will take part in the service scheduled to begin at 3:30 o'clock.

The youthful missionaries are the Rev. Celestine Rooney, the Rev. Arthur C. Tierney, the Rev. Martin Killian, Brother James Murphy, and Brother Jordan Warnock. The Very Rev. T. S. McDermott, a chaplain in France during the war and now provincial of the Domincan fathers, will preside at the service.

A colorful procession from the rectory of St. Pius, 1909 South Ashland avenue, to the main church building, will precede the serivce.

A speical departure hymn composed by the Rev. David O'Connor will be sung at the service. The address will be delivered by the Rev. Edward Hughes, editor of the Torch and director of American Dominican Chinese mission work. Arrangements for the exercises have been made by the Rev. William Marchant, pastor of St. Pius' church.

Marshall High Alumni Plan Annual Reunion

Plans are under way for the annual homecoming of the John Marshall High School Alumni association to be held some time in December. It is expected that the date will coincide with that of the formal dedication of the new high school building. Jewell Stevens is president of the organization; Mrs. Charlotte Goldstein, vice president; and Mrs. Mary Peele, secretary and treasurer.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, Oct. 12.

Rake up bare spots in the lawn, scratch with steel toothed rake, sow grass seed over it, and germination will quickly occur. A little commercial fertilizer will stimulate the young plants into vigorous growth and enable them to endure through the winter. If it is desired to keep root crops outdoors through the winter prepare the place now, before severe frosts. Carrots, late cabbage, beets (not too old and woody), potatoes, sweet potatoes, and turnips may be kept by this method.

Tuesday, Oct. 13.

Some of the early hardy chrysanthemums are bursting into bloom. A new yellow sort, known as Valerine, is a low growing variety attractive for Chicago and vicinity. Keep an eye open for varieties that come into early bloom because only the extremely early kinds can be depended on for a display. Continue to make cuttings of tender plants that have been growing outdoors. Pot a few plants, cutting back at the time of lifting.

Gladiolus that have ripened their leaves should be dug, the excessive soil removed, the corms dried for a few hours, and later placed in a cool, dry basement over winter. Save all bulbils of the rare kinds for future planting. Exchange with gardening friends.

Dahlias may be dug, or the tubers left in the ground until frost. Lift the tubers without breaking because they keep better. Cut off the stems a few inches above the ground before digging. Do not neglect labeling securely. Place a six inch layer of sand on the cellar floor, pack the tubers in layers, covering each layer with dry sand or peatmoss, and cover the top layer with a five or six inch layer.

Wednesday, Oct. 14.

Try a few of the bulbous iris in a sheltered and well drained situation, such as a rock garden. Pansies and violas may be propagated from cuttings at this time, an excellent method of preserving an outstanding variety. Remove the side shoots, with a few roots attached, if possible, and insert them firmly in sandy soil in a cold frame or box which may be placed in the frame. Cover the sash with boards during cold weather. Many other plants may be increased in this way. Plant narcissus bulbs for their effect in the perennial borders, or for naturalizing with shrubs or in the outlying sections of the grounds.

Thursday, Oct. 15.

Bring in the amaryllis from out of doors, gradually dry them off by reducing the supply of water from day to day, and store in a dry, cool place. They become active toward January, at which time they may be repotted. Many inquiries regarding the proper distance apart that street trees should be planted have been received. The elm, which is popular, should be used on wide streets, and planted 50 feet apart. Elms never attain their maximum beauty if planted close together. The hard maple is also a large growing tree and should be used on wide streets. Plant the ash and tree of heaven on narrow streets and 40 feet apart. Use one species along a street instead of a miscellaneous assortment with a different habit of growth. The box elder, poplar, catalpa, and willow must be sparingly used, or planted where nothing else will grow. They are short lived and easily injured by storms.

Friday, Oct. 16.

When planting hedges, and especially the privet, plant at least three to six inches deeper than the lowest branch of the plant. These plants root along the stems and deep planting makes a thicker hedge. When planting cut to within six inches of the ground to force the dormant buds into vigorous activity. Mulch after the ground freezes. Plant a pussy willow (salix caprea has the largest catkins) for a supply of bouquet material in early spring. The native species (salix discolor) has smaller flowers, but is very good. Quarter inch mesh wire will keep rabbits from injuring trees.

Saturday, Oct. 17.

Plant a few shrubs or low trees to attract birds. Useful plants for this purpose are the chokeberry, spicebush, Japanese barberry, cornelian cherry, some dogwoods, Morrow's honeysuckle, mulberry, smooth and staghorn sumac, elderberry, mountain ash, snowberry, Indian currant, snowball, vinurnum dentatum, lantana, lentago, prunifolium, and tomentosum. Wild grape twiggy shrubs form nesting places. Plant some hybrid lilacs to furnish a range of free flowering, tall shrubs, and in unusual colors.

SIGN 100 PLAYERS

One hundred men and women will open a world series membership drive for the Austin Y. M. C. A., 501 North Central avenue, Friday. As in the real world series, runs scored will decide the victors, runs in this series being memberships.

To compete with the depression in business membership terms have been made to fit almost every purse. They are graduated so that an initial payment in this series will count as a single and a fully paid membership a home run. Doubles and triples will also be scored, while failure to get on base will be an error.

Edward E. Kretschmer of 5821 West Walton street has been named the "commissioner." Fred L. Vincent is to impersonate Rogers Hornsby, and Ralph W. Olmstead, Connie Mack. Sidney Antzak, captain for the Yanks, while Harry T. Moyer will lead the Cardinals. Two other teams will have their records posted daily. The All-Stars will be captained by Tyrus C. Dreiske and Mrs. Moyer will lead a women's team. The series will continue ten days, with a dinner meeting each evening.

In addition to the regular men's and boys' work this winter at the Austin Y. M. C. A., there will be women's gymnasium and swimming classes. Mrs. Moyer's team will concentrate on adding members to these groups.

HINSDALE CLOSES GRADE CROSSINGS AFTER 4 DEATHS

Four deaths in railway crossing accidents at Hinsdale within two weeks caused the Hinsdale village board last week to order the closing of all village crossings of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad at night with the exception of those at Washington and Garfield streets, to be guarded 24 hours a day. The plan calls for the permanent closing of the Park avenue crossing. The decision was arrived at after a conference between Hinsdale and Burlington officials.

Thomas Paine post, No. 668, boasts the youngest American Legion post commander in Vincent J. Poklacki, now concluding his term. Commander Poklacki enlisted in the navy when he was 16 years and 3 months old, and served during the entire period of the war. He is now 30 years old.

The play, "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," will be presented by John F. Conley post, No. 221, at La Follette park on the nights of Nov. 19 and 20. The play is being directed by Past Commander Joseph V. Gibson, and the proceeds will go to the aid of unemployed and disabled veterans. The post has enrolled 14 new members since Aug. 1.

Civil Service post, No. 678, Frank Egan commander, has set aside space at its club rooms for the administrating of diphtheria preventive. The free service for children of preschool age is being conducted in conjunction with the Chicago health department and is under the supervision of a physician and a registered nurse. Miss Dorothy Fuller is president of the organization; Miss Irene Foster, vice president; Miss Celestia Henderson, secretary; and Miss Maybelle Dhus, treasurer.

Neighborhood Theaters

The West End theater will be opened today after a three months summer vacation with "Secrets of a Secretary" and "The Viking" as the double attraction.

Claudette Colbert stars in the first firm which bares the life of a social secretary. Claudette, as the secretary, has the job of untangling a mess of intriguing complicatons which crop up in the household of her wealthy employers.

"The Viking" is a picture of 10,000 sealers after 3,000,000 seals off Laborador and Newfoundland. The cast is headed by Capt. Bob Bartlett, who commanded the Morrissey on Rear Admiral Peary's trip to the north pole. Charles Starett and Louise Huntington are also in the cast.

Marbro Has Double Bill.

"Waterloo Bridge" and "Caught Plastered" join hands in a double bill at the Marbro theater this week. The first film is one of the best of recent pictures in Chicago. The story is of a youthful soldier of a fine family who falls in love with a street walker while on leave in London, and he stays in love even when he finds out what she is. It is gripping and well acted. Frederick Kerr supplies the necessary humor as the boy's uncle. Kent Douglass makes his part a living thing and Moe Clark turns in a sparkling performance. Adults only!

It's Wheeler and Woolsey reunited in "Caught Plastered." The stars sing and dance and crack jokes and have a lot of good, honest to goodness, clean fun. As for the story—they come to the aid of a dear old woman who is about to lose her drug store and go to the old ladies' home.

Jack Holt and Will Rogers.

Jack Holt always has a hard time of it in his pictures and "Fifty Fathoms Deep" is no exception. He and a boy played by Richard Cromwell of "Tol'able David" fame are divers in the employ of a salvage company. Jack has saved the lad's life and they are pals until the proverbial blond enters the picture.

This picture plays with "Young As You Feel" the first three days of this week at the Byrd theater. Will Rogers' fans see their favorite all dressed up for a change in the second film.

Huck Finn at Broadway Strand.

"Huckleberry Finn" and "Hell Bound" are the attractions at the Broadway Strand theater. All the youngsters of the movies, Jackie Searle, Jackie Coogan, Junior Durkin, and Mitzi Green have parts in this Mark Twain comedy.

Leo Carrillo makes "Hell Bound" one gangster picture in 100. As Nick Cotrelli, the beer baron, he is one of the most ingratiating figures you may hope to meet in a lifetime of cinema seekings. Lola Lane is the girl Carrillo loves.

Kennison D. A. R. Hostess to Mrs. Fannie H. Peffers

Mrs. Fannie Hopkins Peffers, state regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, was a special guest at a meeting of the David Kennison chapter Monday evening at the Austin Presbyterian church, Waller avenue and Fulton street. Mrs. Edward G. Snodgrass presided.

H. G. WELLS, ONCE FOE OF RADIO, TO MAKE U. S. BOW

Proves He's No Perfect Prognosticator.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

H. G. Wells is by no means the perfect prognosticator. No longer ago than 1927 he ran up against radio and found it useless. The famous historian of the future pictured the invisible audience bored to death while a maze of aerials cluttered up the housetops like wire entanglements on the fields of France. Mr. Wells then doubted that even the most ardent fan's enthusiasm could last more than two weeks, and thought that radio listeners must be "very sedentary persons living in badly lighted houses or otherwise unable to read."

H. G. WELLS.
[Kadel & Herbert.]

Since then Mr. Wells has got over his gloomy outlook and has been employing the ether waves to talk on "What I Would Do with the World." Next week he comes to New York and on Saturday evening he will speak over an NBC coast to coast net, including WENR.

Apparently no one gets homesick easier than a New Yorker abroad. As soon as Jimmy Walker hit the continent he was talking back over the radio. At 4 o'clock this afternoon Roxy is going to speak over NBC from Berlin.

The prince of Wales and John Masefield, poet laureate, will also be heard in international broadcasts this month. The prince is to speak at 2:45 p. m. Wednesday, Oct. 21, over CBS from London, and Masefield will discuss "Ships and Their Builders" at 2:30 the following afternoon on the same net.

When H. H. Rajput, Hindu graduate of Oxford and a former officer in the British intelligence service, came to Chicago to inaugurate his series of adventure stories based on war experiences he turned to the University of Chicago to get real Hindu music. He found there several students with native instruments, among them stringed affairs used in India for more than 2,000 years. Over the air they sound like flutes and other woodwinds.

James Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, dropped in to inspect the Hindu instruments, threw up his hands, and walked out.

Now that the nation's leading dance orchestras are playing college medleys nightly, MCA hastens to point out that 50 per cent of the nationally known orchestras attended college and that 70 per cent of the musicians employed in these orchestras are men of university training.

But not so many of them, possibly, are graduates. Nor does it make any difference.

Ferde Grofe presented a number Friday evening on the Whiteman hour memorializing the life of Knute Rockne. . . . Ernest Naftzger, the Something for Everyone man, has cracked 10,584 jokes over the air and has had his name misspelled 74 ways in fan mail. . . . Kate Smith has seen her fourth full moon come over the mountain from the Palace. . . . Red Cagle, the sometime pigskin carrier, has made his radio debut. . . . CBS is broadcasting football by television. It's the miniature scoreboard arrangement.

Art Jarrett, who has a style combining the lyric and downright, low-down jazz, will make his bow as a band leader over CBS at 2:30 tomorrow. . . . Harry Stuhldreher, once one of Notre Dame's famed Four Horsemen, will be heard over NBC at 6:15 tonight. . . . Bob Becker, TRIBUNE outdoor writer, and Cal Johnson start a series titled "Around the Campfire" for NBC at 8:45 tomorrow evening. . . . "Seth Parker" and his Jonesport neighbors are going to tour the nation. They will be in Chicago on Oct. 25 and 26 and will broadcast from local studios.

Song hits, fashions, sports, and historic events of the '60s are woven into a new radio series titled Musical Memories, to be heard over CBS beginning next Sunday at 5:30 p. m. . . . Of Cantor's many Cantor for President slogans, we prefer "Don't say can't; say Cantor." . . . Ten minutes after Ted Weems introduced his new "Since I Broke That Record" [you can hear the crack], fans who heard it over the air appeared at the Trianon to hear more. . . . From Russ Columbo, girls: "My ideal girl has to be intelligent, a good sport, and be possessed of an infinite sweetness."

SEIDEL TO PLAY KREISLER SONG FRIDAY EVENING

Toscha Seidel will play one of Fritz Kreisler's most popular compositions over Columbia from 9 to 9:45 next Friday evening.

The "Liebeslied," or Love's Song," is one of the most charming pieces of melodic writing in the whole violin repertoire, and illustrates Kreisler's genius equally as composer and interpreter.

Theo Karle, American tenor, will sing Liza Lehmann's famous song, "Ah, Moon of My Delight," and Sam Lanin's orchestra will be heard in special arrangements of some of the hit numbers from "Sally," as well as "I'm with You," from the Follies."

Alice Mock Will Sing Over W-G-N on Tuesday

"Mighty Lak a Rose" will be sung by Alice Mock, contralto, in the program over W-G-N at 8 Tuesday evening. The orchestra, under the direction of Adolphe Dumont, will present "Valencia," "Thousand and One Nights" and other selections.

FEATURE W-G-N PROGRAMS THIS WEEK

Elizabeth Lennox (left), contralto, who will be featured over W-G-N at 8:30 tomorrow evening. Donald Brian, who plays the male lead in Noel Coward's "Private Lives," will speak over W-G-N at 5:15 this afternoon, inaugurating the new "Fifth Row Center" program. Edith Taliaferro, the feminine star of "Private Lives, will also speak on the theater hour this afternoon.

CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA AGAIN TO BE HEARD ON AIR

13 Saturday Programs Planned.

Chicago's world famous Civic opera will again be broadcast this year to a nation of music lovers by NBC. This announcement was made yesterday by M. H. Aylesworth, president of the company.

The stirring music, pageantry and drama of the opera will be brought to the fireside of American homes, no matter whether in the crowded city or the lonely back woods settlement for the third successive year through the coöperation of the Civic Opera company and NBC.

Many New Presentations.

Under the new directorship of Herbert Witherspoon, famous in his own right as an opera star and as a director, the opera company will this year offer new presentations never before heard in this country and will also bring to radio listeners a host of new and brilliant singers gathered by Mr. Witherspoon from all parts of Europe during a scouting trip for talent last summer.

This year, instead of cutting into the middle of the opera as has been the custom in the past, the broadcast will run from 8 to 8:30 p. m., central standard time, each Saturday night, beginning Nov. 7, thus allowing the radio listener to hear the overture and entire first act of the performance.

13 Operas to Be Presented.

Further perfections in broadcasting technique are expected to be introduced in the broadcasts this year allowing music lovers to hear the music nearly as perfectly as though they were sitting in the best seats in the house. The new parabolic microphones, known as the "human ears" of radio, will be used.

In all 13 operas are expected to be presented during the season of 1931-'32 including old favorites and American premiers.

The Chicago Civic opera was the first grand opera in the world to be broadcast direct from the stage.

TAMARA TO BE FEATURED WITH RUDY AND BAND

A medley of old Russian songs and modern American tunes are to be presented by Tamara, youthful singer and stage star, when she makes her bow as the guest artist of Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees from 7 to 8 o'clock Thursday evening through W-G-N. While singing the Russian numbers Tamara will play her own accompaniment on the guitar. Tamara was born in Ukraine twenty-one years ago and came to the United States when she was 9 years old. Starting in her theatrical career at an early age, she has already been featured in such productions as Billy Rose's "Crazy Quilt" and Schwab and Mandel's "Free for All."

COLORATURA

LETIZIA LEITA.
[Moffett-Russell Photo.]

W-G-N will present Signorina Letizia Leita, European coloratura soprano, who has just arrived in this country, at 9:15 this evening.

Signorina Leita has been singing with unusual success in Italy, having made her debut in Milan at the Theatre Del Verme as Gilda in "Rigoletto" a year ago, and also appeared in the "Barber of Seville" and "Lucia De Lammermoor" at the same opera house.

Numbers on her program tonight are "Spirate pur, Spirate," by Daunandy; "Les Fillies de Cadiz," an old Italian melody by Delibis; "A Brown Bird Singing" by Wood; "Dawn Awakes," "Pirate Dreams," and "Polonaise Mignon."

Mrs. Herbert Hoover will christen the American Clipper, a new flying boat with a capacity of 45 passengers, at 1:30 tomorrow, the ceremony to be described over both networks.

The event will take place at the Anacosta naval air station in Washington, after which an initial flight will be made, when Mrs. Hoover will be flown over the capital city.

Announcers will also accompany the ship on its flight, and by means of portable sets will broadcast interesting sights which will be witnessed. By means of a special receiving apparatus located on the ground, the description from the plane will be passed out through the network.

Among the notables who will take part in the ceremonies will be Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, Congressman Will Wood, Clyde W. Kelly, known as the father of the air mail act; Crestes Ferrara, ambassador from Cuba, and J. T. Trippe, president of the Pan-American Airways.

5TH ROW CENTER PREMIER IS SET FOR 5:15 TODAY

Miss Taliaferro, Brian to Be Presented.

From the theater box office comes the title of W-G-N'S new Sunday theater review, "Fifth Row Center," which will have its premier presentation at 5:15 this afternoon with Edith Taliaferro and Donald Brian, the stars of Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," as its opening attraction.

"Fifth Row Center" is dedicated to the legitimate theater and will present each Sunday intimate chatter about some outstanding show appearing on the Chicago stage, and feature the personal appearance of some star in the production.

Starred as Child.

Edith Taliaferro has appeared in scores of plays in America, England, and Australia. She started her stage career when she was two and a half years old and had star rôles in "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" as a child.

Donald Brian, who supports Miss Taliaferro, has been a stage favorite for many years, his first Broadway appearance having been in "Florodora." Real success, however, did not come to him until the night "The Merry Widow" was unfurled to a wildly enthusiastic audience. Brian made a great hit in the rôle of Prince Danilo and a new star was made. In recent seasons he has appeared in "How's Your Health," "The Queen's Husband," "Candlelight," and the Players' club revival of "Becky Sharp."

Many Stars Presented.

In presenting "Fifth Row Center," W-G-N is enlarging its already successful policy of giving its radio audience stage stars of prominence. During the last year it has brought before the microphone such famous personages as Otis Skinner, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Grace George, De Wolf Hopper, Tom Powers, Oscar Shaw, Blanche Ring, and Lillian Kemble Cooper.

Among the stage attractions which W-G-N will have in future "Fifth Row Center" programs are: "The Silent Witness," "The Third Little Show," "Girl Crazy," "Crazy Quilt," "The Venetian," and "Surf."

Yank Taylor to Talk on Going to Press Hour

O. N. (Yank) Taylor, vice president of the Newspaper Radio Editors' association and radio editor of the Chicago Daily Times, will greet radio listeners over Columbia during Bill Schudt's "Going to Press" from 5 to 5:15 p. m. Wednesday.

MEASURE EXTENT OF "BLIND" ZONE IN INDIAN OCEAN

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON. — Investigations have been carried on regarding the "blind" zones between India and Africa, spreading over a vast area of the Indian ocean and the Arabian sea. It is now ascertained that the zone only extends over the sea and not inland and that it is more completely blind nearer the African coast than near the Indian coast line. The "vacuum" in ether becomes more pronounced in the evenings near the African coast and during midday near the Indian coast. The moon has extraordinary effect on the ether pockets, sometimes removing the blindness and at other times intensifying it. The pockets are very intensive near the Kenya colony, although they are fairly strong round about Somaliland.

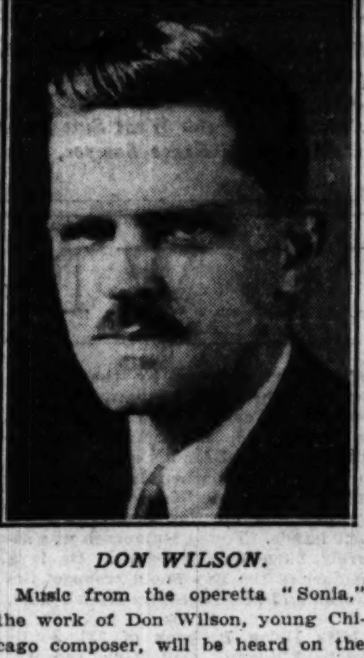
COMPOSER



DON WILSON.

Music from the operetta "Sonia," the work of Don Wilson, young Chicago composer, will be heard on the air for the first time from W-G-N at 9 o'clock Thursday night. The W-G-N symphony orchestra will play the overture and Lawrence Salerno, baritone, will sing the "Sonia Waltz," "Clinging Vine," and "Garden of Girls" numbers. "Sonia" is the third of Mr. Wilson's musical comedies to be heard on W-G-N, his "Purple Towers" and "Lucky Jade" having been dramatized for air presentations. Mr. Wilson is at work upon an Armistice day overture which will have its initial presentation on W-G-N.

GOOFUS MASTER

TED WEEMS.

Ted Weems, W-G-N orchestra leader, playing his own invention, the Goofus horn. It is said that there are only four men in the world that can operate the Goofus and the genial Ted is naturally one of the four. The Goofus is a cylindrical brass instrument about two feet in length with reeds inside. Air is forced in through a pliable rubber tube, approximately three feet in length. There are twenty-two stops. The sounds emanating are "weirdly unique," Weems maintains.

Beethoven Is Available for Disk Collector

"Pastoral" Shows the Lyric Side of Famous Composer's Nature.

By Edward Moore.

THANKS to Brunswick, there is some more Beethoven available for the disk collectors. In album 36, Hall of Fame-International, 90189 to 90194, inclusive, the State Opera orchestra of Berlin plays the sixth, or "Pastoral" symphony under the direction of Hans Pfitzner.

It is no small undertaking to put a complete symphony on the disks, but as one looks back at the accretions of perhaps only a few months, one begins to see the great service the recording companies have been doing in spreading symphonic music around the musical world. This symphony classifies as an important addition to the list. It is Beethoven's finest lyric expression in all the music he wrote for symphony orchestra, and it has received a recording, in a good many respects, worthy of it.

It shows pretty nearly everything Beethoven thought of on the lyric side of his nature: sustained song, poetic imagination, humor, happiness, tenderness, all that one would expect in lyric expression, except one. Rather peculiarly, in spite of his life in Vienna, he would seem to have been little affected by the grace of the aristocratic dance. When he dances in music he is square-toed, even wooden-shod, and it is the only deficiency in the spiritual makeup of one of the greatest composers who ever lived.

An Expression of Feeling.

By no means, the least element in the greatness of this work is Beethoven's refusal to build it as a naturalistic picture of nature. He named it "Pastoral," but he insisted it was to be more an expression of feeling than a tone picture. Other composers might well borrow his restraint.

Mr. Pfitzner knows his Beethoven and conducts the symphony well. The recording is almost as good. Eleven sides are taken up by the reproduction, the twelfth being turned over to another Beethoven work, but one almost never heard in this country. It is the adagio movement from the "Street Song" trio, opus 11, written for piano, clarinet, and cello, and played by M. Raucheisen, L. Kohl, and J. Disclez. The performance is faithful and industrious, rather than inspired, but it is correct, and it is a chance to hear one of Beethoven's less known but quite charming works.

Rethberg Sings for Victor.

Victor, in the classification called Victrola, presents the extraordinary beautiful voice of the famous operatic soprano, Elisabeth Rethberg, in two excerpts not of opera, but of operetta. The Czardas from Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" occupies one side and "Hab' ich nur deine Liebe" from Von Suppe's "Boccaccio," the other number of 7415. They are uncommonly pleasant tunes, and Mme. Rethberg sings them with the same charming loveliness she gives to her rôle in "The Bartered Bride," which is another way of saying that if she had not made a name for herself in the lofty heights of grand opera, she would have been an equally famous figure in the lighter lyric field.

In this connection, there is place for another mention of Richard Tauber, the German tenor, who is about to try his first conclusions on the concert stages of America. Columbia presents him in number G-4052-M with two songs, Leoncavallo's "Mattinata" and Toselli's "Serenade," both accompanied by the Dajos Bela concert orchestra.

These songs do not belong to operetta, but both of them should. In fact, it is a great surprise that they are not sung at least two or three times a night over the radio stations. They fasten themselves to the ear and memory, and stay there indefinitely. And once again there is reason to believe that Mr. Tauber is going to be a hit when he appears in the flesh.

FOUR SINGERS IN THE CAST OF "THE MAGIC FLUTE"

Alexander Kipnis, who will sing the role of Sarastro.

tied upon Miss Eadie, in which decision he agreed with Col. Blois, director of Covent Garden at London. For Miss Eadie sang the part at London and seems to have been well liked.

Another soprano, one of the queen's ladies in waiting, is likewise still to be chosen. Most of the rest of the cast made themselves favorably known in earlier performances. Mme. Leider and Mme. Olszewska have been here for several seasons. Mr. Marion has still to receive the verdict of Chicago audiences.

Talk About Masonry.

There is so much mysterious talk about the connection of "The Magic Flute" with Masonic orders that it is a bit difficult for one not a Mason to straighten out what it is all about. The work was written by Mozart for a carnival theater in Vienna at a time when there was much gossip about the attitude of the ruling classes toward the orders, especially the attitude of the empress, Maria Theresa. One not altogether respectful account tells of how a certain lodge was raided by the police one night under the empress' orders while meanwhile her husband, the emperor, made a quiet and unostentatious disappearance down the back stairs of the building where the meeting was being held.

It is supposed, though here I am subject to correction, that the character of Astroflammente symbolically represents Maria Theresa, that Tamino in the same manner represents the emperor, that Pamina is the Austrian people, Sarastro is a high minded Viennese, famous in his time and high in Masonry, and so on.

But however hidden the allusions to persons of the period may be, they are most historical from our point of view. Schikaneder, who wrote the book and sang the part of Papageno, was a good showman of his time, and he evolved a story which stands pretty well on its own merits, rather complicated, partly comic, partly serious, but still a tale that can be followed.

* *

Here Is the Story.

Here is the story, put in as few words as possible:

Prince Tamino, who has lost his way and been separated from his companions while in search of adventure, is saved from a huge serpent by three mysterious ladies who prove to be the waiting women of Astroflammente, Queen of the Night. The queen takes advantage of the situation to implore Tamino to save her daughter, whom the sage old priest, Sarastro, has taken from her by force. Tamino is given a picture of the girl, falls in love with the likeness, and is filled with an ardent desire to serve her. He is given as a companion in his undertaking one Papageno, a gay and rather witless bird catcher.

When Tamino reaches Sarastro's castle his bitter feelings toward the high priest are changed to those of friendship by the assurance of the priests that their leader had acted only in Pamina's best interests and that she lives and is in no danger. Tamino is told that if he successfully passes a series of trials Pamina shall be his.

Tamino and Pamina, convinced of the righteousness of Sarastro's decision, resist every temptation and pass every trial and finally, the Queen of the Night having been confounded in her plots of vengeance, the two are united in the blazing light of truth, while evil and falsehood vanish and sink back into the night.

First Symphony of Season.

With Miss Bertha Ott beginning her list of concerts with three attractions this afternoon, with several other events this afternoon and here and there during the week, with the Chicago Symphony orchestra beginning its regular season Thursday night and its popular series Saturday night, the concert season of 1931-'32 may be considered to be officially opened. There will be plenty of events before it is officially closed. What is to happen this week is itemized in another column of this newspaper.

The orchestra begins its forty-first season; Dr. Stock begins his twenty-seventh as conductor and his thirty-seventh as a member of the organization. There will be no soloist on the opening program, though a considerable number, the first beginning next week, will appear in the course of the season.

For the opening program, Thursday at 8:30 o'clock, Dr. Stock has decreed Wagner's "Rienzi" Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Ballet Suite, a first class program at any time of any season. For the popular program Saturday night there will be Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Overture; Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, Glazounow's "Ruses d'Amour" Ballet Suite, and Strauss' "Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes, another program of distinct merit.

Correcting an Error.

"Dear Mr. Moore: May I correct your statement in THE TRIBUNE anent Rachmaninoff's fourth concerto? Mlle. Gitta Gradova played it last season on the twenty-first program, March 6 and 7. [Editor's note: Quite right. It was a slip of memory. Beg your pardon.]

"Do you not feel that the soloistic 'racket,' if it may be termed such in view of the amazing preponderance of soloists over purely orchestral programs this season, is not slightly overworked? The old story of the British gallery god needs to be dusted off. As you doubtless remember, the Britisher went to an orchestral concert, at which a famous diva was to assist as soloist. The affair disintegrated into a song recital, with the orchestra as accompanist. After about half a dozen encores, the gallery god felt that the thing had progressed far enough.

"'O, shut up!' he yelled. 'I came to listen to the orchestra!'

"There are a number of gallery gods of that description in Chicago, of which number I am proud to be able to count myself. In my personal opinion, which may not count for much, Frederick Stock is a greater musician than all save a possible two or three of the array of soloists. If he is to 'go 'way back and sit down,' and his fine orchestra with him, while the sainted audiences rave over personality possessed of one-tenth the musicianship and artistry which he possesses, would it not be a worth while change in the policy of the orchestral association to suspend operations, and reincorporate as a concert course, or a syndicate of impresarios?

In that event they could have all their soloists. They could also maintain an orchestra; it would not necessarily need to be as fine as the one we have now, as its only function would be that of an accompanist for these same 'personalities.'

"MALCOLM J. YOUNG."

This department agrees thoroughly with Mr. Young's estimate of Dr. Stock. It is necessary to add, however, that the business management of the orchestra began to discover through the most unassailable evidence, that of the box office, that not enough of its patrons were like Mr. Young. In other words, patronage was falling off. That is the reason for the soloists this year, also for the change of time from Saturday to Thursday night.

Music Notes.

Miss Rachel Busey Kinsolving's Musical Mornings will begin in the Crystal ballroom of the Blackstone hotel on Thursday, Nov. 5, with a joint recital by Maria Olszewska, contralto of the Civic Opera company, and Mischa Levitzki, pianist. John Charles Thomas, Civic Opera baritone, and Janet Fairbank, Chicago soprano, will appear jointly on Dec. 19. The third program will be presented by Nina Koshetz, soprano, Gabriel Leonoff, tenor, and Vladimir Dubinsky, baritone. Mario Chamlee, tenor, and Jacques Gordon, violinist, will appear Dec. 29, and Juliet Lippe, soprano, and Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, Jan. 7.

The Joseffer String quartet, a new women's organization, Anna Thelma Joseffer, first violin; Eva Pokoloff, second violin; Sara Shatz, viola, and Lillian Pringle, cello, announces a series of six chamber music evenings on the Sundays of Nov. 8, Dec. 13, Jan. 10, Feb. 14, March 3, and April 10 at the Cordon club.

Beginning next Friday, Arthur Dunham will enter upon his eighth season of Tuesday and Friday noonday organ recitals at the Methodist temple. About sixty recitals will be given. Mr. Dunham's Sonata for organ and about twenty other works of recent composition will be played.

Among the coming musical events will be a song recital by Yvonne Gall on Nov. 1. A similar appearance by her a year ago was one of the artistic successes of the season. Having sung at Ravinia in opera during the summer, she is now on the Pacific coast appearing with the San Francisco and Los Angeles companies. After leaving here she will return to Paris to sing in both of the opera companies of that city, also in Lille, Lyons, and Bordeaux.

When the Civic Opera company opens it doors Nov. 2 with "Tosca," the Metropolitan Opera company in New York will likewise greet its patrons, but with "La Traviata," balancing the cast of Rosa Ponselle, Giacomo Lauri-Volpi, and Giuseppe de Luca against Chicago's Claudia Muzio, Jan Kiepura, and Vanni-Marcoux. Early in the first week the Metropolitan will give the first American performance of Weinberger's "Schwanda, the Bagpipe Player," a work that would seem to have a number of good reasons in its score for being heard.

The Swift & Co. Male chorus has begun rehearsals for the 1931-'32 season under the direction of D. A. Clippinger, its conductor for fourteen years. The association's annual concert will be given at Orchestra hall March 1, with Florence Austral, soprano, as soloist. In addition it will appear in a sacred program at the University of Chicago April 10, and at other times before the Civic Music association at South Bend and for the benefit of the Lake Bluff orphanage at Lake Forest.

Four Horsemen Gallop Over Movie Screen

By Mae Tinee.

that here and there goes up the works. You'll recognize it.

Of the love angle, or, as the press representatives call it, "the woman's angle," there is little—and that's a refreshing omission in a movie of this kind. There's too much of a jittery ingénue in one of the first reels, but such as you see of a budding romance between Sally Blane and Lew Ayres is wholesome and satisfactory. Mr. Ayres plays a high school punk who enters Notre Dame and becomes a mighty football man.

Such faults as this movie has lie in story and direction. But I think you may forget the former, or, if not, still enjoy "The Spirit of Notre Dame" from the sports angle and because of the incentive behind the production.

Bits aBOUTem.

DID YOU LIKE what you DIDN'T EXPECT? Don't forget we're playing the game again this month. Send in YOUR list of October's Six Best photoplays, having it in this office by Nov. 3. Write your name and address plainly on the sheet that bears the list. . . . VIRGINIA SALE, sister of "Chic," has been signed up for "Peach o' Reno." Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, and Dorothy Lee are featured. . . . DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR.'S next starring vehicle will be "Union Depot." . . . Speaking of the FAIRBANKSES — ROBERT SHERWOOD wrote in part of them in his New York column:

"You will hear numerous, varied rumors concerning the future prospects, personal as well as professional, of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. For one thing, there is the ominous report, recurrent in Hollywood, that the Royal Family of the Screen is about to break up — that after more than twelve years of veritably fabulous domestic bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have decided to go their separate ways, she to her church, he to his.

"You will also hear that they are about to make another picture together, that they are not going to make another picture together, but are now embarked on individual enterprises, that they have definitely retired from the films and will never appear before the public in professional capacities again.

"Needless to say, I am not privy to the inner secrets of the Fairbanks menage; but after two months of reasonably close observation of this conspicuous family in Hollywood I have come to the conclusion that there are no secrets worth mentioning. Mary and Doug have just about as much chance of keeping dark their private lives as has the statue of Civic Virtue in City Hall park, New York.

"For Mary and Doug, for all their outward grace and regal mien, were and are terribly, painfully self-conscious. Their exaggerated eminence frightened and appalled them. They clung to each other exactly as two soldiers will cling to each other when they find themselves in the same exposed shell hole during a heavy bombardment.

"Now the extraordinary circumstances of their lives have changed. The lofty pedestal on which they were precariously perched has vanished. Their reign as monarchs of the movies has ended, and they know it—and if there is one thing markedly noticeable in their manner at the present time it is in an overpowering sense of relief.

"It is inevitable that the relaxation of the strain under which both have lived should cause some form of change in the almost incredible relationship that has existed between them. But I think I can safely assure you that you are entitled to laugh in the face of any one who announces that Mary and Doug are going to be divorced.

"The habits of interdependence that they have formed in the past twelve years are far too firmly established to be shattered. Either would be hopelessly and helplessly lost without the other.

"For all I know, thunder and lightning may separate tomorrow. So may storm and strife, hither and yon, light wines and beer, corned beef and cabbage, give and take, and even Amos 'n' Andy. But I'll bet my all that Mary and Doug will stick together."

American Soprano Opens Rhythmic Season in Gotham

By Joan King.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—If other solo recitalists follow the example of Frances Sebel, New York's musical entertainment of 1931-'32 will depart from the trodden paths to embark upon a course both novel and refreshing. To Frances Sebel, American soprano, and native of Cincinnati, went the honor of acting as official inaugurator of the new rhythmic season here, Oct. 4, at Carnegie hall. Miss Sebel made excellent use of this auspicious opportunity by paying honor to her contemporaries. She chose only one number for her program from the well worn library. This was Mendelssohn's "Infelice, Gia dal mio sguardo," with which she opened the evening.

The audience, which was encouragingly large for so early in a new year, was greatly pleased with Miss Sebel's selections. Her second group included a number of novel Spanish songs, "El Vito," my Nin; "Nana," by De Falla; "El Tumba y le," and "La Mosa y los Calvos," by Obradors, and "Los Dos Miedos" and "Las Locas Por Amor," by Turina. The Obradors numbers were sung for the first time here on this occasion and were especially well liked by the audience.

Offered First Performance.

Miss Sebel, who demonstrated her musicianship and feeling for the intent of the composer regardless of his nationality throughout the evening, offered a first performance in her third group. This was Mana-Zucca's air to athene from "Hypatia," still in manuscript, and described in program notes as "a grand opera in English based on Charles Kingsley's story." Strauss' "Mein Herz ist Stumm and Nichts"; Weingartner's "Liebesfeier," "Nelken," and "Plauderwaesche"; Blech's "Eine Kleine Geige," "Strampelchen," "Tintenheins und Plaetscherlottchen," and Hughes' "Jack and Jill" and "Hey Diddle, Diddle" concluded the written list.

In accordance with its custom since the organization was founded in 1928, the Schubert Memorial, Inc., held its annual auditions for candidates for its sponsorship here recently. Twenty-five musicians from eleven states were heard in earlier auditions; in September, all of these having met the entrance requirements, and four were selected for the recent hearing. But the judges, who included Richard Aldrich, Howard Brockway, Fritz Reiner, Nikolai Sokoloff, Sigismond Stojowski, and Willem Willeke, finally decided to make no award for this year. The Schubert Memorial has, thus far, presented nine young Americans in New York concerts. These have been Sadah Schuchari and Ruth Posselt, violinists; Muriel Kerr, Isabelle Yalkowski, and Sascha Gorodnitzki, pianists; Phyllis Kraeuter and Olga Zundel, cellists; Flora Collins, soprano, and Graham Harris, conductor.

To Introduce New Works.

When the Viennese conductor, Erich Kleiber, returned recently from Europe to open the season of the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, which he will direct for the first six weeks this year, he announced a number of new works which he intends to introduce during his stay. These include two compositions to be heard here for the first time by American composers, "The Pagan Symphony," by the late Henry Joslyn, and a rhapsody by Wallingford Riegger. He will also introduce new works by two European composers, Krenek's "Variations for Orchestra" and Weinberger's "Passacaglia," for large orchestra and organ, composed especially for its New York première and dedicated to Mr. Kleiber. Mr. Kleiber will also introduce extracts from Telemann's "Tafelmusik"; three symphonic dances of Reznicek; three extracts from the lyric suite of Alban Berg, arranged for string orchestra; Ravel's Minuet Antique, and the Kleine theater suite of Toch.

Remo Bolognini, well known to Chicago's orchestral audiences by reason of his years as assistant concert master of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, has just been awarded the post of assistant to Mishel Piastro, concert master of the New York Philharmonic. Bolognini is the second Chicago musician to attain important position with the New York orchestra, Alfred Wallenstein having taken the chair of head of the 'cello section two years ago.

Since 1929, when Bolognini left the Chicago orchestra to return to Europe to coach in repertoire with Eugene Ysaye, he has been engaged either in studying or recital giving. He was one of Ysaye's two pupils, the other being Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, during the last days before the Maestro's death. Last season he played in recitals with much success in London, Brussels, Berlin, Cologne, The Hague, Amsterdam, and Paris, also visiting this country for two months. He plays the famous "Baron Vitta" Guarnerius, dated 1730.

Carolina Author

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Paul Green, the university instructor who recently flashed into fame as a playwright, has turned his back on Broadway and returned to North Carolina, where his fame is that of a champion cotton picker.

Three days on the rialto were enough for the author of "The House of Connelly." He spent one of them in the theater and the others in a small room of an obscure hotel.

"I've a lot more work to do," he said, "and I'd rather do it on my little farm, where it is quiet and peaceful."

A part of that work will be the completion of "Potter's Field," his fourth play.

"Mr. Paul," as his southern neighbors call him, is an instructor of philosophy in the University of North Carolina. He has the heavy hands of a toiler. He is proud of the fact that the first prize he ever won was as the best cotton picker in a North Carolina county competition.

GREASY HAIR FROM—

LAZY GLANDS

Hair that is full of grease and has an odor is due to a gland disorder. Soap and water won't help. Face the truth about your hair and scalp!

When the scalp oozes oil from every pore, the glands are wasting nourishment and need attention. Stimulate those lazy glands and all that grease and scale will go. And watch what happens to the hair itself, when properly nourished!

Gland stimulation gives hair new life and new color. You won't have any streaks to "touch up" or gray locks to hide. Pigmentation will slowly but surely revive the natural color of any hair not completely and permanently gray.

Start stimulation of those lazy glands tonight! The way to wake them is by massage. Use your fingertips, dipped in Danderine. The Danderine will cut through the pore filth and get at the gummed glands. One treatment will dissolve every particle of dandruff. The first week will give you a healthy, wholesome scalp. But keep the treatments up until the very feel of your hair tells you it is in perfect condition.

You can get Danderine at any drugstore. It is a marvelous medicine for sick scalps.

WATCH YOUR GLANDS!

WHEN Lazy glands won't open, the hair is starved and faded.

WHEN lazy glands don't close, scalp is fouled by secretions.

ANY dandruff is a sign the hair glands need stimulating.

October Stirs Stage Season to Full Bloom

Aisle-Seat Impressions in Aftermath of Six Indian Summer Shows.

By Charles Collins.

ury, and some faint glimmering of intelligence in regard to the period in which its story has been placed is required of the playgoer.

The Italian Renaissance is the scene for "The Venetian." It corresponds to the Elizabethan period in England; and it implies, so far as the stage is concerned, a large amount of base conduct, frequent back-stabbings and wine poisonings, and a bustling activity in artistic, intellectual and political affairs. In other words, it is an excellent background for a romantic play—a time of hot passions and gay pageantry in which every one burned the candle at both ends and had a high old time.

This play, handsomely staged by Maurice Browne, is a satisfactory treatment of its material from a modern point of view. It avoids the sawdust theatricalism which curses costume drama. Its characters are thoroughly alive, and they speak a forthright, lucid English which is as frank, at times, as the talk of comedians in a bawdy Broadway revue. If romance with historical trimmings is ever to make a fresh start on the American stage, it will be with plays like "The Venetian."

Romantic Acting.

But if you remain cold to the fascinations of the flamboyant years when the city of Florence was preparing itself as an objective point for future generations of American tourists, you will certainly respond to the acting of Margaret Rawlings as the alluring Bianca, and Wilfrid Walter as her princely paramour. Here are players of high skill and personalities of winning address. Miss Rawlings I have tagged as a little, unsentimentalized Jane Cowl. Mr. Walter has the gifts for leadership in robust romantic rôles.

When the accidental closing of a door caused a change in the destiny of "The Venetian's" heroine, I found myself skeptical about the existence of spring locks at the time of the Italian Renaissance. The author of this play may be an authority on antique door-locks, but I shall demand confirmation from the Chicago Museum of Industry before I believe in this episode.

Showboat Ahoy!

This column's outcry for showboats last summer seems to have started something. Ralph T. Kettering, manager of the Adelphi theater, says that he is rebuilding an ancient hulk, discovered in the shipyards of Sheboygan, and hopes to have a floating theater of 1,500 in the Chicago river before winter sets in.

Commodore Billy Bryant, now showboating in Cincinnati, is preparing to bring his company here to show us how his dock-end troupe can play Shakespeare. Instigated by George E. Wintz, known as "the king of the one-night stands," he hopes to secure a Chicago theater and turn his crew loose in it.

The showboat atmosphere, aside from the rough-and-ready acting, will be supplied by decorations in the lobby. There are at least three theaters available for this adventure—the Civic, the Princess, and the Cort. Rialto gossips are naming the Civic as the place where Commodore Bryant will hoist his ensign—possibly because that playhouse is on the river front.

New Plays for Gotham Stage; Five Openings

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Broadway will see five premières next week, including three dramas and two musical shows. Here are the announcements:

"Church Mouse"—Opens tomorrow night at the Playhouse. A comedy from the Hungarian which has been extensively produced abroad. William A. Brady is bringing forth the adaptation by the Hattons of the Paul Frank-Laszlo Fodor original. In the leading rôles will be Ruth Gordon and Bert Lytle.

"Lean Harvest"—Opens Tuesday night at the Forrest. A play by Ronald Jeans which ran during the summer in London. Leslie Banks and Nigel Bruce will be in the cast along with Vera Allen, Leonard Mudie, Patricia Calvert, Charles Esdale, and Molly Pearson.

"Everybody's Welcome" — Opens Tuesday night at the Shubert. The season's first musical comedy from the Shubert workshops. Harold Atteridge has prepared the libretto, Sam Fain the music, and Irving Kahal the lyrics. The players will include Frances Williams, Oscar Shaw, Harriette Lake, and Ann Pennington.

"Pillars of Society" — Opens Wednesday night at the 48th Street. The Ibsen play is the second production of Laurence Langner's repertory group. Among the actors will be Moffat Johnston, Armina Marshall, Dorothy Gish, Rollo Peters, Romney Brent, Fania Marinoff, Edgar Stehli, Jessie Busley, and Knowles Entrikin.

"The Cat and the Fiddle"—Opens Thursday night at the Globe. A romantic musical show by Jerome Kern and Otto Harbach. The large company will include Georges Metaxa, Bettina Hall, Eddie Foy Jr., Lawrence Grossmith, Dorothy Debenham, George F. Meader, Doris Carson, Odette Myrtil, and Jose Ruben.

Unknown Warrior

MAURICE BROWNE will appear in his London success, "The Unknown Warrior," at the Selwyn theater in four matinée performances, starting Sunday, Nov. 8 and closing the afternoon of Armistice day. Rosalinde Fuller is coming from London to play her original part. The play is from the pen of M. Paul Raynal.

After this engagement Mr. Browne will make an eight weeks' tour in "The Unknown Warrior" under the management of James B. Pond.

STAR IN "PRIVATE LIVES"

EDITH TALIAFERRO.

SHE has been leading ingenue and star of dozens of plays, of which "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" are the most easily remembered. Now, as a full blown, fascinating woman of the world, she co-stars with Donald Brian in Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," at the Erlanger theater.

Eugene O'Neill Ends Ten Year Solitude Hunt

Finds Content and Rest from City's Turmoil in Skyscraper.

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Eugene O'Neill has ended a ten year search for solitude. This isolation he has found in a luxurious apartment high above Park avenue's noisy taxicabs and hurrying throngs.

It is an ironic paradox that O'Neill should discover this escape from the crowds where he could work in peace right in the heart of the city.

He experimented with a half dozen other environments before he was won over as a hermit in the metropolis.

Lived in Lighthouse.

His first workshop was in a lonely lighthouse on the seacoast at Provincetown, Mass. Then he took a cottage amid the quiet of Bermuda, and from there slipped away to Shanghai, where he hoped to remain incognito.

Finally, he moved into an out-of-the-way chateau in Tours, France and stayed there for two years. He became weary of the place, and returned last summer with the announced intention of living on a plantation in Virginia.

He came to New York first, and fell in love once again with his old home town. He walked along the waterfront streets where, as a youth, he had mingled with sailors in the old-time saloons. He visited the old haunts he had frequented with his father, when the latter was a star in "Monte Cristo."

* *

Found City Best.

For ten years, O'Neill, weary of his wanderings, has been seeking a haven where he could settle down and work. And, like the prodigal son, he has returned home to find what he sought here in the city.

"I'm glad I spent those years abroad because it gave me a new perspective on my country and its people," he explained. "I think any writer must live abroad to get a true objective view of his native scene."

New Lady Teazle

ETHEL BARRYMORE will come to the Grand Opera House Oct. 19 in her revival of "The School for Scandal," in which she has just completed a tour of the Pacific coast and the northwest. She first acted the rôle of Lady Teazle in 1924 to the Sir Peter of her late uncle, John Drew, in a week's revival of Sheridan's comedy by the Players' club of New York.

This will be the first Chicago performances of the classic since Mrs. Insull's revival in June of 1925 in the Illinois theater.

Miss Barrymore is the third member of her family in direct descent to act Lady Teazle. Her grandmother, Mrs. John Drew, was a famed Lady Teazle, while it was the rôle in which her mother, Georgia Drew Barrymore, made her first appearance as the leading woman of Mrs. Drew's company in Philadelphia. Maurice Barrymore, Miss Barrymore's father, played not fewer than six rôles in "The School for Scandal" in his younger days on the English stage, while John Drew was a matinée idol forty years ago vis-à-vis with Ada Rehan and got his vogue largely on his performance as Charles Surface.

Miss Barrymore's company includes Walter Gilbert as Charles, McKay Morris as Joseph, C. H. Croker-King as Sir Peter, Herry Plimmer as Sir Oliver, A. G. Andrews as Moses, and Beatrice Terry as Mrs. Candour.

The engagement will be for two weeks, after which Miss Barrymore will take the play into New York.

Miss Cornell Wants to Act Roman Matron

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Katharine Cornell, who has become one of Broadway's foremost acting managers in her first year as a producer, already is planning her new play for next season. It is to be "The Rape of Lucrece," a French dramatization based upon Shakespeare's poem.

Miss Cornell sailed this week for a month's vacation in Bermuda. She will return Nov. 16 to reopen in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." This story of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's romance has been one of New York's leading hits since it opened last February, and its popularity forecasts that it will remain on Broadway all winter.

Miss Cornell's rôle requires her to be upon the stage every moment from the time the first curtain rises until a few seconds before the end. She found the task exhausting and decided upon a six weeks' rest.

Although there was no extraordinary success among the new plays of the past week, several of them offer diverting evenings. "Payment Deferred" is an English murder melodrama of novel aspects. In addition to its unusual plot it is distinguished by the performance of Charles Laughton from London.

"The Good Companions," another English importation, is a gigantic picturesque show of character parts. It is a dramatization of J. B. Priestley's novel. Elmer Rice, who revealed a panorama of New York life in his "Street Scene," does the same for Paris in "Left Bank." In this drama he chides the American expatriates who prefer a French Bohemia to the comforts of their native land.

"Cherries Are Ripe," which has been headed for Broadway for more than a year, again has been sidetracked. This is the Anita Loos and John Emerson comedy which was given on tour all last year by Rod La Rocque and Vilma Banky.

Several weeks ago these two were replaced by Basil Sydney and Mary Ellis, but a manager, Arch Selwyn, still was not satisfied with his cast. So the comedy has been temporarily withdrawn and will be brought forth later with two other stars.

Elmer Rice has already written a new drama called "Counsellor-at-Law," and it will have Paul Muni in the lead. . . . Jed Harris opens his season with "Wonder Boy," another satire on movie producers. Hazel Dawn is to be the star. . . . Nikita Balieff of "Chauve Souris" is back to stage a new show on Broadway.

In Classics

VIOLA ROACHE of the Chicago Civic Shakespeare society's company, began her career with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in London. Following several tours with Sir Charles Wyndham, she accepted an engagement in Johannesburg, South Africa, where she played in "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," "As You like It," "Twelfth Night," and "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

As leading woman at the Copley theater in Boston she was seen in the plays of Shaw, Galsworthy, Milne, Barrie, and Shakespeare. A season with Milton Rosner in England followed, after which she returned to America for an engagement in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," with Ina Claire, and "The Woman Disputed," with Lowell Sherman and Ann Harding.

She has also appeared in many films for the M. G. M. and Paramount firms.

Travel Talk.

"France and the Colonial Exposition," first of the new series of E. M. Newman's travel talks, will be given at Orchestra hall next Wednesday and Friday evenings and Saturday afternoon.

Noel Coward's Plays Popular; B'way Gossip

"Improper Duchess," with Irene Bordoni as Star, to Be Withdrawn.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The prevalence of Noel Coward's works on the American stage—he wrote "Private Lives," you may remember, and some of the numbers in "The Third Little Show"—arouses interest in a project to revive his comedy called "Hay Fever." Constance Collier will have the rôle that Laura Hopes Crews acted at Maxine Elliott's theater several years ago. The most recent staging of "Hay Fever" was by the Goodman repertory theater of Chicago last winter, with Margaret Wycherly as the featured player.

Maurice Browne's production of "The Improper Duchess," by Bernard Fagan, will have only a brief life on the American stage, although it was a sizable hit in London. It will be offered next week in Hartford and Providence, but will go no farther. It was intended for the Shubert circuit of subscription theaters, including Chicago. Irene Bordoni has the leading rôle.

Sidney Howard's new play, called "Yellow Jacket," deals with the efforts to eradicate yellow fever from the Caribbean ports which followed the Spanish-American war. It derives, more or less, from a chapter of Paul De Kruif's interesting book called "Microbe Hunters." Arthur Hopkins has a lien on "Yellow Jacket."

"A Modern Virgin" closes its tour in Detroit tonight. Roger Pryor and Margaret Sullavan are probable members of the cast of "Blessed Event," a comedy that the Shuberts now have on their shelves.

Florence Nightingale, whose name will always be associated with women's relief work for armies in the field—she started in the Crimean war—will be the heroine of a play called "The Lady with a Lamp." Leslie Banks, the English actor now in "Lean Harvest," will stage the play for Managers McGowan and Reed, and Edith Evans will come from London to play the famous nurse. Rehearsals will begin Oct. 21. Reginald Berkeley is the author.

Queenie Smith's new operetta will be called "The Little Racketeer." It comes from the German stage, where it bore the same title—a fact which suggests that Berlin has gone in for rackets. Paul Ash and his band will figure in the entertainment.

An English actress rejoicing in the name of Lady George Cholmondoley will soon begin a Canadian tour in a series of plays and dance programs. Galsworthy's "The Silver Box" is on her list. The dance programs will include something called "a play by Rabelais."

Helen Hayes has returned to New York from Hollywood to begin rehearsals for Molnar's "The Good Fairy," which Gilbert Miller will stage. The first performance will be given in Washington Nov. 9, and a week in Pittsburgh will follow.

Irving Berlin and Moss Hart are writing a musical show which will employ a revolving stage and other elaborate mechanical devices. If nothing happens it will appear in New York before the Christmas holidays. The boys haven't agreed upon a title as yet. . . . Frank Craven has written a new play, variously described as a melodrama and a dramatic comedy. John Golden will produce it.

Adopted Child Has Easy Life in Hollywood

Fortunate Waifs Given Every Advantage in Film Star's Home.

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—All Hollywood people are not the carefree selfish egotists that one might think. The same instinct for a hearthstone with happy children's faces exists in the film capital that exists anywhere else in the world. In addition to the children born in Hollywood homes, there are many happy little folks who have been adopted by film stars when an eccentric stork refused to favor the family chimney.

This last year several charming children have been lucky enough to enter film homes where they were eagerly awaited. The most recent adoption was that of little Patricia Hamilton by a new papa and mama, Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hamilton. Patricia was seven weeks old when she was brought to her new home. Next year the Hamiltons plan to find a brother for Patricia.

Before that it was Harold Lloyd and his wife, Mildred, who, tired of the dilatory long legged bird, went out and found a lovely little girl, Peggy, as a playmate for Mildred Gloria. It brought good luck, for not many months later Mr. Stork hustled along with a baby brother, and now the Lloyds have three shining little faces about the table.

Brother for Little Gloria.

Gloria Swanson adopted a little brother for her daughter, Gloria; and Joseph at two became part of the Swanson household when Gloria II. was about four. Gloria did not believe that one child would be happy alone, and chose a boy because she loves the romping play the little fellow brings to the home.

Cecil de Mille has a whole family of adopted children in his home in addition to his own child. From the eldest to the youngest, love and care and advantages have been shared equally, and a family circle of youth and gayety and childish problems and serious character building welcome home the famous director when his day's work is done.

De Mille forbids the word "adopted" in reference to his children as he feels them too close to his heart to use any word suggesting that they are not wholly his.

Zasu Pitts has the small son left by Barbara Lamarr, whom she is raising with her own little girl. Barbara had adopted the little fellow herself when she lost her heart to him when she visited an orphanage in Texas.

Lead a Royal Life.

Mary Pickford long ago adopted her niece Gwendolyn, the daughter of her sister, Lottie. Wyn is Mary's constant companion and enjoys the sort of a room at Pickfair that most girls only dream of. At present, she is away at school.

Constance Bennett is the proud foster mother of a little four year old son, whom she brought back from one of her European trips. Peter is the constant playmate of little Adrienne Fox, sister Joan's baby by Joan's former husband.

Then there is Philippe de Lacey, the child-actor. His foster mother, Edith de Lacey, a nurse in France during the war, found the little orphaned fellow and brought him to America with her.

Polly Moran boasts a little son, also adopted. Of Italian ancestry, John Michael is Polly's joy and pride, and all the M-G-M lot rings with the tales Polly tells of his achievements at the military school which he attends.

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuri Aoki, last August adopted a little American-Japanese boy from a poor mother in Los Angeles' "Little Tokio." They will take the tot back to Japan with them and rear him there as a true son of the rising sun with all the advantages in Japanese life.

Conway Tearle Is Back.

Conway Tearle, who left Hollywood in a huff a couple of years ago, claiming he was being boycotted because he refused a salary cut, is back again and will play a prominent role in "The False Madonna." Kay Francis and William Boyd are the leads in the story.

Herbert Somborn [Mr. Gloria Swanson II.] has opened a fourth Brown Derby restaurant in Beverly Hills, and is doing well with it.

Gilbert Roland, formerly leading man for Norma Talmadge, is playing in a local stage production of "Camille," with Jane Cowl. It is his first stage experience, and he says it fussed him more than facing crowds as a bull fighter in Mexico in his boyhood days. He comes from a family noted for several generations for its matadors.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

United States Misrepresented.

Dear Miss Tinée: Despite the fact that I cannot allow myself the time to sit to write such a letter as this, I feel that what I should like to tell you needs telling so much that other things will have to wait.

I have noticed from time to time your kindly reviews of the German movies here, and when one considers that you admit ignorance of the language you are surprisingly tolerant and fair. I cannot believe that what the Germans are sending us is the best of what they can do, for most of the German talkies I have seen and heard were not one step above most of the mediocre ones concocted in Hollywood.

But all this does not get me to the point. A German talkie now current in Chicago, under the title of "Zwei Kravatten" (A Pair of Neckties), is thus far one of the most maudlin, the most stupid, the most imbecilic and the most effusively sentimental mush that has ever been grafted on a gullible public. Anything more emotionally silly has never been seen. It transcends in actual childish impossibility anything the most heroic in Hollywood have ever done. The scenes which the picture intends to be of the United States are, perhaps, the most impossible of all.

Imagine a wealthy home in America, such as the one presented in the picture, with a hundred or so servants in gaudy livery; the hostess and her dressing room with the thousand electric lights, which reminded one of nothing more than a lighting fixture store. Also, notice how the dining room table is set: the girls seated around in a circle with their legs bared up to the hips; the two American women bidding for the hand of the handsome German, one offering him twenty million and the other thirty million dollars.

Then, the absolutely impossible incident of the German girl suddenly inheriting forty million dollars. There is a lot more, equally silly. And the fact that there was a bit of good singing does not excuse the picture.

J. E. LORING.

Editor's note: I take it you didn't care for "Zwei Kravatten."

Terse Comment.

Dear madam: "A Free Soul"—a great picture, great swill. Things equal to the same thing are equal to each other. O. P. BUCHOLZ.

Editor's Note: Gratefully yours—!

Ways that Mystify.

Dear Mae Tinée: For years the critics have said it in print and the public has said it with admission tickets, yet the producers go merrily on. So do not think that I expect this private protest to avail, but it may relieve my mind.

Some time ago Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote a story of Wyoming called "Lost Ecstasy," told with the tenderness of one who knows and loves that country. Our own haunt is not far from the ranch where she spends her summers. So, when we saw the story released under the title of "I Take This Woman," we made a special trip down to see the film. We were prepared to spend a happily miserable evening viewing the familiar beloved panorama of the range, the corrals, bunkhouse, and the little lonely cabins on the high plains.

Well, we were miserable, all right, without any qualifications. Doubtless we should have been warned by the change in title and by your faint praise. For it had not one thing in common with the book except the names of the principal characters; the minor ones were wholly omitted from the film. Not one incident remained unchanged.

The worst was first—the explanation of Kay's presence on the ranch. A worse miscast for the part could not be imagined. This jazz baby could never have portrayed the steadfast Kay of the story, and doubtless this hideous change was made to fit her personality. Gary acted as if he were ashamed to play the part of Tom, yet had the original been reproduced he would have been ideal.

The whole thing was so astounding that we searched for an explanation and found one. With economy in keeping with the times, they bought the story, used the names of the characters for this atrocity. Later they expect to produce the plot under the title of "Lost Ecstasy" and thus get double value. But here are two people who will not be there to see it. In fact, we have not attended a movie since. TENSLEEP.

Editor's Note: For ways that are dark the heathen Chinee has little on the movie producer. (Sometimes.)

Likes "The Last Flight."

Dear Miss Tinée: I saw the picture "The Last Flight" and thought it delightful and touching, and this morning read your review of it, which expresses my reaction so perfectly I wanted to thank you. You have put into words just what I felt about the picture and think Helen Chandler was, as you say, "intuitive" in her rendition of the whimsical, gay but unsmiling Nikki.

I am sending this appreciation because from remarks made by several persons who sat near me in the audience that "it was the worst show they had ever seen," I have no doubt you will receive plenty of knocks from the undiscerning persons who are not the kind that would understand and value the underlying quality you describe so neatly as "vague, eerie, Alice in Wonderland-ish."

Here is one who was moved and charmed beyond measure, and I am sure there are many more who will likewise love this film, but may not tell you so. Sincerely, MARY CULP.

Editor's Note: It was a lovely picture, wasn't it! You were thoughtful to write.

A Kindly Letter.

Dear Miss Tinée: I'm right behind you when it comes to giving Lowell Sherman a big hand. I have my favorite screen actors and actresses who play excellently, but I'd walk across the city, if necessary, to see Lowell Sherman on the screen. I hardly know what it is, the play does not have to boast much of a plot, the dialogue can be as dull reading as so and so's expedition in the Far East, but when the curtain goes up and Sherman takes the center of the stage it's sure to be the best show in town.

He looks like a million dollars in his clothes, he has an A-1 stage presence, and when he speaks, no matter how dull and ordinary the lines, he puts them over with a bang; everything is done smoothly, well turned, polished, an eyebrow lifted here, a shrug of the shoulders, a wink, all done with a finesse and the perfection of a fine actor.

There, thank you for your "verie kind attention." I never miss your column and, though I've never written you before and perhaps won't again, I want to say that the World's Greatest Newspaper would lose some of its greatness if your column was left out.

Again I offer my profound admiration. It goes for all our house.

E. G. M.

Editor's Note: Mr. Sherman thanks you, THE TRIBUNE thanks you, and I thank you.

English Actor Wins Cheers on Gotham Stage

Charles Laughton, in "Payment Deferred," Plays Character Role.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The English actor who played Tony Perelli, gangster, in the London production of "On the Spot" has been brought to America by Gilbert Miller in a murder play called "Payment Deferred," which was done at the Lyceum last week.

His name is Charles Laughton, and he has had the somewhat unique experience at home of coming late to the theater and topping the list of character actors in five or six seasons. He was 27 when he made his first stage appearance in 1926, after winning a gold medal at a dramatic school. Since then he has played many parts, and his popularity with the crowd has increased with each of them.

In "Payment Deferred" he is given opportunity of running the gamut of the emotions about which less is heard these days than formerly. His character is that of William Marble, a flabby, beady eyed bank clerk, down on his luck and resentful. Living a lower middle class life in a lower middle class neighborhood, he is much in need of funds.

One evening, when he is fearing the collectors, there comes a young man to call on him. He is a nephew from Australia, has just arrived in London. He has no other relatives on that side of the world and, the estate of his parents having been recently settled, he is well supplied with money. He is also a cagey young man and refuses to loan uncle any of his money. So uncle poisons him and buries his body in the garden.

Haunted by Conscience.

Thereafter, for three tortured acts, William Marble, murderer, is haunted by his conscience as relentlessly as was Matthias in "The Bells." He hears the slamming of doors, the sound of bells, the chatter of people passing in the street, the shouts of children. If any one is seen even so much as raking the garden, he is threatened with hysteria.

He profits from his crime to the extent of some thirty thousand pounds and is able to set his wondering wife and daughter up in style. But disaster follows every move he makes.

He buys a new set of garish furniture, and riding into the house with it comes a little French shopkeeper from just around the corner who proceeds to seduce and blackmail him out of thousands.

He sends his daughter to a fine school in France, where she is promptly lifted out of her natural class and becomes so disgusted with her old home and her old father that when she comes back she takes to being a hostess in a night club.

He buys his wife a new outfit of clothes and a holiday at Bournemouth [so he may have his way with the French girl], but she comes back to him distressed in mind and suspicious. Finally, she has his secrets from him and the shock is so great that she herself drinks poison and is dead on the second floor when the doctor comes—dead of poison she had not the strength to come downstairs to get for herself, the doctor says, which makes it likely at the play's end that William Marble will swing for a murder he did not commit, even though the body buried in the garden is never discovered.

Heavy and Cheerless.

It is a heavy and cheerless play, but fascinating in the way mysteries are. Mr. Laughton, of course, acts Marble to the hilt, the picture of misery incarnate, a sensitive register for all the emotions haunted men are prey to.

For my own part, this type of acting leaves me cold. Character actors are bound to be stage conscious. Laughton is noticeably so, being deliberate in reaching for effects and toying with them. Too frequently it is possible to catch him working at his trade, and that is devastating to illusion and story. But that he is technical master of that trade there is no doubt. He has many believable and impressive moments in repose.

An actress in his company, Cicely Oates by name, outplayed her star in the quiet realities she brought to the role of the suspicious wife. She, too, started with fright, blanched with fear, trembled with apprehension, stood stark and staring at the realization of horrible truths, wept with sympathy, and comforted with understanding—and never once were you conscious of a single actress' trick.

"Payment Deferred" is the type of melodrama that makes theater going an exciting business for the young and for those of their elders who are open minded and susceptible. These have been standing to cheer Mr. Laughton at the close of each performance.

Merits High Praise.

I think there is more real drama, more depth of feeling, more sound artistry in the production of Paul Green's "The House of Connelly" by a Theater Guild subsidiary than in any other play of the new season, to date. This play, incidentally, has been in the Guild's possession for two seasons. Whether the managers lacked courage to do it, or were doubtful of its appeal, I do not know. In any event, last summer they turned it over to a group of their younger members with the promise that they could put it in rehearsal if they liked and see what would come of it.

The young people took the script and several others and went away into a sort of artists' camp in Connecticut. There they turned a barn into a theater and rehearsed their plays all summer. When they had "The House of Connelly" ready they asked Mr. Green and the Guild executives to see them play it. The result was so greatly in their favor that the Guild financed a production for the play.

Mr. Green's drama is the story of a disintegrating family, proud in its memory of happier days in the old south. The house of Connelly is a decaying house. Its men, down to the current generation represented by young Will Connelly, are lustful, lazy, washed out, through. Its women are led by a proud mother standing [with the aid of a crutch] firmly by her traditions and her memories, still leaning on the glory of old General Connelly, who fought the war and begat illegitimate offspring, and include a pair of spinster sisters crushed and anemic, but also loyal.

* *

Fates Move In.

A family of poor whites, named Fate, move in as tenant farmers and the daughter, Patsy, hungry for land, plans to seduce Will for his, and Will, hungry for love, takes it from Patsy.

The result is cataclysmic in the Connelly family. Will's uncle Robert, lecherous and modestly alcoholic, shoots himself through his poor weak old head to preserve his pride, Mother Connelly dies of a stroke, and the sisters desert and flee to Atlanta.

But Will holds true, marries Patsy, and she, come to honor and believe in their true love, takes her place as mistress of the house of Connelly with her common blood surging exultantly through her veins. The Guild juniors are not all suited as a type to the rôles the aristocratic south suggests, but they are fine players. Franchot Tone gives a magnificent performance as Will, and Margaret Baker plays well as Patsy. Mary Morris is distinguished and fine as the mother.

"Good Companions" Staged.

Most of the characters, but little of the spirit of high adventure that endeared the story of "The Good Companions" to its public, have come to the stage in a dramatization of the J. B. Priestley novel, which is a common enough report with dramatized novels. Nothing the theater folk can do can preserve the bloom the imagination puts on book characters.

There is good entertainment in "The Good Companions" for perhaps half its length. The gathering of the various parties to the adventure is promising.

Jess Oakroyd, the robust Yorkshireman, quarrels with the nagging missus, takes his kit of tools and his bag and starts off down the road. The gallant spinster, Elizabeth Trant, bowls along the motor ways and breaks down twixt Tumbleby and Rawsley, where Oakroyd manages to set her engine going again.

The disgusted Inigo Jollifant tosses up his job as a submaster in the Taverns' school, bundles his wisps of songs into his bag, collects his fifty-two pounds sterling and is off with Susie Dean and Morton Mitcham, show folk looking for a job.

They all meet at Rawsley, and there it is they come upon the concert party that was the dinky-dos, stranded and unhappy. There the Good Companions company is organized, with the aid of Miss Trant's money, and the great adventure is started.

Six Months Later.

They're still going six months later, which is the second division of the play. Much the same as to personnel. Mr. Jollifant is in love with Susie Dean, which provides a thread of romance, but Susie is fearfully afraid a husband would interfere with her career and will have none of him.

It is at Gatford that the crash comes. Mr. Wimpers, the cinema man, hires his thugs to break up the show and they do it successfully, tossing vegetables at the warbling pierrots and finally setting fire to the theater.

As a play I think the weakness of "The Good Companions" is its failure to concentrate interest on the adventures of the honest Oakroyd and Miss Trant. In a book story an author can be as diffuse and rambling as he pleases, so long as he is interesting. But in a play he has no time to ramble, and the thinner he spreads his story the less interesting it is.

An English cast has been imported or picked up from the local English colony for the playing of "The Good Companions." Valerie Taylor, who was the lovely Gainsborough lady in "Berkeley Square," is the Miss Trant, and her young husband, Hugh Sinclair, is playing Jollifant. They are the strength of the company. George Carney is the Oakroyd and Vera Lennox a fairly rough and ready Susie Dean. Edward Knoblock helped Priestley with the dramatization.

* *

Week's Plays Not So Good.

The rest of our drama this last week, though there was plenty of it, is not much worth talking about. A Vincent Lawrence play, "Washington Nights," was vicious in its nastiness and, praise be, lasted but a few days.

"Nikki," a musical comedy made from the John Monk Saunders stories, has found some friends, but hardly enough to keep it with us long. The musical hits of the town are the Aborn revivals of the older light operas. "The Chocolate Soldier" has just finished two big weeks, and "The Geisha" is to follow, with good old Jimmy Powers in his old rôle of Mun Hi, keeper of the teahouse.

In "Little Show"

WALTER O'KEEFE, who appears as master of ceremonies in the "Third Little Show" at the Great Northern, was a newspaper, advertising, and vaudeville writer up to 1928, when he authored his first show, "Just a Minute." The next spring, in Hollywood, he wrote his first song hit, "Little by Little," with Bobby Dolan.

Three seasons as master of ceremonies at the Club Gallant, New York, prepared him for the "Third Little Show." Notre Dame is his alma mater.

IN MUSICAL COMEDY

FLORIA WEST.

SHE is one of the principal entertainers in "Girl Crazy," the musical comedy now at the Garrick theater. Miss West is the brisk soubrette who leads a song now and then while Benny Rubin and Blossom Seeley are changing costumes.

The Armchair Playgoer

By Fanny Butcher.

IN NEW YORK.

The only openings in New York which armchair playgoers could attend last week were the revivals of two plays which have been revived often before, Dion Boucicault's "Streets of New York" and August Strindberg's "The Father." They will lure readers into the literature of their time, perhaps, and into the biographies of their authors.

AUGUST STRINDBERG.

Dion Boucicault was one of the most spectacular actor-playwrights of his day. His success began before he was 20 in a play called "London Assurance," which was produced in 1841. He died in New York in 1890, where he had made his home since 1875 and where as much of his reputation had been made as in London.

He was born in Dublin, the son of a French refugee and an Irish mother, and he was said to be the greatest stage Irishman of his day. Perhaps his most famous play was not an original play at all, but an adaptation of a novel by Gerald Griffin, called "The Collegians." The play was given the title "The Colleen Bawn." It was played in almost every city in the United Kingdom and the United States, and it made its author a handsome fortune.

August Strindberg, author of "The Father," was quite another sort of person. Born a generation later than Boucicault and in poverty, he lived his life long in suffering—physical privation as a child, mental turmoil as a youth, and hysterical spiritual disintegration as a man. He made two marriages, both of which were disastrous and both of which led him almost to insanity. There are many who think that he actually was insane.

"The Father" was written in 1887 during the stress of his first marital fiasco and shows the depressing effect of his persecution mania. It concerns the deliberate deluding by a wife of her husband into the belief that he is not the father of his much loved daughter. Insanity, always so near to the author himself, seizes the father and he is finally tricked into a strait-jacket by his old nurse. Only death solves his problem.

When the play appeared it naturally created a furor. It was a landmark of importance in the history of European realism. "Lady Julia" followed it in 1888, and other similar plays, most of which centered in the author's own marital tragedy. In those years [the years when Boucicault was living his last] Strindberg was writing his greatest novels, "The People of Hemso," which was published the same year as "The Father," and "In the Outer Skerries," which appeared in 1890, the year of Boucicault's death.

Strindberg's marriage was dissolved in 1891. His misery was accentuated by financial difficulties and insanity touched him more nearly than ever. He lived twenty-one years after that, however, piling up volumes. He is considered Sweden's greatest modern writer according to critics, and his work has exerted a deep and lasting influence on the European novel and drama.

Critics Often Too Severe with Cinema Epics

By Tom Pettey.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The old days of poking fun at the movies have gone, but a lot of people still like to pick flaws in the celluloid epics. Among the favorite subjects for highbrow magazines and Sunday supplements alike are:

"What is wrong with the talking pictures?"

"Censorship, or the purification of the films."

"Wastefulness in making pictures."

"The dearth of good, original material."

"The lack of art among the film artists."

One could go on and on, filling the page with these topics and still not scratch the surface of what has been written. For the most part the deluge of words has been filled with criticism. Few write in defense of the movies; it just is not profitable. The talkies need no defense, according to their makers, and whatever is written about them is just so much publicity for the old publicity mill. Nevertheless, this column is written in defense of the movies.

No Basic Mistake.

To begin with, there is nothing wrong with the movies. That is, nothing wrong in the sense of a fundamental, basic mistake. On the contrary, the talkies have made magnificent strides this season. The producers have produced the best of pictures, the players have grown in fame and ability, the industry has managed to hold up its head in the midst of depression. When the talkie houses show such pictures as "Street Scene," "Alexander Hamilton," and "Five Star Final" it is foolish to speak ill of the industry.

When such actors as George Arliss, the Barrymore brothers, and others of great skill find their greatest roles in the movies, why should we search for minor flaws?

A second popular topic is censorship. From time to time some highly misinformed writer predicts the downfall of the entire motion picture structure through this evil of evils. Certainly censorship becomes ridiculous at times, but it is necessary and has contributed a great deal to the industry. Without some form of censorship the movies would have hit a burlesque house level and remained there until doomsday.

I have seen just about as many raw scenes in the movies as I ever saw on the stage. It is to the credit of the censor that the films are washing up while the stage is reeking more strongly than ever. No one in a normal frame of mind would wish to see the talkies filled with dirt. For every goofy job of censoring such as putting dresses on Micky Mouse, clothing statues, or making all mothers married women, there have been constructive jobs such as the elimination of the pictures that glorify gangsters, the cutting of shots featuring scenes that might upset the digestive functions and the ban on profanity, except where it is essential to the plot of the picture.

Wastefulness Exaggerated.

Wastefulness in making pictures has been too highly exploited. It is true that there has been and possibly still is a lot of waste about the studios. For that matter, there is a lot of waste about newspaper offices, and banks have been known to fail because of "overhead." One of last season's film hits, "Hell's Angels," has demonstrated that gigantic expenditures running into the millions of dollars is not always money thrown away. If I am informed correctly, the above mentioned picture has paid a tidy profit to young Mr. Hughes, the "spendthrift."

Those producers who hire "talent" at fancy salaries and then make no use of the "talent" are not always dumb-bells. They have learned from experience that it is cheaper to keep a herd of "brains" on the scenario pay roll and pick off the real "ideas," if any, than it is to try to make pictures out of every "masterpiece" that is turned in. The movie folks are not the only ones who go in for "talent" in a big way.

I recall several stories in which high powered "talent" entered into competition with the working press. The publishers spent a lot of money, but they put the staff man's story in the lead. The "talent" provided the filler stuff. In one case I remember a one dollar a word man who arrived on the scene too befuddled to get into action. The local correspondent wired his agency to "sober up another genius." I call that extravagance.

Plenty of Good Material.

As for the dearth of good, original material, why look for original material when the libraries are full of unpictured masterpieces? The classics still offer an almost untouched mine of film material. In case present day literary compositions still are to be desired, the market is good. I saw Louis Bromfield's "Twenty-Four Hours" after the novel had been made into a play. It was as good as one could hope for. And as for original products, just give Eddie Cantor or any one of the four Marx brothers a cameraman and a stage and they will produce original matter in quantity and frequently quality.

The lack of art among the artists needs little explanation. There is no lack. The movie actors and actresses are giving as finished performances as the stage stars.

Week's Films Pepless.

Now, to tell you about a current picture. Ann Harding is on Broadway again. Her picture is called "Devotion" and deals in a charming manner with romance in an English barrister's home. Miss Harding plays the part of a girl grown tired of the humdrum life in her household. She goes out into the world disguised as a middle aged governess and gets employment in the lawyer's home.

Ann Harding in wig and spectacles loses an indefinable something. I like her better as Ann Harding. Nevertheless, the picture will get you.

Indian Summer Brings Chicago Playhouses into Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

AFTER attending and reviewing six premières within eight days to celebrate the grand fall opening of the Chicago theatrical season, one's mind becomes a haze of mixed impressions. Floating around in the fog, however, there are a series of wonderments. For example:

I wonder if Walker Whiteside knows that his frequent expectoration upon the stage, in the rôle of the spitting Irishman in "Surf," dilutes rather than fortifies that South Seas melodrama?

I wonder if Phil Baker and Ted Healy, the aggressive and reckless jesters of the revue called "Crazy Quilt," know that dozens and hundreds of average theater-goers, before buying their tickets to any show, ask me: "Is it clean?"

I wonder if Maurice Browne, who is offering "The Venetian" under the auspices of the Dramatic League of Chicago, knows that the finger of destiny has begun to point in his direction as the Siegfried to arouse the Goodman theater from its present state of coma?

I wonder if Donald Brian, co-starring with Edith Taliaferro in "Private Lives," will tell me the location of the fountain of youth from which he apparently quaffs magic draughts that preserve him as a perpetual Prince Danilo?

I wonder if Beatrice Lillie of "The Third Little Show" isn't the only comedienne in history whose sense of humor refused to be ruined by the acquisition of a British title?

I wonder if Gregory Ratoff, who has brought "Girl Crazy" into Chicago in order to fulfill a vow made upon all the ikons of old Russia, is the Morris Gest of the future?

I wonder why Chicago theater managers continue to use the huddle system for their first nights?

I wonder if the play going year in this town will sustain the spirited pace at which it has started?

Finger of Destiny.

My speculations upon the possibility of Maurice Browne's assuming the directorate of a new repertory company at the Goodman theater, perhaps a year hence when Chicago is dressing its windows in readiness for the Century of Progress exposition, have a background in rumor. There has been some slow burning talk on the subject. The trustees of the Goodman, however, are saying nothing, according to their custom, and Mr. Browne himself has dropped no hint of ambitions in this direction.

He seems to be a logical candidate for this labor of Hercules, if Hubert Osborne does not return to the Goodman, and I rise to place him in nomination. His qualifications are numerous. He is a pioneer of the art theater movement in this country; he has a Chicago background, and a loyal following. He has risen from "little" to "big" theater status. His shy beginning on the fourth floor back of the Fine Arts building twenty years ago has carried him to leadership on the London stage and rating as an international impresario. He has given a convincing demonstration of executive prowess as well as art theater ideals.

On the other hand, his control of the Goodman might be too remote. He has many irons in the fire; he is the lessee or owner of two important theaters in London; he contributes plays to the commercial American stage. As a hypothetical director of the Goodman, his authority would probably be delegated, through most of the year, to the lieutenants that he might place in charge there.

These remarks are intended as first aid to the finger of destiny. If they are wasted, I shall have to find myself another candidate, and probably will begin to cast flirtatious eyes at Eva Le Gallienne.

Flaming Florentines.

Your affection for "The Venetian," which came to Chicago for its American première after a prosperous engagement in London, will depend largely upon your taste for "costume plays." When the drama gets into "costume" it also invades his-

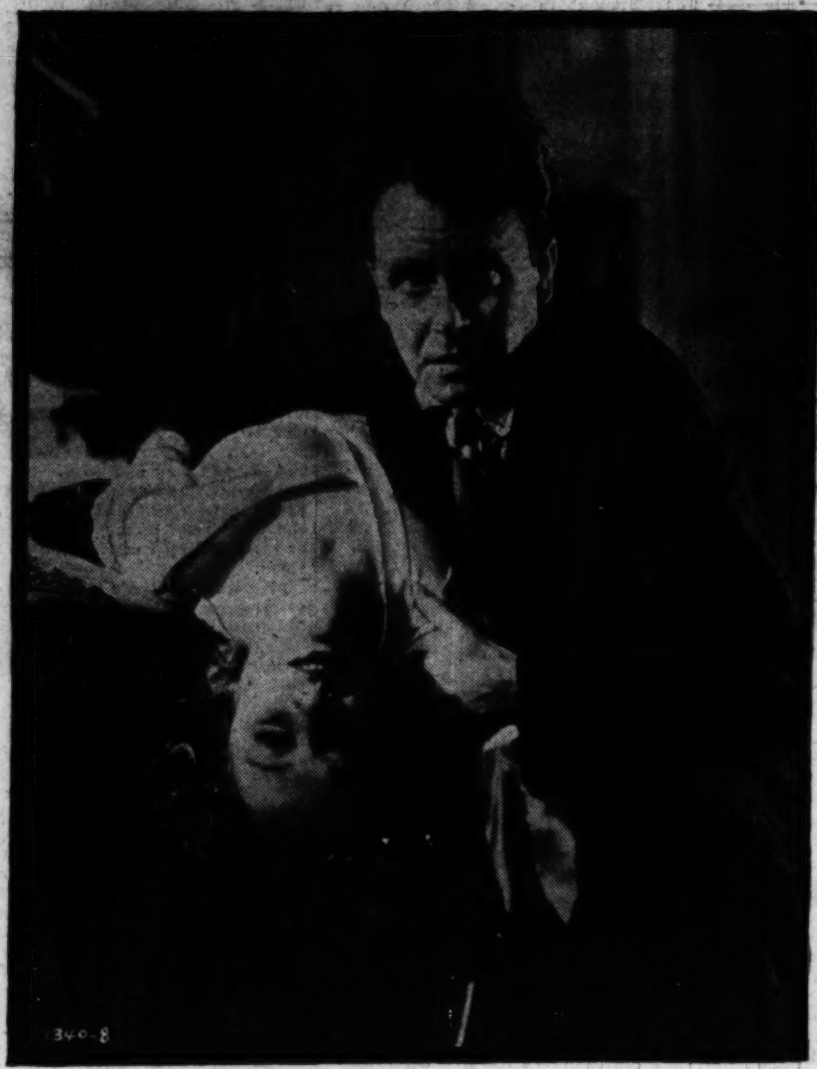
Despite all his medals, Warren Williams appears to be upset about something, but apparently his tirade is giving Bebe Daniels little to worry about. The picture is "Honor of the Family," and it's on display at the present time at the Oriental theater.



Regis Toomey is registering stark terror in this scene from "24 Hours," the photoplay adapted from Louis Bromfield's novel of the same name. Miriam Hopkins, shown above; Clive Brook, and Kay Francis also are in the picture, which is at the Chicago.

By Edward Moore.

ONE of the early performances of the season, promises the Chicago Civic Opera company, will be Mozart's "The Magic Flute." It will be, as far as Chicago's opera is concerned, a novelty, and it is also going to take a lot of casting.

About a quarter century has passed since the work went on here by a professional company. The last performance would seem to have been the time when Fritzi Scheff spilled the operatic beans by appearing as Papagena and getting more applause than the diva who sang the part of the Queen of the Night thought any Papagena was entitled to. It led to feelings and atmosphere not altogether those of sweetness and light, certainly not in the nature of Mozart's golden melodies.

Splendid Cast Chosen.

Papagena, by the way, is not mentioned in the program sent out by the opera company. But for the rest, here is what the company has assembled in the way of a stellar cast. It includes three highly specialized sopranos, a leading contralto, a leading tenor, a leading baritone, a buffo baritone, and a leading basso. They are thus itemized:

Sarastro	Alexander Kipnis
Astrofiammente	Nöel Eadie
Pamina, her daughter	Maria Rajdl
Queen's lady	Frida Leider
Queen's lady	Maria Olszewska
Prince Tamino	Paolo Marion
The Orator	Rudolf Bockelman
Papageno	Eduard Habich
Monostatos	Octave Dua

Conductor—Egon Pollak.

One of the reasons why Herbert Withgrspoon made a trip to Europe last summer was to hunt up a coloratura soprano up to the music of Astrofiammente, who is otherwise known as the Queen of the Night. He had auditions here and there, in Paris, Berlin, Munich, and Salzburg, before making his choice. Finally he set-

Good morning!

"The Spirit of Notre Dame" is dedicated to the memory of the late Knute Rockne, famous and beloved head coach of a history making football team. You will remember that Mr. Rockne was on his way to the coast to complete a contract for some two reel football shorts when the airplane crash occurred that cost his life.

This picture's release at the start of the football season and on the eve of the Notre Dame-Northwestern game is timely and something in the nature of a stroke of genius on the part of the producers. Every football fan will want to see it. Every friend and admirer of Rockne will want to see it, while folks who don't know much about affairs of the gridiron, but like to keep up with current conversation, will buy tickets just to get a glimpse of the famous "Four Horsemen," Don Miller, Jim Crowley, Harry Stuhldreher, and Elmer Layden.

"Are those fellows really in this film?" you ask.

You bet they are! In closeups and in action.

* *

You See Them at Work.

You see their work in the Notre Dame-Army encounter cleverly inserted via news reel. As for the closeup—don't they all autograph a football for a small, enthusiastic boy who sentimentally requests their signatures?

"And now, what are you going to do with it, Sonny?" asks one of the four, fatuously.

"I'm goin' to sell it to a guy for ten bucks," replies mamma's little business man.

O, before I forget it—don't ever again pronounce Carideo with the accent on the "rid." It's Car-ri-day-o, bearing down hard on the "day." If you don't believe it, hear Frank himself give you the lowdown in the picture. And he ought to know!

Little Love Stuff.

As far as the actual football stuff goes, "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is fine! And J. Farrell McDonald seems to me the best man who could have been picked to represent Rockne. He bears an astonishing resemblance to the great coach and is a seasoned and sincere actor. He and his team, at practice, at play, and in their little human communions are convincing. It is not their fault that soppy hokum has been introduced into the story, nor should they be criticized for participation in the same. I won't go into detail about the regrettable mush

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY RULE STILL GOOD IN SCHOOLS

Chicago a Pioneer in Physical Training.

BY IRENE STEYSKAL.

A lot of cold, unbiased testing seems to have forced oblivion upon any number of the good old axioms and maxims, but there is one—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," it goes—that apparently has not suffered from a waning of popularity. As far as we know it never has been so much as questioned; certainly not by our law making body in Springfield, which considered it worthy of legislation.

Since laws are generally couched in more formal terms, however, the gentlemen who make them downstate proclaimed that "physical culture" should be taught in the public schools. Since that time each locality has been working out, according to its immediate needs and means, its own program of execution.

In the Chicago schools an attempt to introduce instruction in physical education was made as early as 1863. Definite steps were taken in 1885 following a demonstration of exercises in the Ogden school made by the Chicago Turngemeinde. A committee was appointed by the board of education to formulate a program, an instructor was chosen and provision made for physical education classes at the Lincoln, Brown, Douglass, and King schools.

Chicago Leads Nation.

Chicago was the first city in the country to appoint [the following year] a supervisor of physical education. Henry Suder was the man appointed to the new post, a position which he held for 37 years.

A red letter year for Knute Rockne's alma mater, old Northwest Division High school, now Tuley, was 1890 when it erected the first fully equipped high school gymnasium for the teaching of physical education. Six years later the Franklin school claimed the same record for elementary schools.

In 1911 began the transition from the old swimmin' hole. Hyde Park High school was the first school for boys and girls erected with gymnasia and a swimming pool.

Pritzlaff Present Director.

The bureau of physical education was reorganized in 1925 with the appointment of one director and three supervisors. Two years ago the present director, August H. Pritzlaff, succeeded E. C. Delaporte to that position.

Mr. Pritzlaff had been instructor of physical education, coach and dean of boys at Senn High school preceding his appointment to the directorship. Associated with Mr. Pritzlaff on the bureau as supervisors are H. R. Crook, Vera Gardiner, and Maj. F. L. Beals. Maj. Beals, assisted by Maj. H. H. Moore, is in charge of military training in the high schools. Under him are twenty-six instructors directing the R. O. T. C. units which are established in twenty senior high schools.

Under the supervision of Miss Gardiner and Mr. Crook are the Normal college, with eight teachers of physical education; Crane college, with six; there are 204 instructors in twenty-four senior high schools; seventy-five in twenty-seven junior high schools; the 302 elementary schools have 228 teachers; eleven continuation schools have two instructors; and there are five in the six prevocational schools. There are also 16 physiotherapists employed in the city's four schools for crippled children.

Phases of Physical Education.

Apart from the military training conducted by Maj. Beals, physical education in the public schools comprises physical education classes, corrective work, health education classes; athletic and after-school play; swimming instruction; and the safety patrols in the elementary and junior high schools.

Physical instruction in the kindergartens and elementary schools is, of course, more or less informal. In the kindergartens and through the third grade its consists largely of song games, story plays and the dramatization of activities in the school. From the third grade on a more formal course is provided which includes setting up exercises in the yard or gymnasium, where they are available; folk dancing, swimming in the three elementary schools where swimming pools are installed—Swift, Carter, and Scanlon—and exercises with gymnasium equipment in the schools where such equipment is available.

Diversified High School Program.

A more definite and diversified program, made possible by equipment, time allotment and the teaching staff, is carried out in the junior high schools. The number of instructors in physical education—one for approximately every 650 pupils—in the junior high schools varies from one to five. New junior high schools and those that have been remodeled are equipped with a girls' gymnasium, a boys' gymnasium, and a swimming pool.

In almost every high school in the city a girls' athletic association is established. Awards for athletic activities are based on a point system that considers not only achievement but sportsmanship, scholarship, and health activities. In both the senior and junior high schools girls' athletics are limited to intramural competition.

Boys of the junior high schools also have their athletic associations. While emphasis is placed in intramural competition, limited competition between schools is permitted in indoor baseball, basketball, swimming and track and field athletics. A doctor's certificate, parental permission and scholastic eligibility are the requirements for membership on one of the school teams.

Bruno Kluge President.

The program for athletics in the senior high schools, superimposed upon the courses followed in the junior high schools, provides for much wider competition between schools. A board of control made up of representatives, who are physical education instructors, from each high school formulates rules and regulates the conducting of interscholastic competition. Heading this group as president is Bruno Kluge of Bowen High school. George W. Steffens of Austin is vice president, and Mr. Pritzlaff serves as secretary and treasurer.

Games played for coveted city championships range all the way from chess and checkers to football. Lindblom is present holder of the football title. Last season Lindblom won championships also for cross country running and novice and senior gymnastics.

Senn claims championships for golf, ice skating in the senior class, indoor and outdoor track in the senior division, and swimming [25 yards] in the senior and junior divisions.

Other title holders are: Lane for tennis, junior ice skating and baseball; Roosevelt for junior outdoor and indoor track and fencing; Crane for basketball in the heavyweight class and soccer; Marshall for basketball in the lightweight class; Lake View for rifle markmanship; Englewood for swimming [20 yards] in the senior division; Schurz for swimming [20 yards] in the junior division, and Tilden for wrestling.

Tuley claims the checkers champion, and Austin came out with flying colors in the ches tournament.

Eleven south side aldermen have been invited to attend the meeting of the South Side Federation of Improvement Associations Wednesday evening in the community room of the Chatfield Trust and Savings bank, 7936 Cottage Grove avenue.

The federation, consisting of 28 member organizations, is particularly interested in gaining as many improvements as possible for the south side before the World's Fair.

Propositions to be discussed with the aldermen include the removal of street car tracks on South Park avenue between 63d and 67th streets, opening Michigan avenue south of 63d street, opening streets through the Nickel Plate right of way, and the opening and widening of 74th street between Damen and Irving avenues.

Track Depression on Program.

Other matters include transportation, schools, parks and playgrounds, stop and go lights, and depression of the Illinois Central tracks on the South Chicago branch.

City council members in the federation's territory who have been asked to the meeting include Ald. Irving Schreiver [5th], Ald. John Healy [6th], Ald. Barnet Hodes [7th], Ald. David L. Sutton [8th], Ald. Sheldon W. Govier [9th], Ald. William A. Rowan [19th], Ald. Thomas A. Doyle [13th], Ald. Terrence F. Moran [16th], Ald. Frank J. Corr [17th], Ald. Walter W. Morris [18th], and Ald. PHILLIPS HIGH HAS OWN FIRE CHIEF AND STAFF

Wendell Phillips Senior and Junior High schools, 39th street and Prairie avenue, boast a fire drill believed to be second to none in the city. Because the high school building, built to house 1,200 students, cares for nearly 4,000 difficulties that would arise there in case of a fire are more complex than in an ordinary city high school.

From the student body boys are selected to hold the following positions: A fire chief, an assistant fire chief, four captains, and 38 fire marshals. Twenty of the 38, who are stationed outside the building, are selected from the R. O. T. C., with a major in charge.

When a fire alarm is sounded the chief and his assistant station themselves at the main entrance. Eighteen of the fire marshals rush to their stations on the first, second, and third floors and remain there until all rooms are emptied of students, then report to a captain stationed on each floor, all of whom in turn report to the chief.

The marshals outside keep the students in line and march them far enough away from the building for safety. It takes an average of three minutes to empty the building.

BUSINESS MEN OF YARDS PUSH PARKING DRIVE

The Stockyards Business Men's association at its monthly luncheon on Friday at the Stockyards inn will consider further measures to secure the limiting of parking on Halsted street, Root and 42d streets. A committee headed by John Ryan and including officers of the group has tried without success to get an appointment with Ald. Thomas A. Doyle [11th] to ask his coöperation in the matter, according to Edward Belding, vice president. The association wants 90 minute parking on Halsted street between Root and 43d streets and on Root and 42d streets between Halsted street and Emerald avenue.

BRIGHTON PARK BOOSTERS HOLD CIVICS CLASSES

Citizenship Courses for Foreign Born.

One of the objects of the Brighton Park Civic and Improvement association, organized a year ago, is the instilling of the highest ideals of American citizenship among its members. This aim is to get especial emphasis this season in the club's programs.

Classes in American citizenship were opened by the club on Sept. 30, and will be held twice a week until next spring. These classes, conducted in the evening at the club's headquarters at Five Holy Martyrs' auditorium, 4318-4328 South Francisco avenue, are open to foreign born persons of voting age. Seventeen men and one woman registered for the opening class, and it is expected that this number will be increased to 200.

Geisler Heads Committee.

Charles Geisler, chairman of the civics committee of the association, heads the committee in charge of the school. Other members of his committee are Anthony Zintak, Joseph Rusch, Walter Marciniak and Peter Hamot.

Nicholas F. Strzycki, 2937 West 43d street, secretary of the association, says that the classes will first be taught in Polish and later in English for the purpose of fully acquainting the students with the principles of American citizenship.

"These classes," explained Mr. Strzycki, "are being accepted with enthusiasm by a group which has not as yet taken out citizenship papers. The association is urging every one who has not done so to become citizens. We feel that this project, involving no expense, is a matter of great importance.

Other objects of the association are protection against unjust taxation, the promotion of better local improvements, and the promotion of community good fellowship.

Playground Is Sought.

The association, having pointed out the need of a playground in the community, has been assured that when tax problems have improved action in this matter will be taken. The association has in mind for the purpose a tract of ground located on Francisco avenue, between 43d and 44th streets.

Brighton Park has undergone great development in recent years due to the migration into the community of many families from the more congested parts of the city. The population is largely made up a persons of Polish extraction. It is the purpose of the new association to act as a clearing house for the residents in their common aim for the highest type of community possible.

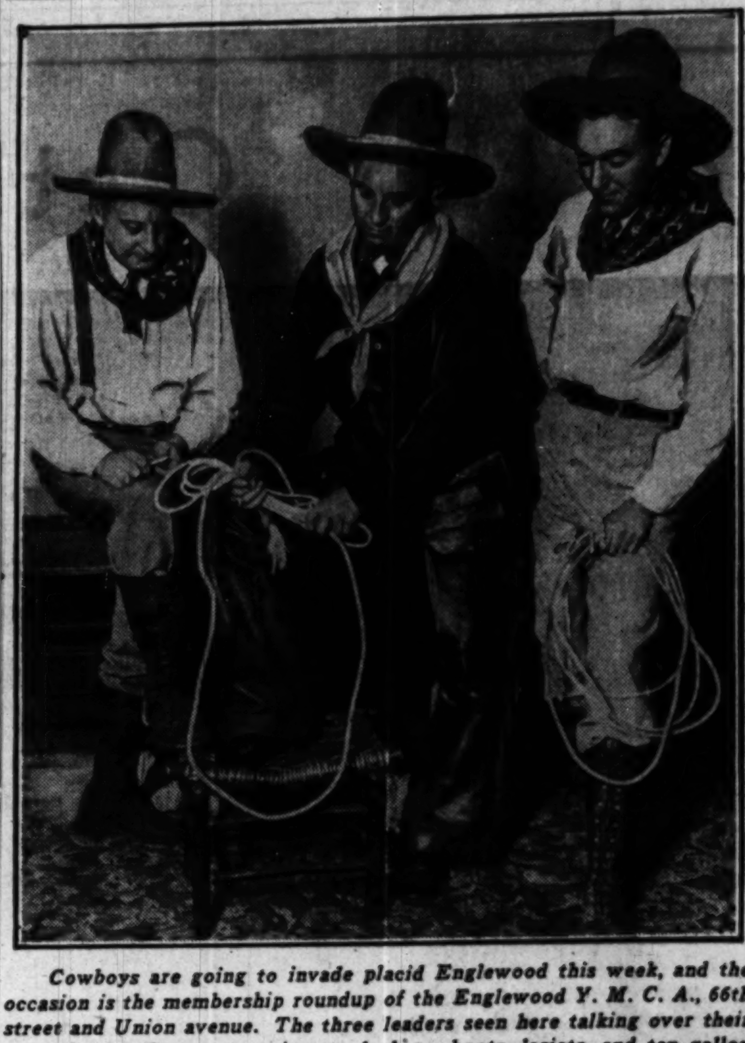
Michael J. Pawlowski is president of the association, Joseph Andrew Lasecki, attorney; Bernard J. Petka, vice president; Nicholas F. Strzycki, secretary, and Frank J. Lassa, treasurer.

Chairmen of the various committees are: Civics, Charles Geisler; improvements, Anthony R. Zintak; social welfare, Frank C. Patka; taxes, Bernard J. Petka; health, Dr. M. S. Swiont; transportation, William S. Paczkowski; fire and police, John Korzeniowski; zoning, John A. Cichoszewski; safety, Ben Szymanek; business Albert V. Tenczar.

S. CHICAGO AVE. PAVING TO BE BEGUN TUESDAY

The paving of South Chicago avenue between 71st and 95th streets with gasoline tax funds will be begun Tuesday with a ceremony sponsored by the South Chicago Chamber of Commerce. President Emmett Whealan of the county board will be the special guest. Others on hand are to include Maj. George A. Quinlan, county highway superintendent; Duncan M. Campbell, assistant superintendent; Ald. William A. Rowan [10th], and Ald. David L. Sutton [8th], as well as leaders of the South Chicago and Grand Crossing [formerly South Woodlawn] chambers of commerce. The paving crew will begin at 71st street and work south. Underground work is complete except for the southern part of the strip to be paved, and that will be done by the time the pavers are ready to begin work there.

READY FOR "Y" ROUNDUP



Cowboys are going to invade placid Englewood this week, and the occasion is the membership roundup of the Englewood Y. M. C. A., 66th street and Union avenue. The three leaders seen here talking over their campaign to the accompaniment of chaps, boots, lariats, and ten gallon hats are (left to right) Art Swanson, Ray Ballantine, and Harry Himmel. ENGLEWOOD 'Y' HIRES COWBOYS FOR A ROUNDUP

Sends 150 Wednesday to Enroll Members.

The Englewood Y. M. C. A. will open a ten day membership roundup Wednesday evening with a dinner for all the ranchers taking part. About 150 men are expected to work on the drive.

K. Ray Ballantine is boss of the range and he and his two superintendents, Arthur C. Swanson and Harry Himmel, are "hiring" all the ranch hands they can find to help in rounding up old and new members. Boss Ballantine has picked as his slogan "Exercise and play—join the 'Y' today." The ranchers will meet for dinner and make reports on Friday as well as during the second week of the roundup.

Foremen Are Appointed.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH TO MARK 98TH BIRTHDAY

The First Baptist church, 98 years old, will celebrate the passing of another milestone today when Dr. Perry J. Stackhouse, its present minister, preaches the anniversary sermon on the founding and history of the church. Now in its sixth building, the church is located at 915 East 50th street and will celebrate its 100th anniversay two years from now along with Chicago and the World's Fair.

The regular anniversary banquet will be held at the church Wednesday evening. Dr. A. M. McDonald, superintendent of the Chicago Baptist executive council, will be the speaker on this occasion.

Well known among the long line of men who have occupied the pulpits of this venerable institution are Dr. W. P. Everts and Dr. P. S. Henson, each of whose pastorates extended over two decades; Dr. George W. Lorimer, whose son is editor of the Saturday Evening Post, and Dr. A. K. de Blois, former president of Shurtleff college, Alton, Ill., and now president of Baptist Theological seminary, Philadelphia.

Fire has harassed the church and played a large rôle in its long history. The church's first four home all were in the heart of the loop, the second being destroyed by fire, as was the fourth. Then the congregation moved to 31st street and South Parkway, then "way out into the country." This was sold to Olivet Baptist church in 1918 and the congregation moved to its present home in September, 1919. Dr. Stackhouse has served almost the entire time since that time.

Boys Busy Making Plaques for Park Sport Champions

The new south park plaques, given this year for the first time to winning teams in the various sports and playground contests, are being made by the boys at Fuller park under the supervision of William Collins. The plaques are of wood and bronze castings with a space in the center for the insertion of the names of the winning teams. About 80 of these shields are to be given out.

OUR TOWN

Paragraphs About Some Folks You Know

MRS. BENJAMIN C. ALLIN of 4805 Dorchester avenue has been entertaining a distinguished visitor in the person of her son, Col. Benjamin C. Allin, a former Our Towner. Col. Allin has just returned from a six months' sojourn in India and is giving his old friends quite a line on the changeless east. Incidentally, he did his bit toward changing it, helping a native prince to build a harbor in his realm.

The Klinger-Gruendl clan has double cause for rejoicing these days. A daughter, Rita Dolores, was born to the Edward L. Klingers of 7030 Aberdeen street a few days ago and her first cousin, George Jr., son of the George Gruendls of 1254 West 74th place, chose the same twenty-four hour span to make his entrance into the world.

Our good friends the Fred M. Klines of 7009 Calumet avenue have had quite a time of it. First Don's car was stolen, golf clubs inclosed. Then Edna deserted the family roof for the University of Illinois. And now the senior Klines—both Mr. and Missus—are suffering from severe cases of writers' cramp. Cause being, 150 notices for the Park Manor Woman's club opening had to be sent out by Mrs. Kline as corresponding secretary, and she finally pressed Fred into service around the old dining room table. The notices will be printed next year, if Fred has anything to say about it.

SPEAKING of the good offices of club women's husbands in boosting club activities, we wonder whether members of the Harvey Woman's club realize what they owe G. A. Stevenson, president of the First National bank of Harvey. Not as president of the above institution, but as husband of the president of the Harvey Woman's club, he has sent us two communications regarding club doings. And he managed one without the help of his secretary.

Among the gay events on the autumn calendar we note the fall dance and festival of the Sadowski Undertakers, to be held Oct. 24 at Templin's hall, 88th street and Commercial avenue. Aloysius McNeely is chairman, and H. Szumsnki, M. Ziemakowski, R. Sadowski, C. Tanski, and J. Koch are assisting.

Why wait twenty-five or even fifty years to stage a big blowout celebrating the fact that you're happily married? Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Humphreys, 1655 West 82d street, broke with tradition when they took eighteen friends to dinner and the theater on their first wedding anniversary. All had been members of their wedding party one short year ago.

One of Roseland's old guard, Mrs. Katherine Ambuul Bass, reached the 77 year mark the other day. Children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren gathered at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. CANADA has been calling Ridge residents this fall. Mr. and Mrs. William C. Waddell, 9641 Winchester avenue, have been visiting friends in Montreal and Quebec and Mrs. A. Jewett, 1708 West 105th place, has been in Windsor.

Here's a party given by the guests for the hosts. When Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Korzeniecki, 12245 Parnell avenue, observed their golden wedding anniversary the other day, 100 or so friends dropped in on them without warning, and arranged a regular celebration for them, flowers, refreshments, programs, games, prizes, and all.

Roseland's fingers are crossed for Miss Dorothy Jahn, Miss Roseland, who left last week-end for Hollywood to try her luck in the movies. Maybe the old home town won't be proud if Dorothy's name appears in electric lights some few months hence! Dorothy, you know, got the chance to have a screen test along with the crown of "Miss Roseland" presented in the beauty contest sponsored by the People's store and the South End Chamber of Commerce.

Neighborhood Theaters

"Dirigible," hailed as one of the best pictures of the spring, has been sidetracked for some mysterious reason, but at last it's coming into its own. It will be shown Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at the RKO-Englewood theater; today and tomorrow at the Highland theater with "To Many Cooks"; and today and tomorrow with "Broad Minded" at the West Englewood theater.

This picture was made with the help of the navy, is dedicated to it, and is intended to give the public an intimate glimpse of what goes on in the air branch of the service. We trust the thrilling scenes aboard the dirigible adrift in a hurricane over the Carribean are the exception rather than the rule in navy flying. Jack Holt, the dirigible's commander; Ralph Graves, a seaplane ace; and Fay Wray, his wife, supply the human interest.

Frank Craven's comedy, "Too Many Cooks," is in good hands in the film version. Bert Wheeler plays Al, the young husband-to-be, and Dorothy Lee, his adoring fiancée. The story, in case you've forgotten, recounts the difficulties of a young couple with in-laws who are house building. In addition to its showing at the Highland theater today and tomorrow, "Too Many Cooks" will appear at the West Englewood Friday and Saturday with "Murder by the Clock."

Lionel Barrymore at Capitol.

"Guilty Hands" and "Last Flight" are the Capitol theater's double offering this week. "Guilty Hands," from Bayard Veiller's melodrama, gives Lionel Barrymore another opportunity for a splendid performance as a state's attorney who justifiably commits the perfect crime. Kay Francis and Madge Evans are in the supporting cast.

"Last Flight" was made from John Mock Sanders' tragic-comic tale of a group of aviators and a girl at loose ends in Europe immediately after the armistice. Helen Chandler is appealing as Nikki, the distraught heroine. Richard Barthelmess, John 'Mack Brown, David Manners, Elliott Nugent, and Walter Byron are the aviators.

"Waterloo Bridge" and "Silence."

"Waterloo Bridge" and "Silence" are showing at the Stratford theater the latter part of the week. The former, acclaimed as one of September's best pictures, is a wartime story of a Canadian soldier and a woman of the streets who meet and part on Waterloo bridge. Kent Douglass and Mae Clarke play the leads. "Silence" gives Clive Brook occasion for another of his restrained portrayals as a man who faces death to save the daughter to whom he never gave his name. Marjorie Rambeau and Peggy Shannon are in this, too

John Gilbert in New Rôle.

John Gilbert has a new sort of rôle in "Phantom of Paris," showing Friday and Saturday at the Marquette and Highway theaters with "Transatlantic." He is a magician, wrongfully accused of murdering the father of the girl he loves who, by his ingenuity, reveals the true murderer. Leila Hyams is the girl.

ANGLER TOURNEY CALLED AS FISH CLUTTER LAGOON

Catch All You Can in Hour and Win Prize.

There's going to be a free-for-all fishing tournament Saturday. It's going to be down in Washington park, where Edward Kelly, the boatman, says the fish are so plentiful this year that it is impossible to row boats through the lagoon.

"They're vicious, too!" he said. "They snap at horses which cross the bridle path bridge and jump at birds on overhanging branches."

V. K. Brown, superintendent of playgrounds and sports, said he understood that they were even chasing each other up trees. He opined this was probably dogfish chasing catfish, but it was impossible to substantiate this story.

A hundred ideas were hatched on Mr. Kelly's urgent demand for immediate relief. Suggestions of seining and dynamite were dismissed when one official thought of a fishing tourney. So a fishing tourney it is. It is to be sponsored by the Izaak Walton league, but is open to all.

Limited to Midday Hours.

So Saturday has been set aside as the day. Fishing will start at 9 o'clock in the morning and continue until 3 in the afternoon. These hours were decided on because it was thought that early morning or late afternoon fishing would be taking undue advantage of the finny creatures. It also is figured that the usual midday fish siesta will not prevent some fine catches.

Entries will be received all day Thursday at the boat landing in Washington park. There will be no fee and no age limit. Fifty rowboats will be provided for the contest, two entrants in each boat. But each contestant will be allowed to fish just one hour, a whistle to punctuate the starting and finishing times.

Prizes will be given not only to the person snaring the largest fish and the one with the largest catch, but plans are being made to reward the man who loses the "biggest one" and to the person with the best fish story to tell as a result of his day's experiences.

Stocked Last Year and This.

Lest any one should doubt that there is an oversupply of the finny creatures in the Washington lagoon, it should be known that the place was heavily stocked last spring—and also last year. Mr. Brown said that copious quantities of young bass, pike, and bluegills were dumped into the lagoon and that there already were large numbers of catfish and other members of the bullhead family living there.

The other main event in the south parks Saturday is to be the football field day at 9:30 o'clock in the morning in the Washington park meadow. This is open to boys from 10 to 18, inclusive, with points being given on a graded scale according to age. A maximum of 20 boys is allowed from each of the 18 member playgrounds of the system.

Events include punting, drop kicking, place kicking, and forward passing. The best marks made by the south park lads are to be matched against those of boys from parks in other middle west cities. Since football always has been considered too tough a game for the younger boys, who make up the large percentage of those enrolled in the parks, the field day is set up as the football substitute. It is believed that this makes for better players than too much football when the boys are young.

WOMEN VOTERS OF 6 LEAGUES TO MEET TOGETHER

This Week in the Garden

Monday, Oct. 12.

Rake up bare spots in the lawn, scratch with steel toothed rake, sow grass seed over it, and germination will quickly occur. A little commercial fertilizer will stimulate the young plants into vigorous growth and enable them to endure through the winter. If it is desired to keep root crops outdoors through the winter prepare the place now, before severe frosts. Carrots, late cabbage, beets (not too old and woody), potatoes, sweet potatoes, and turnips may be kept by this method.

Tuesday, Oct. 13.

Some of the early hardy chrysanthemums are bursting into bloom. A new yellow sort, known as Valerine, is a low growing variety attractive for Chicago and vicinity. Keep an eye open for varieties that come into early bloom because only the extremely early kinds can be depended on for a display. Continue to make cuttings of tender plants that have been growing outdoors. Pot a few plants, cutting back at the time of lifting.

Gladiolus that have ripened their leaves should be dug, the excessive soil removed, the corms dried for a few hours, and later placed in a cool, dry basement over winter. Save all bulbils of the rare kinds for future planting. Exchange with gardening friends.

Dahlias may be dug, or the tubers left in the ground until frost. Lift the tubers without breaking because they keep better. Cut off the stems a few inches above the ground before digging. Do not neglect labeling securely. Place a six inch layer of sand on the cellar floor, pack the tubers in layers, covering each layer with dry sand or peatmoss, and cover the top layer with a five or six inch layer.

Wednesday, Oct. 14.

Try a few of the bulbous iris in a sheltered and well drained situation, such as a rock garden. Pansies and violas may be propagated from cuttings at this time, an excellent method of preserving an outstanding variety. Remove the side shoots, with a few roots attached, if possible, and insert them firmly in sandy soil in a cold frame or box which may be placed in the frame. Cover the sash with boards during cold weather. Many other plants may be increased in this way. Plant narcissus bulbs for their effect in the perennial borders, or for naturalizing with shrubs or in the outlying sections of the grounds.

Thursday, Oct. 15.

Bring in the amaryllis from out of doors, gradually dry them off by reducing the supply of water from day to day, and store in a dry, cool place. They become active toward January, at which time they may be repotted. Many inquiries regarding the proper distance apart that street trees should be planted have been received. The elm, which is popular, should be used on wide streets, and planted 50 feet apart. Elms never attain their maximum beauty if planted close together. The hard maple is also a large growing tree and should be used on wide streets. Plant the ash and tree of heaven on narrow streets and 40 feet apart. Use one species along a street instead of a miscellaneous assortment with a different habit of growth. The box elder, poplar, catalpa, and willow must be sparingly used, or planted where nothing else will grow. They are short lived and easily injured by storms.

Friday, Oct. 16.

When planting hedges, and especially the privet, plant at least three to six inches deeper than the lowest branch of the plant. These plants root along the stems and deep planting makes a thicker hedge. When planting cut to within six inches of the ground to force the dormant buds into vigorous activity. Mulch after the ground freezes. Plant a pussy willow (salix caprea has the largest catkins) for a supply of bouquet material in early spring. The native species (salix discolor) has smaller flowers, but is very good. Quarter inch mesh wire will keep rabbits from injuring trees.

Saturday, Oct. 17.

Plant a few shrubs or low trees to attract birds. Useful plants for this purpose are the chokeberry, spicebush, Japanese barberry, cornelian cherry, some dogwoods, Morrow's honeysuckle, mulberry, smooth and staghorn sumac, elderberry, mountain ash, snowberry, Indian currant, snowball, vinurnum dentatum, lantana, lentago, prunifolium, and tomentosum. Wild grape twiggy shrubs form nesting places. Plant some hybrid lilacs to furnish a range of free flowering, tall shrubs, and in unusual colors.

PACKERS' NINE WINS INDUSTRIAL LEAGUE TITLE

The 6 to 5 victory of the Wilson's Certified nine representing Wilson & Co over the Illinois Central shops of the Pullman company in the city championship series ended the 14th year of the Wabash avenue Y. M. C. A. Industrial Baseball league. The Wilson nine won the championship of the packing plant division while the Pullman company team had taken the title in the railroad division. There were eight teams in the packing company division, ten in the other

The league is the outgrowth of the effort of the Wabash avenue department of the Y. M. C. A. to adjust the Negro worker who came from the south to fill the places in the stock yards industries left vacant by workers who had been called into the service in 1917 and 1918. It was during the spring of 1917 that Henry R. Crawford, then physical director of the Wabash branch, conceived the idea of taking up the spare time of these workers in some wholesome recreation.

The packing companies readily encouraged this program which in a few months included music organizations, efficiency clubs, and educational features. In a short time workers of all races drifted into the program.

Today there are the Armour Jubilee Singers, the Armour Efficiency club, the Swift Red Triangle band of 35 pieces, the Swift Efficiency club, the Wilson Efficiency and Choral club. These groups are all colored. The subsidiary companies of these three concerns are represented in these clubs.

H. G. WELLS, ONCE FOE OF RADIO, TO MAKE U. S. BOW

Proves He's No Perfect Prognosticator.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

H. G. WELLS.
[Kadel & Herbert.]

H. G. Wells is by no means the perfect prognosticator. No longer ago than 1927 he ran up against radio and found it useless. The famous historian of the future pictured the invisible audience bored to death while a mass of aerials cluttered up the housetops like wire entanglements on the fields of France. Mr. Wells then doubted that even the most ardent fan's enthusiasm could last more than two weeks, and thought that radio listeners must be "very sedentary persons living in badly lighted houses or otherwise unable to read."

Since then Mr. Wells has got over his gloomy outlook and has been employing the ether waves to talk on "What I Would Do with the World." Next week he comes to New York and on Saturday evening he will speak over an NBC coast to coast net, including WENR.

Apparently no one gets homesick easier than a New Yorker abroad. As soon as Jimmy Walker hit the continent he was talking back over the radio. At 4 o'clock this afternoon Roxy is going to speak over NBC from Berlin.

The prince of Wales and John Masefield, poet laureate, will also be heard in international broadcasts this month. The prince is to speak at 2:45 p. m. Wednesday, Oct. 21, over CBS from London, and Masefield will discuss "Ships and Their Builders" at 2:30 the following afternoon on the same net.

When H. H. Rajput, Hindu graduate of Oxford and a former officer in the British intelligence service, came to Chicago to inaugurate his series of adventure stories based on war experiences he turned to the University of Chicago to get real Hindu music. He found there several students with native instruments, among them stringed affairs used in India for more than 2,000 years. Over the air they sound like flutes and other woodwinds.

James Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, dropped in to inspect the Hindu instruments, threw up his hands, and walked out.

Now that the nation's leading dance orchestras are playing college medleys nightly, MCA hastens to point out that 50 per cent of the nationally known orchestras attended college and that 70 per cent of the musicians employed in these orchestras are men of university training.

But not so many of them, possibly, are graduates. Nor does it make any difference.

MRS. HOOVER TO SPEAK DURING BOAT CEREMONY

Mrs. Herbert Hoover will christen the American Clipper, a new flying boat with a capacity of 45 passengers, at 1:30 tomorrow, the ceremony to be described over both networks.

The event will take place at the Anacostia naval air station in Washington, after which an initial flight will be made, when Mrs. Hoover will be flown over the capital city.

Announcers will also accompany the ship on its flight, and by means of portable sets will broadcast interesting sights which will be witnessed. By means of a special receiving apparatus located on the ground, the description from the plane will be passed out through the network.

Among the notables who will take part in the ceremonies will be Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, Congressman Will Wood, Clyde W. Kelly, known as the father of the air mail act; Orestes Ferrara, ambassador from Cuba, and J. T. Trippe, president of the Pan-American Airways.

CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA AGAIN TO BE HEARD ON AIR

13 Saturday Programs Planned.

Chicago's world famous Civic opera will again be broadcast this year to a nation of music lovers by NBC. This announcement was made yesterday by M. H. Aylesworth, president of the company.

The stirring music, pageantry and drama of the opera will be brought to the fireside of American homes, no matter whether in the crowded city or the lonely back woods settlement for the third successive year through the coöperation of the Civic Opera company and NBC.

Many New Presentations.

Under the new directorship of Herbert Witherspoon, famous in his own right as an opera star and as a director, the opera company will this year offer new presentations never before heard in this country and will also bring to radio listeners a host of new and brilliant singers gathered by Mr. Witherspoon from all parts of Europe during a scouting trip for talent last summer.

This year, instead of cutting into the middle of the opera as has been the custom in the past, the broadcast will run from 8 to 8:30 p. m., central standard time, each Saturday night, beginning Nov. 7, thus allowing the radio listener to hear the overture and entire first act of the performance.

13 Operas to Be Presented.

Further perfections in broadcasting technique are expected to be introduced in the broadcasts this year allowing music lovers to hear the music nearly as perfectly as though they were sitting in the best seats in the house. The new parabolic microphones, known as the "human ears" of radio, will be used.

In all 13 operas are expected to be presented during the season of 1931-'32 including old favorites and American premiers.

The Chicago Civic opera was the first grand opera in the world to be broadcast direct from the stage.

TAMARA TO BE FEATURED WITH RUDY AND BAND

A medley of old Russian songs and modern American tunes are to be presented by Tamara, youthful singer and stage star, when she makes her bow as the guest artist of Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees from 7 to 8 o'clock Thursday evening through W-G-N. While singing the Russian numbers Tamara will play her own accompaniment on the guitar. Tamara was born in Ukraine twenty-one years ago and came to the United States when she was 9 years old. Starting in her theatrical career at an early age, she has already been featured in such productions as Billy Rose's "Crazy Quilt" and Schwab and Mandel's "Free for All."

GOOFUS MASTER

TED WEEMS.

Ted Weems, W-G-N orchestra leader, playing his own invention, the Goofus horn. It is said that there are only four men in the world that can operate the Goofus and the genial Ted is naturally one of the four. The Goofus is a cylindrical brass instrument about two feet in length with reeds inside. Air is forced in through a pliable rubber tuba, approximately three feet in length. There are twenty-two stops. The sounds emanating are "weirdly unique," Weems maintains.

"Fifth Row Center" is dedicated to the legitimate theater and will present each Sunday intimate chatter about some outstanding show appearing on the Chicago stage, and feature the personal appearance of some star in the production.

Starred as Child.

Edith Taliaferro has appeared in scores of plays in America, England, and Australia. She started her stage career when she was two and a half years old and had star rôles in "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" as a child.

Donald Brian, who supports Miss Taliaferro, has been a stage favorite for many years, his first Broadway appearance having been in "Florodora." Real success, however, did not come to him until the night "The Merry Widow" was unfurled to a wildly enthusiastic audience. Brian made a great hit in the rôle of Prince Danilo and a new star was made. In recent seasons he has appeared in "How's Your Health," "The Queen's Husband," "Candlelight," and the Players' club revival of "Becky Sharp."

Many Stars Presented.

In presenting "Fifth Row Center," W-G-N is enlarging its already successful policy of giving its radio audience stage stars of prominence. During the last year it has brought before the microphone such famous personages as Otis Skinner, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Grace George, De Wolf Hopper, Tom Powers, Oscar Shaw, Blanche Ring, and Lillian Kemble Cooper.

Among the stage attractions which W-G-N will have in future "Fifth Row Center" programs are: "The Silent Witness," "The Third Little Show," "Girl Crazy," "Crazy Quilt," "The Venetian," and "Surf."

Allerton Glee Club to Sing More College Songs

The Allerton Glee club will again include college songs in their program from W-G-N at 9 o'clock Saturday.

YALE BANQUET, GRID TILT WITH U. OF C. ON W-G-N

Angell, Hutchins, Stagg to Speak.

When Yale alumni invade Chicago next week-end for the Yale-Chicago football game most of their celebrations will be carried to the rest of the country over W-G-N, THE TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel.

Five speakers who will be heard at the banquet in the Stevens hotel Friday evening will be Dr. James R. Angell, president of Yale university; Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago and former dean of the Yale law school; George Vincent, chairman of the board of Rockefeller institute; Prof. William Lyon Phelps, Yale's famous writer and critic, and Amos Alonzo Stagg, graduate of Yale in 1888, who is celebrating his 40th year as Chicago's football coach.

Music to Be Broadcast.

In addition to its broadcast of the addresses, W-G-N will have specially located microphones in the banquet hall to pick up the music and revelry. There will be the music of the Yale band of almost a hundred pieces, which will be heard in a concert when W-G-N comes on the air at 7:30, and group singing of former members of the glee club who will be gathered at one table.

On Saturday afternoon the Yale football team will appear for the first time in Chicago, playing Alumnus Stagg's Maroons at Stagg field. And Albie Booth will make "his last appearance west of Chapel street," according to advance announcements.

Quin Ryan will take the air from the field at 1:45 next Saturday to give listeners the play by play story of the game and the attendant festivities.

Dr. G. W. Dowie to Speak.

Various religious denominations will be interested in the address of Dr. George W. Dowie, director of the United Spiritual Movement, who will speak at 1 o'clock Thursday on the W-G-N midday services. Many Chicago churches, particularly those of the Presbyterian denomination, are participating in this movement.

Other speakers whom Dr. John L. Dickson, director of the midday services, has obtained for the week are: Dr. Herbert Whiting Virgin, pastor of the North Shore Baptist church, who will talk Monday, and Prof. A. C. McGiffert of the Chicago Theological seminary, who will give the address on Tuesday.

A layman of the Lutheran church, David Chindblom will speak Wednesday, and Dr. W. E. J. Bratz, editor of the Epworth Herald, a journal for young people, is to talk on Saturday. Dr. Dickson will speak at 12:45 on Friday.

MORTON DOWNEY KEEPS BUSY 24 HOURS EACH DAY

MORTON DOWNEY.

From early morning to early morning Morton Downey is a more than busy tenor. Due to his heavy radio, theatrical and supper club activities, he finds it necessary to rise at 8:30 a. m. After some setting up exercises Downey eats a light breakfast and is off for his penthouse office where he spends an hour on business matters. Then he dashes for the vaudeville theater at which he appears four times daily.

Between hours he learns new songs, receives business callers, and is otherwise kept occupied. He must arrange to be at the Columbia studios at 5 o'clock for his rehearsal and broadcast. At 7 o'clock he is rushing back to the theater, only to return to the studios at 10 o'clock for the late broadcast to the west coast.

After the broadcast he goes to the Central Park casino where he entertains until early morning. And so to bed for a few hours of much needed sleep.

SENATOR LEWIS WILL BE SUNDAY EVENING SPEAKER

United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis will address the Chicago Sunday Evening club at the meeting to be held tonight at Orchestra hall. Starting at 7:30 p. m., the services will be broadcast through station WMAQ.

During the preliminary services an informal Bible talk on "The Trail of the Pathfinder" will be given by Clifford W. Barnes, president of the organization. Included on the musical program will be an organ recital by Stanley Martin and a vocal solo by Mark Love. Under the direction of Edgar Nelson the choir will sing a group of three anthems in one of which Mrs. Mabel Sharp-Herdien will be heard as soloist.

B. E. Sunny will read the scripture and the prayer is to be led by Dr. von Ogden Vogt of the First Unitarian society of Chicago.

Beethoven Is Available for Disk Collector

"Pastoral" Shows the Lyric Side of Famous Composer's Nature.

By Edward Moore.

THANKS to Brunswick, there is some more Beethoven available for the disk collectors. In album 26, Hall of Fame-International, 90189 to 90194, inclusive, the State Opera orchestra of Berlin plays the sixth, or "Pastoral" symphony under the direction of Hans Pfitzner.

It is no small undertaking to put a complete symphony on the disks, but as one looks back at the accretions of perhaps only a few months, one begins to see the great service the recording companies have been doing in spreading symphonic music around the musical world. This symphony classifies as an important addition to the list. It is Beethoven's finest lyric expression in all the music he wrote for symphony orchestra, and it has received a recording, in a good many respects, worthy of it.

It shows pretty nearly everything Beethoven thought of on the lyric side of his nature: sustained song, poetic imagination, humor, happiness, tenderness, all that one would expect in lyric expression, except one. Rather peculiarly, in spite of his life in Vienna, he would seem to have been little affected by the grace of an aristocratic dance. When he dances in music he is square-toed, even wooden-shod, and it is the only deficiency in the spiritual makeup of one of the greatest composers who ever lived.

An Expression of Feeling.

By no means, the least element in the greatness of this work is Beethoven's refusal to build it as a naturalistic picture of nature. He named it "Pastoral," but he insisted it was to be more an expression of feeling than a tone picture. Other composers might well borrow his restraint.

Mr. Pfitzner knows his Beethoven and conducts the symphony well. The recording is almost as good. Eleven sides are taken up by the reproduction, the twelfth being turned over to another Beethoven work, but one almost never heard in this country. It is the adagio movement from the "Street Song" trio, opus 11, written for piano, clarinet, and cello, and played by M. Raucheisen, L. Kohl, and J. Disclez. The performance is faithful and industrious, rather than inspired, but it is correct, and it is a chance to hear one of Beethoven's less known but quite charming works.

Rethberg Sings for Victor.

Victor, in the classification called Victrola, presents the extraordinary beautiful voice of the famous operatic soprano, Elisabeth Rethberg, in two excerpts not of opera, but of operetta. The Caardas from Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" occupies one side and "Hab' ich nur deine Liebe" from Von Suppe's "Boccaccio," the other number of 7415. They are uncommonly pleasant tunes, and Mme. Rethberg sings them with the same charming loveliness she gives to her rôle in "The Bartered Bride," which is another way of saying that if she had not made a name for herself in the lofty heights of grand opera, she would have been an equally famous figure in the lighter lyric field.

In this connection, there is place for another mention of Richard Tauber, the German tenor, who is about to try his first conclusions on the concert stages of America. Columbia presents him in number G-4052-M with two songs, Leoncavallo's "Mattinata" and Toselli's "Serenade," both accompanied by the Dajos Bela concert orchestra.

These songs do not belong to operetta, but both of them should. In fact, it is a great surprise that they are not sung at least two or three times a night over the radio stations. They fasten themselves to the ear and memory, and stay there indefinitely. And once again there is reason to believe that Mr. Tauber is going to be a hit when he appears in the flesh.

FOUR SINGERS IN THE CAST OF "THE MAGIC FLUTE"

Alexander Kipnis, who will sing the role of Sarastro.

tled upon Miss Eadie, in which decision he agreed with Col. Blois, director of Covent Garden at London. For Miss Eadie sang the part at London and seems to have been well liked.

Another soprano, one of the queen's ladies in waiting, is likewise still to be chosen. Most of the rest of the cast made themselves favorably known in earlier performances. Mme. Leider and Mme. Olszewska have been here for several seasons. Mr. Marion has still to receive the verdict of Chicago audiences.

Talk About Masonry.

There is so much mysterious talk about the connection of "The Magic Flute" with Masonic orders that it is a bit difficult for one not a Mason to straighten out what it is all about. The work was written by Mozart for a carnival theater in Vienna at a time when there was much gossip about the attitude of the ruling classes toward the orders, especially the attitude of the empress, Maria Theresa. One not altogether respectful account tells of how a certain lodge was raided by the police one night under the empress' orders while meanwhile her husband, the emperor, made a quiet and unostentatious disappearance down the back stairs of the building where the meeting was being held.

It is supposed, though here I am subject to correction, that the character of Astrofiammente symbolically represents Maria Theresa, that Tamino in the same manner represents the emperor, that Pamina is the Austrian people, Sarastro is a high minded Viennese, famous in his time and high in Masonry, and so on.

But however hidden the allusions to persons of the period may be, they are most historical from our point of view. Schikaneder, who wrote the book and sang the part of Papageno, was a good showman of his time, and he evolved a story which stands pretty well on its own merits, rather complicated, partly comic, partly serious, but still a tale that can be followed.

* *

Here Is the Story.

Here is the story, put in as few words as possible:

Prince Tamino, who has lost his way and been separated from his companions while in search of adventure, is saved from a huge serpent by three mysterious ladies who prove to be the waiting women of Astrofiammente, Queen of the Night. The queen takes advantage of the situation to implore Tamino to save her daughter, whom the sage old priest, Sarastro, has taken from her by force. Tamino is given a picture of the girl, falls in love with the likeness, and is filled with an ardent desire to serve her. He is given as a companion in his undertaking one Papageno, a gay and rather witless bird catcher.

When Tamino reaches Sarastro's castle his bitter feelings toward the high priest are changed to those of friendship by the assurance of the priests that their leader had acted only in Pamina's best interests and that she lives and is in no danger. Tamino is told that if he successfully passes a series of trials Pamina shall be his.

Tamino and Pamina, convinced of the righteousness of Sarastro's decision, resist every temptation and pass every trial and finally, the Queen of the Night having been confounded in her plots of vengeance, the two are united in the blazing light of truth, while evil and falsehood vanish and sink back into the night.

First Symphony of Season.

With Miss Bertha Ott beginning her list of concerts with three attractions this afternoon, with several other events this afternoon and here and there during the week, with the Chicago Symphony orchestra beginning its regular season Thursday night and its popular series Saturday night, the concert season of 1931-'32 may be considered to be officially opened. There will be plenty of events before it is officially closed. What is to happen this week is itemized in another column of this newspaper.

The orchestra begins its forty-first season; Dr. Stock begins his twenty-seventh as conductor and his thirty-seventh as a member of the organization. There will be no soloist on the opening program, though a considerable number, the first beginning next week, will appear in the course of the season.

For the opening program, Thursday at 8:30 o'clock, Dr. Stock has decreed Wagner's "Rienzi" Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Ballet Suite, a first class program at any time of any season. For the popular program Saturday night there will be Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Overture; Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, Glazounow's "Ruses d'Amour" Ballet Suite, and Strauss' "Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes, another program of distinct merit.

Correcting an Error.

"Dear Mr. Moore: May I correct your statement in THE TRIBUNE anent Rachmaninoff's fourth concerto? Mlle. Gitta Gradova played it last season on the twenty-first program, March 6 and 7. [Editor's note: Quite right. It was a slip of memory. Beg your pardon.]

"Do you not feel that the soloistic 'racket,' if it may be termed such in view of the amazing preponderance of soloists over purely orchestral programs this season, is not slightly overworked? The old story of the British gallery god needs to be dusted off. As you doubtless remember, the Britisher went to an orchestral concert, at which a famous diva was to assist as soloist. The affair disintegrated into a song recital, with the orchestra as accompanist. After about half a dozen encores, the gallery god felt that the thing had progressed far enough.

"'O, shut up!' he yelled. 'I came to listen to the orchestra!'

"There are a number of gallery gods of that description in Chicago, of which number I am proud to be able to count myself. In my personal opinion, which may not count for much, Frederick Stock is a greater musician than all save a possible two or three of the array of soloists. If he is to 'go 'way back and sit down,' and his fine orchestra with him, while the sainted audiences rave over personality possessed of one-tenth the musicianship and artistry which he possesses, would it not be a worth while change in the policy of the orchestral association to suspend operations, and reincorporate as a concert course, or a syndicate of impresarios?

In that event they could have all their soloists. They could also maintain an orchestra; it would not necessarily need to be as fine as the one we have now, as its only function would be that of an accompanist for these same 'personalities.'

"MALCOLM J. YOUNG."

This department agrees thoroughly with Mr. Young's estimate of Dr. Stock. It is necessary to add, however, that the business management of the orchestra began to discover through the most [illegible] dence, that of the box office, that not enough of its patrons were like Mr. Young. In other words, patronage was falling off. That is the reason for the soloists this year, also for the change of time from Saturday to Thursday night.

Music Notes.

Miss Rachel Busey Kinsolving's Musical Mornings will begin in the Crystal ballroom of the Blackstone hotel on Thursday, Nov. 5, with a joint recital by Maria Olszewska, contralto of the Civic Opera company, and Mischa Levitzki, pianist. John Charles Thomas, Civic Opera baritone, and Janet Fairbank, Chicago soprano, will appear jointly on Dec. 19. The third program will be presented by Nina Koshetz, soprano, Gabriel Leonoff, tenor, and Vladimir Dubinsky, baritone. Mario Chamlee, tenor, and Jacques Gordon, violinist, will appear Dec. 29, and Juliet Lippe, soprano, and Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, Jan. 7.

The Joseffer String quartet, a new women's organization, Anna Thelma Joseffer, first violin; Eva Pokoloff, second violin; Sara Shatz, viola, and Lillian Pringle, cello, announces a series of six chamber music evenings on the Sundays of Nov. 8, Dec. 13, Jan. 10, Feb. 14, March 3, and April 10 at the Cordon club.

Beginning next Friday, Arthur Dunham will enter upon his eighth season of Tuesday and Friday noonday organ recitals at the Methodist temple. About sixty recitals will be given. Mr. Dunham's Sonata for organ and about twenty other works of recent composition will be played.

Among the coming musical events will be a song recital by Yvonne Gall on Nov. 1. A similar appearance by her a year ago was one of the artistic successes of the season. Having sung at Ravinia in opera during the summer, she is now on the Pacific coast appearing with the San Francisco and Los Angeles companies. After leaving here she will return to Paris to sing in both of the opera companies of that city, also in Lille, Lyons, and Bordeaux.

When the Civic Opera company opens it doors Nov. 2 with "Tosca," the Metropolitan Opera company in New York will likewise greet its patrons, but with "La Traviata," balancing the cast of Rosa Ponselle, Giacomo Lauri-Volpi, and Giuseppe de Luca against Chicago's Claudia Muzio, Jan Kiepura, and Vanni-Marcoux. Early in the first week the Metropolitan will give the first American performance of Weinberger's "Schwanda, the Bagpipe Player," a work that would seem to have a number of good reasons in its score for being heard.

The Swift & Co. Male chorus has begun rehearsals for the 1931-'32 season under the direction of D. A. Clippinger, its conductor for fourteen years. The association's annual concert will be given at Orchestra hall March 1, with Florence Austral, soprano, as soloist. In addition it will appear in a sacred program at the University of Chicago April 10, and at other times before the Civic Music association at South Bend and for the benefit of the Lake Bluff orphanage [illegible] at Lake Forest.

Four Horsemen Gallop Over Movie Screen

This Football Picture Is Dedicated to the Memory of Knute Rockne.

that here and there goos up the works. You'll recognize it.

Of the love angle, or, as the press representatives call it, "the woman's angle," there is little—and that's a refreshing omission in a movie of this kind. There's too much of a jittery ingénue in one of the first reels, but such as you see of a budding romance between Sally Blane and Lew Ayres is wholesome and satisfactory. Mr. Ayres plays a high school punk who enters Notre Dame and becomes a mighty football man.

Such faults as this movie has lie in story and direction. But I think you may forget the former, or, if not, still enjoy "The Spirit of Notre Dame" from the sports angle and because of the incentive behind the production.

DID YOU LIKE what you DIDN'T EXPECT? Don't forget we're playing the game again this month. Send in YOUR list of October's Six Best photoplays, having it in this office by Nov. 3. Write your name and address plainly on the sheet that bears the list. . . . VIRGINIA SALE, sister of "Chic," has been signed up for "Peach o' Reno." Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, and Dorothy Lee are featured. . . . DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR.'S next starring vehicle will be "Union Depot." . . . Speaking of the FAIRBANKSES — ROBERT SHERWOOD wrote in part of them in his New York column:

"You will hear numerous, varied rumors concerning the future prospects, personal as well as professional, of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. For one thing, there is the ominous report, recurrent in Hollywood, that the Royal Family of the Screen is about to break up — that after more than twelve years of veritably fabulous domestic bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have decided to go their separate ways, she to her church, he to his.

"You will also hear that they are about to make another picture together, that they are not going to make another picture together, but are now embarked on individual enterprises, that they have definitely retired from the films and will never appear before the public in professional capacities again.

"Needless to say, I am not privy to the inner secrets of the Fairbanks menage; but after two months of reasonably close observation of this conspicuous family in Hollywood I have come to the conclusion that there are no secrets worth mentioning. Mary and Doug have just about as much chance of keeping dark their private lives as has the statue of Civic Virtue in City Hall park, New York.

"For Mary and Doug, for all their outward grace and regal mien, were and are terribly, painfully self-conscious. Their exaggerated eminence frightened and appalled them. They clung to each other exactly as two soldiers will cling to each other when they find themselves in the same exposed shell hole during a heavy bombardment.

"Now the extraordinary circumstances of their lives have changed. The lofty pedestal on which they were precariously perched has vanished. Their reign as monarchs of the movies has ended, and they know it—and if there is one thing markedly noticeable in their manner at the present time it is in an overpowering sense of relief.

"It is inevitable that the relaxation of the strain under which both have lived should cause some form of change in the almost incredible relationship that has existed between them. But I think I can safely assure you that you are entitled to laugh in the face of any one who announces that Mary and Doug are going to be divorced.

"The habits of interdependence that they have formed in the past twelve years are far too firmly established to be shattered. Either would be hopelessly and helplessly lost without the other.

"For all I know, thunder and lightning may separate tomorrow. So may storm and strife, hither and yon, light wines and beer, corned beef and cabbage, give and take, and even Amos 'n' Andy. But I'll bet my all that Mary and Doug will stick together."

American Soprano Opens Rhythmic Season in Gotham

By Joan King.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—If other solo recitalists follow the example of Frances Sebel, New York's musical entertainment of 1931-'32 will depart from the trodden paths to embark upon a course both novel and refreshing. To Frances Sebel, American soprano, and native of Cincinnati, went the honor of acting as official inaugurator of the new rhythmic season here, Oct. 4, at Carnegie hall. Miss Sebel made excellent use of this auspicious opportunity by paying honor to her contemporaries. She chose only one number for her program from the well worn library. This was Mendelssohn's "Infelice, Gia dal mio sguardo," with which she opened the evening.

The audience, which was encouragingly large for so early in a new year, was greatly pleased with Miss Sebel's selections. Her second group included a number of novel Spanish songs, "El Vito," my Nin; "Nana," by De Falla; "El Tumba y le," and "La Mosa y los Calvos," by Obradors, and "Los Dos Miedos" and "Las Locas Por Amor," by Turina. The Obradors numbers were sung for the first time here on this occasion and were especially well liked by the audience.

Offered First Performance.

Miss Sebel, who demonstrated her musicianship and feeling for the intent of the composer regardless of his nationality throughout the evening, offered a first performance in her third group. This was Mana-Zucca's air to athene from "Hypatia," still in manuscript, and described in program notes as "a grand opera in English based on Charles Kingsley's story." Strauss' "Mein Herz ist Stumm and Nichts"; Weingartner's "Liebesfeier," "Nelken," and "Plauderwaesche"; Blech's "Eine Kleine Geige," "Strampelchen," "Tintenheinz und Plaetscherlottchen," and Hughes' "Jack and Jill" and "Hey Diddle, Diddle" concluded the written list.

In accordance with its custom since the organization was founded in 1928, the Schubert Memorial, Inc., held its annual auditions for candidates for its sponsorship here recently. Twenty-five musicians from eleven states were heard in earlier auditions, in September, all of these having met the entrance requirements, and four were selected for the recent hearing. But the judges, who included Richard Aldrich, Howard Brockway, Fritz Reiner, Nikolai Sokoloff, Sigismond Stojowski, and Willem Willeke, finally decided to make no award for this year. The Schubert Memorial has, thus far, presented nine young Americans in New York concerts. These have been Sadah Schuchari and Ruth Posselt, violinists; Muriel Kerr, Isabelle Yalkowski, and Sascha Gorodnitzki, pianists; Phyllis Kraeuter and Olga Zundel, cellists; Flora Collins, soprano, and Graham Harris, conductor.

To Introduce New Works.

When the Viennese conductor, Erich Kleiber, returned recently from Europe to open the season of the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, which he will direct for the first six weeks this year, he announced a number of new works which he intends to introduce during his stay. These include two compositions to be heard here for the first time by American composers, "The Pagan Symphony," by the late Henry Joslyn, and a rhapsody by Wallingford Riegger. He will also introduce new works by two European composers, Krenek's "Variations for Orchestra" and Weinberger's "Passacaglia," for large orchestra and organ, composed especially for its New York première and dedicated to Mr. Kleiber. Mr. Kleiber will also introduce extracts from Telemann's "Tafelmusik"; three symphonic dances of Roznicek; three extracts from the lyric suite of Alban Berg, arranged for string orchestra; Ravel's Minuet Antique, and the Kleine theater suite of Toch.

Remo Bolognini, well known to Chicago's orchestral audiences by reason of his years as assistant concert master of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, has just been awarded the post of assistant to Mishel Piastro, concert master of the New York Philharmonic. Bolognini is the second Chicago musician to attain important position with the New York orchestra, Alfred Wallenstein having taken the chair of head of the 'cello section two years ago.

Since 1929, when Bolognini left the Chicago orchestra to return to Europe to coach in repertoire with Eugene Ysaye, he has been engaged either in studying or recital giving. He was one of Ysaye's two pupils, the other being Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, during the last days before the Maestro's death. Last season he played in recitals with much success in London, Brussels, Berlin, Cologne, The Hague, Amsterdam, and Paris, also visiting this country for two months. He plays the famous "Baron Vitta" Guarnerius, dated 1736.

Carolina Author

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Paul Green, the university instructor who recently flashed into fame as a playwright, has turned his back on Broadway and returned to North Carolina, where his fame is that of a champion cotton picker.

Three days on the rialto were enough for the author of "The House of Connelly." He spent one of them in the theater and the others in a small room of an obscure hotel.

"I've a lot more work to do," he said, "and I'd rather do it on my little farm, where it is quiet and peaceful."

A part of that work will be the completion of "Potter's Field," his fourth play.

"Mr. Paul," as his southern neighbors call him, is an instructor of philosophy in the University of North Carolina. He has the heavy hands of a toiler. He is proud of the fact that the first prize he ever won was as the best cotton picker in a North Carolina county competition.

GREASY HAIR FROM—

LAZY GLANDS

Hair that is full of grease and has an odor is due to a gland disorder. Soap and water won't help. Face the truth about your hair and scalp!

When the scalp oozes oil from every pore, the glands are wasting nourishment and need attention. Stimulate those lazy glands and all that grease and scale will go. And watch what happens to the hair itself, when properly nourished!

Gland stimulation gives hair new life and new color. You won't have any streaks to "touch up" or gray locks to hide. Pigmentation will slowly but surely revive the natural color of any hair not completely and permanently gray.

Start stimulation of those lazy glands tonight! The way to wake them is by massage. Use your fingertips, dipped in Danderine. The Danderine will cut through the pore filth and get at the gummed glands. One treatment will dissolve every particle of dandruff. The first week will give you a healthy, wholesome scalp. But keep the treatments up until the very feel of your hair tells you it is in perfect condition.

You can get Danderine at any drugstore. It is a marvelous medicine for sick scalps.

WATCH YOUR GLANDS!

WHEN Lazy glands won't open, the hair is starved and faded.

WHEN lazy glands don't close, scalp is fouled by secretions.

ANY dandruff is a sign the hair glands need stimulating.

Adopted Child Has Easy Life in Hollywood

Fortunate Waifs Given Every Advantage in Film Star's Home.

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—All Hollywood people are not the carefree selfish egotists that one might think. The same instinct for a hearthstone with happy children's faces exists in the film capital that exists anywhere else in the world. In addition to the children born in Hollywood homes, there are many happy little folks who have been adopted by film stars when an eccentric stork refused to favor the family chimney.

This last year several charming children have been lucky enough to enter film homes where they were eagerly awaited. The most recent adoption was that of little Patricia Hamilton by a new papa and mama, Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hamilton. Patricia was seven weeks old when she was brought to her new home. Next year the Hamiltons plan to find a brother for Patricia.

Before that it was Harold Lloyd and his wife, Mildred, who, tired of the dilatory long legged bird, went out and found a lovely little girl, Peggy, as a playmate for Mildred Gloria. It brought good luck, for not many months later Mr. Stork hustled along with a baby brother, and now the Lloyds have three shining little faces about the table.

Brother for Little Gloria.

Gloria Swanson adopted a little brother for her daughter, Gloria; and Joseph at two became part of the Swanson household when Gloria II. was about four. Gloria did not believe that one child would be happy alone, and chose a boy because she loves the romping play the little fellow brings to the home.

Cecil de Mille has a whole family of adopted children in his home in addition to his own child. From the eldest to the youngest, love and care and advantages have been shared equally, and a family circle of youth and gayety and childish problems and serious character building welcome home the famous director when his day's work is done.

De Mille forbids the word "adopted" in reference to his children as he feels them too close to his heart to use any word suggesting that they are not wholly his.

Zazu Pitts has the small son left by Barbara Lamarr, whom she is raising with her own little girl. Barbara had adopted the little fellow herself when she lost her heart to him when she visited an orphanage in Texas.

Lead a Royal Life.

Mary Pickford long ago adopted her niece Gwendolyn, the daughter of her sister, Lottie. Wyn is Mary's constant companion and enjoys the sort of a room at Pickfair that most girls only dream of. At present, she is away at school.

Constance Bennett is the proud foster mother of a little four year old son, whom she brought back from one of her European trips. Peter is the constant playmate of little Adrienne Fox, sister Joan's baby by Joan's former husband.

Then there is Philippe de Lacey, the child-actor. His foster mother, Edith de Lacey, a nurse in France during the war, found the little orphaned fellow and brought him to America with her.

Polly Moran boasts a little son, also adopted. Of Italian ancestry, John Michael is Polly's joy and pride, and all the M-G-M lot rings with the tales Polly tells of his achievements at the military school which he attends.

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuri Aoki, last August adopted a little American-Japanese boy from a poor mother in Los Angeles' "Little Tokio." They will take the tot back to Japan with them and rear him there as a true son of the rising sun with all the advantages in Japanese life.

Conway Tearle Is Back.

Conway Tearle, who left Hollywood in a huff a couple of years ago, claiming he was being boycotted because he refused a salary cut, is back again and will play a prominent role in "The False Madonna." Kay Francis and William Boyd are the leads in the story.

◆

Herbert Somborn [Mr. Gloria Swanson II.] has opened a fourth Brown Derby restaurant in Beverly Hills, and is doing well with it.

◆

Gilbert Roland, formerly leading man for Norma Talmadge, is playing in a local stage production of "Camille," with Jane Cowl. It is his first stage experience, and he says it fussed him more than facing crowds as a bull fighter in Mexico in his boyhood days. He comes from a family noted for several generations for its matadors.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

United States Misrepresented.

Dear Miss Tinée: Despite the fact that I cannot allow myself the time to sit to write such a letter as this, I feel that what I should like to tell you needs telling so much that other things will have to wait.

I have noticed from time to time your kindly reviews of the German movies here, and when one considers that you admit ignorance of the language you are surprisingly tolerant and fair. I cannot believe that what the Germans are sending us is the best of what they can do, for most of the German talkies I have seen and heard were not one step above most of the mediocre ones concocted in Hollywood.

But all this does not get me to the point. A German talkie now current in Chicago, under the title of "Zwei Kravatten" (A Pair of Neckties), is thus far one of the most maudlin, the most stupid, the most imbecilic and the most effusively sentimental mush that has ever been grafted on a gullible public. Anything more emotionally silly has never been seen. It transcends in actual childish impossibility anything the most heroic in Hollywood have ever done. The scenes which the picture intends to be of the United States are, perhaps, the most impossible of all.

Imagine a wealthy home in America, such as the one presented in the picture, with a hundred or so servants in gaudy livery; the hostess and her dressing room with the thousand electric lights, which reminded one of nothing more than a lighting fixture store. Also, notice how the dining room table is set: the girls seated around in a circle with their legs bared up to the hips; the two American women bidding for the hand of the handsome German, one offering him twenty million and the other thirty million dollars.

Then, the absolutely impossible incident of the German girl suddenly inheriting forty million dollars. There is a lot more, equally silly. And the fact that there was a bit of good singing does not excuse the picture.

J. E. LORING.

Editor's note: I take it you didn't care for "Zwei Kravatten."

Ways that Mystify.

Dear Mae Tinée: For years the critics have said it in print and the public has said it with admission tickets, yet the producers go merrily on. So do not think that I expect this private protest to avail, but it may relieve my mind.

Some time ago Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote a story of Wyoming called "Lost Ecstasy," told with the tenderness of one who knows and loves that country. Our own haunt is not far from the ranch where she spends her summers. So, when we saw the story released under the title of "I Take This Woman," we made a special trip down to see the film. We were prepared to spend a happily miserable evening viewing the familiar beloved panorama of the range, the corrals, bunkhouse, and the little lonely cabins on the high plains.

Well, we were miserable, all right, without any qualifications. Doubtless we should have been warned by the change in title and by your faint praise. For it had not one thing in common with the book except the names of the principal characters; the minor ones were wholly omitted from the film. Not one incident remained unchanged.

The worst was first—the explanation of Kay's presence on the ranch. A worse miscast for the part could not be imagined. This jazz baby could never have portrayed the steadfast Kay of the story, and doubtless this hideous change was made to fit her personality. Gary acted as if he were ashamed to play the part of Tom, yet had the original been reproduced he would have been ideal.

The whole thing was so astounding that we searched for an explanation and found one. With economy in keeping with the times, they bought the story, used the names of the characters for this atrocity. Later they expect to produce the plot under the title of "Lost Ecstasy" and thus get double value. But here are two people who will not be there to see it. In fact, we have not attended a movie since.

TENSLEEP.

Editor's Note: For ways that are dark the heathen Chinee has little on the movie producer. (Sometimes.)

Likes "The Last Flight."

Dear Miss Tinée: I saw the picture "The Last Flight" and thought it delightful and touching, and this morning read your review of it, which expresses my reaction so perfectly I wanted to thank you. You have put into words just what I felt about the picture and think Helen Chandler was, as you say, "intuitive" in her rendition of the whimsical, gay but unsmiling Nikki.

I am sending this appreciation because from remarks made by several persons who sat near me in the audience that "it was the worst show they had ever seen," I have no doubt you will receive plenty of knocks from the undiscerning persons who are not the kind that would understand and value the underlying quality you describe so neatly as "vague, eerie, Alice in Wonderland-ish."

Here is one who was moved and charmed beyond measure, and I am sure there are many more who will likewise love this film, but may not tell you so. Sincerely, MARY CULP.

Editor's Note: It was a lovely picture, wasn't it! You were thoughtful to write.

A Kindly Letter.

Dear Miss Tinée: I'm right behind you when it comes to giving Lowell Sherman a big hand. I have my favorite screen actors and actresses who play excellently, but I'd walk across the city, if necessary, to see Lowell Sherman on the screen. I hardly know what it is, the play does not have to boast much of a plot, the dialogue can be as dull reading as so and so's expedition in the Far East, but when the curtain goes up and Sherman takes the center of the stage it's sure to be the best show in town.

He looks like a million dollars in his clothes, he has an A-1 stage presence, and when he speaks, no matter how dull and ordinary the lines, he puts them over with a bang; everything is done smoothly, well turned, polished, an eyebrow lifted here, a shrug of the shoulders, a wink, all done with a finesse and the perfection of a fine actor.

There, thank you for your "verie kind attention." I never miss your column and, though I've never written you before and perhaps won't again, I want to say that the World's Greatest Newspaper would lose some of its greatness if your column was left out.

Again I offer my profound admiration. It goes for all our house.

E. G. M.

Editor's Note: Mr. Sherman thanks you, THE TRIBUNE thanks you, and I thank you.

October Stirs Stage Season to Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

ury, and some faint glimmering of intelligence in regard to the period in which its story has been placed is required of the playgoer.

The Italian Renaissance is the frame for "The Venetian." It corresponds to the Elizabethan period in England; and it implies, so far as the stage is concerned, a large amount of base conduct, frequent back-stabbings and wine poisonings, and a bustling activity in artistic, intellectual and political affairs. In other words, it is an excellent background for a romantic play—a time of hot passions and gay pageantry in which every one burned the candle at both ends and had a high old time.

This play, handsomely staged by Maurice Browne, is a satisfactory treatment of its material from a modern point of view. It avoids the sawdust theatricalism which curses costume drama. Its characters are thoroughly alive, and they speak a forthright, lucid English which is as frank, at times, as the talk of comedians in a bawdy Broadway revue. If romance with historical trimmings is ever to make a fresh start on the American stage, it will be with plays like "The Venetian."

Romantic Acting.

But if you remain cold to the fascinations of the flamboyant years when the city of Florence was preparing itself as an objective point for future generations of American tourists, you will certainly respond to the acting of Margaret Rawlings as the stirring Bianca, and Wilfrid Walter as her princely paramour. Here are players of high skill and personalities of winning address. Miss Rawlings I have tagged as a little, unsentimentalized Jane Cowl. Mr. Walter has the gifts for leadership in grand romantic rôles.

When the accidental closing of a door caused a change in the destiny of "The Venetian's" heroine, I found myself skeptical about the existence of spring locks at the time of the Italian Renaissance. The author of this play may be an authority on antique door-locks, but I shall demand confirmation from the Chicago Museum of Industry before I believe in this episode.

Showboat Ahoy!

This column's outcry for showboats last summer seems to have started something. Ralph T. Kettering, manager of the Adelphi theater, says that he is rebuilding an ancient hulk, discovered in the shipyards of Sheboygan, and hopes to have a floating theater of 1,500 in the Chicago river before winter sets in.

Commodore Billy Bryant, now showboating in Cincinnati, is preparing to bring his company here to show us how his dock-end troupe can play Shakespeare. Instigated by George E. Wintz, known as "the king of the one-night stands," he hopes to secure a Chicago theater and turn his crew loose in it.

The showboat atmosphere, aside from the rough-and-ready acting, will be supplied by decorations in the lobby. There are at least three theaters available for this adventure—the Civic, the Princess, and the Cort. Rialto gossips are naming the Civic as the place where Commodore Bryant will hoist his ensign—possibly because that playhouse is on the river front.

New Plays for Gotham Stage; Five Openings

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Broadway will see five premières next week, including three dramas and two musical shows. Here are the announcements:

"Church Mouse"—Opens tomorrow night at the Playhouse. A comedy from the Hungarian which has been extensively produced abroad. William A. Brady is bringing forth the adaptation by the Hattons of the Paul Frank-Laszlo Fodor original. In the leading rôles will be Ruth Gordon and Bert Lytle.

"Lean Harvest"—Opens Tuesday night at the Forrest. A play by Ronald Jeans which ran during the summer in London. Leslie Banks and Nigel Bruce will be in the cast along with Vera Allen, Leonard Mudie, Patricia Calvert, Charles Esdale, and Molly Pearson.

"Everybody's Welcome"—Opens Tuesday night at the Shubert. The season's first musical comedy from the Shubert workshops. Harold Atteridge has prepared the libretto, Sam Fain the music, and Irving Kahal the lyrics. The players will include Frances Williams, Oscar Shaw, Harriette Lake, and Ann Pennington.

"Pillars of Society"—Opens Wednesday night at the 48th Street. The Ibsen play is the second production of Laurence Langner's repertory group. Among the actors will be Moffat Johnston, Armina Marshall, Dorothy Gish, Rollo Peters, Romney Brent, Fania Marinoff, Edgar Stehli, Jessie Busley, and Knowles Entrikin.

"The Cat and the Fiddle"—Opens Thursday night at the Globe. A romantic musical show by Jerome Kern and Otto Harbach. The large company will include Georges Metaxa, Bettina Hall, Eddie Foy Jr., Lawrence Grossmith, Dorothy Debenham, George F. Meader, Doris Carson, Odette Myrtil, and Jose Ruben.

Unknown Warrior

MAURICE BROWNE will appear in his London success, "The Unknown Warrior," at the Selwyn theater in four matinée performances, starting Sunday, Nov. 8 and closing the afternoon of Armistice day. Rosalinde Fuller is coming from London to play her original part. The play is from the pen of M. Paul Raynal.

After this engagement Mr. Browne will make an eight weeks' tour in "The Unknown Warrior" under the management of James B. Pond.

STAR IN "PRIVATE LIVES"

EDITH TALIAFERRO.

SHE has been leading ingenue and star of dozens of plays, of which "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" are the most easily remembered. Now, as a full blown, fascinating woman of the world, she co-stars with Donald Brian in Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," at the Erlanger theater.

Eugene O'Neill Ends Ten Year Solitude Hunt

Finds Content and Rest from City's Turmoil in Skyscraper.

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Eugene O'Neill has ended a ten year search for solitude. This isolation he has found in a luxurious apartment high above Park avenue's noisy taxicabs and hurrying throngs.

It is an ironic paradox that O'Neill should discover this escape from the crowds where he could work in peace right in the heart of the city.

He experimented with a half dozen other environments before he was won over as a hermit in the metropolis.

Lived in Lighthouse.

His first workshop was in a lonely lighthouse on the seacoast at Provincetown, Mass. Then he took a cottage amid the quiet of Bermuda, and from there slipped away to Shanghai, where he hoped to remain incognito.

Finally, he moved into an out-of-the-way chateau in Tours, France and stayed there for two years. He became weary of the place, and returned last summer with the announced intention of living on a plantation in Virginia.

He came to New York first, and fell in love once again with his old home town. He walked along the waterfront streets where, as a youth, he had mingled with sailors in the old-time saloons. He visited the old haunts he had frequented with his father, when the latter was a star in "Monte Cristo."

* *

Found City Best.

For ten years, O'Neill, weary of his wanderings, has been seeking a haven where he could settle down and work. And, like the prodigal son, he has returned home to find what he sought here in the city.

"I'm glad I spent those years abroad because it gave me a new perspective on my country and its people," he explained. "I think any writer must live abroad to get a true objective view of his native scene."

New Lady Teazle

ETHEL BARRYMORE will come to the Grand Opera House Oct. 19 in her revival of "The School for Scandal," in which she has just completed a tour of the Pacific coast and the northwest. She first acted the rôle of Lady Teazle in 1924 to the Sir Peter of her late uncle, John Drew, in a week's revival of Sheridan's comedy by the Players' club of New York.

This will be the first Chicago performances of the classic since Mrs. Insull's revival in June of 1925 in the Illinois theater.

Miss Barrymore is the third member of her family in direct descent to act Lady Teazle. Her grandmother, Mrs. John Drew, was a famed Lady Teazle, while it was the rôle in which her mother, Georgia Drew Barrymore, made her first appearance as the leading woman of Mrs. Drew's company in Philadelphia. Maurice Barrymore, Miss Barrymore's father, played not fewer than six rôles in "The School for Scandal" in his younger days on the English stage, while John Drew was a matinée idol forty years ago vis-à-vis with Ada Rehan and got his vogue largely on his performance as Charles Surface.

Miss Barrymore's company includes Walter Gilbert as Charles, McKay Morris as Joseph, C. H. Croker-King as Sir Peter, Herry Plimmer as Sir Oliver, A. G. Andrews as Moses, and Beatrice Terry as Mrs. Candour.

The engagement will be for two weeks, after which Miss Barrymore will take the play into New York.

Miss Cornell Wants to Act Roman Matron

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Katharine Cornell, who has become one of Broadway's foremost acting managers in her first year as a producer, already is planning her new play for next season. It is to be "The Rape of Lucrece," a French dramatization based upon Shakespeare's poem.

Miss Cornell sailed this week for a month's vacation in Bermuda. She will return Nov. 16 to reopen in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." This story of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's romance has been one of New York's leading hits since it opened last February, and its popularity forecasts that it will remain on Broadway all winter.

Miss Cornell's rôle requires her to be upon the stage every moment from the time the first curtain rises until a few seconds before the end. She found the task exhausting and decided upon a six weeks' rest.

Although there was no extraordinary success among the new plays of the past week, several of them offer diverting evenings. "Payment Deferred" is an English murder melodrama of novel aspects. In addition to its unusual plot it is distinguished by the performance of Charles Laughton from London.

"The Good Companions," another English importation, is a gigantic picturesque show of character parts. It is a dramatization of J. B. Priestley's novel. Elmer Rice, who revealed a panorama of New York life in his "Street Scene," does the same for Paris in "Left Bank." In this drama he chides the American expatriates who prefer a French Bohemia to the comforts of their native land.

"Cherries Are Ripe," which has been headed for Broadway for more than a year, again has been sidetracked. This is the Anita Loos and John Emerson comedy which was given on tour all last year by Rod La Rocque and Vilma Banky.

Several weeks ago these two were replaced by Basil Sydney and Mary Ellis, but a manager, Arch Selwyn, still was not satisfied with his cast. So the comedy has been temporarily withdrawn and will be brought forth later with two other stars.

Elmer Rice has already written a new drama called "Counsellor-at-Law," and it will have Paul Muni in the lead. . . . Jed Harris opens his season with "Wonder Boy," another satire on movie producers. Hazel Dawn is to be the star. . . . Nikita Balieff of "Chauve Souris" is back to stage a new show on Broadway.

In Classics

VIOLA ROACHE of the Chicago Civic Shakespeare society's company, began her career with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in London. Following several tours with Sir Charles Wyndham, she accepted an engagement in Johannesburg, South Africa, where she played in "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," "As You like It," "Twelfth Night," and "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

As leading woman at the Copley theater in Boston she was seen in the plays of Shaw, Galsworthy, Milne, Barrie, and Shakespeare. A season with Milton Rosner in England followed, after which she returned to America for an engagement in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," with Ina Claire, and "The Woman Disputed," with Lowell Sherman and Ann Harding.

She has also appeared in many films for the M. G. M. and Paramount firms.

Travel Talk.

"France and the Colonial Exposition," first of the new series of E. M. Newman's travel talks, will be given at Orchestra hall next Wednesday and Friday evenings and Saturday afternoon.

Noel Coward's Plays Popular; B'way Gossip

"Improper Duchess," with Irene Bordoni as Star, to Be Withdrawn.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The prevalence of Noel Coward's works on the American stage—he wrote "Private Lives," you may remember, and some of the numbers in "The Third Little Show"—arouses interest in a project to revive his comedy called "Hay Fever." Constance Collier will have the rôle that Laura Hopes Crews acted at Maxine Elliott's theater several years ago. The most recent staging of "Hay Fever" was by the Goodman repertory theater of Chicago last winter, with Margaret Wycherly as the featured player.

Maurice Browne's production of "The Improper Duchess," by Bernard Fagan, will have only a brief life on the American stage, although it was a sizable hit in London. It will be offered next week in Hartford and Providence, but will go no farther. It was intended for the Shubert circuit of subscription theaters, including Chicago. Irene Bordoni has the leading rôle.

Sidney Howard's new play, called "Yellow Jacket," deals with the efforts to eradicate yellow fever from the Caribbean ports which followed the Spanish-American war. It derives, more or less, from a chapter of Paul De Kruif's interesting book called "Microbe Hunters." Arthur Hopkins has a lien on "Yellow Jacket."

"A Modern Virgin" closes its tour in Detroit tonight. Roger Pryor and Margaret Sullavan are probable members of the cast of "Blessed Event," a comedy that the Shuberts now have on their shelves.

Florence Nightingale, whose name will always be associated with women's relief work for armies in the field—she started in the Crimean war—will be the heroine of a play called "The Lady with a Lamp." Leslie Banks, the English actor now in "Lean Harvest," will stage the play for Managers McGowan and Reed, and Edith Evans will come from London to play the famous nurse. Rehearsals will begin Oct. 21. Reginald Berkeley is the author.

Queenie Smith's new operetta will be called "The Little Racketeer." It comes from the German stage, where it bore the same title—a fact which suggests that Berlin has gone in for rackets. Paul Ash and his band will figure in the entertainment.

An English actress rejoicing in the name of Lady George Cholmondoley will soon begin a Canadian tour in a series of plays and dance programs. Galsworthy's "The Silver Box" is on her list. The dance programs will include something called "a play by Rabelais."

Helen Hayes has returned to New York from Hollywood to begin rehearsals for Molnar's "The Good Fairy," which Gilbert Miller will stage. The first performance will be given in Washington Nov. 9, and a week in Pittsburgh will follow.

Irving Berlin and Moss Hart are writing a musical show which will employ a revolving stage and other elaborate mechanical devices. If nothing happens it will appear in New York before the Christmas holidays. The boys haven't agreed upon a title as yet. . . . Frank Craven has written a new play, variously described as a melodrama and a dramatic comedy. John Golden will produce it.

English Actor Wins Cheers on Gotham Stage

Charles Laughton, in "Payment Deferred," Plays Character Role.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The English actor who played Tony Perelli, gangster, in the London production of "On the Spot" has been brought to America by Gilbert Miller in a murder play called "Payment Deferred," which was done at the Lyceum last week.

His name is Charles Laughton, and he has had the somewhat unique experience at home of coming late to the theater and topping the list of character actors in five or six seasons. He was 27 when he made his first stage appearance in 1926, after winning a gold medal at a dramatic school. Since then he has played many parts, and his popularity with the crowd has increased with each of them.

In "Payment Deferred" he is given opportunity of running the gamut of the emotions about which less is heard these days than formerly. His character is that of William Marble, a flabby, beady eyed bank clerk, down on his luck and resentful. Living a lower middle class life in a lower middle class neighborhood, he is much in need of funds.

One evening, when he is fearing the collectors, there comes a young man to call on him. He is a nephew from Australia, has just arrived in London. He has no other relatives on that side of the world and, the estate of his parents having been recently settled, he is well supplied with money. He is also a cagey young man and refuses to loan uncle any of his money. So uncle poisons him and buries his body in the garden.

Haunted by Conscience.

Thereafter, for three tortured acts, William Marble, murderer, is haunted by his conscience as relentlessly as was Matthias in "The Bells." He fears the slamming of doors, the sound of bells, the chatter of people passing in the street, the shouts of children. If any one is seen even so much as raking the garden, he is threatened with hysteria.

He profits from his crime to the extent of some thirty thousand pounds and is able to set his wondering wife and daughter up in style. But disaster follows every move he makes.

He buys a new set of garish furniture, and riding into the house with it comes a little French shopkeeper from just around the corner who proceeds to seduce and blackmail him out of thousands.

He sends his daughter to a fine school in France, where she is promptly lifted out of her natural class and becomes so disgusted with her old home and her old father that when she comes back she takes to being a hostess in a night club.

He buys his wife a new outfit of clothes and a holiday at Bournemouth [so he may have his way with the French girl], but she comes back to him distressed in mind and suspicious. Finally, she has his secrets from him and the shock is so great that she herself drinks poison and is dead on the second floor when the doctor comes—dead of poison she had not the strength to come downstairs to get for herself, the doctor says, which makes it likely at the play's end that William Marble will swing for a murder he did not commit, even though the body buried in the garden is never discovered.

Heavy and Cheerless.

It is a heavy and cheerless play, but fascinating in the way mysteries are. Mr. Laughton, of course, acts Marble to the hilt, the picture of misery incarnate, a sensitive register for all the emotions haunted men are prey to.

For my own part, this type of acting leaves me cold. Character actors are bound to be stage conscious. Laughton is noticeably so, being deliberate in reaching for effects and toying with them. Too frequently it is possible to catch him working at his trade, and that is devastating to illusion and story. But that he is technical master of that trade there is no doubt. He has many believable and impressive moments in repose.

An actress in his company, Cicely Oates by name, outplayed her star in the quiet realities she brought to the rôle of the suspicious wife. She, too, started with fright, blanched with fear, trembled with apprehension, stood stark and staring at the realization of horrible truths, wept with sympathy, and comforted with understanding—and never once were you conscious of a single actress' trick.

"Payment Deferred" is the type of melodrama that makes theater going an exciting business for the young and for those of their elders who are open minded and susceptible. These have been standing to cheer Mr. Laughton at the close of each performance.

Merits High Praise.

I think there is more real drama, more depth of feeling, more sound artistry in the production of Paul Green's "The House of Connelly" by a Theater Guild subsidiary than in any other play of the new season, to date. This play, incidentally, has been in the Guild's possession for two seasons. Whether the managers lacked courage to do it, or were doubtful of its appeal, I do not know. In any event, last summer they turned it over to a group of their younger members with the promise that they could put it in rehearsal if they liked and see what would come of it.

The young people took the script and several others and went away into a sort of artists' camp in Connecticut. There they turned a barn into a theater and rehearsed their plays all summer. When they had "The House of Connelly" ready they asked Mr. Green and the Guild executives to see them play it. The result was so greatly in their favor that the Guild financed a production for the play.

Mr. Green's drama is the story of a disintegrating family, proud in its memory of happier days in the old south. The house of Connelly is a decaying house. Its men, down to the current generation represented by young Will Connelly, are lustful, lazy, washed out, through. Its women are led by a proud mother standing [with the aid of a crutch] firmly by her traditions and her memories, still leaning on the glory of old General Connelly, who fought the war and begat illegitimate offspring, and include a pair of spinster sisters crushed and anemic, but also loyal.

* *

Fates Move In.

A family of poor whites, named Fate, move in as tenant farmers and the daughter, Patsy, hungry for land, plans to seduce Will for his, and Will, hungry for love, takes it from Patsy.

The result is cataclysmic in the Connelly family. Will's uncle Robert, lecherous and modestly alcoholic, shoots himself through his poor weak old head to preserve his pride, Mother Connelly dies of a stroke, and the sisters desert and flee to Atlanta.

But Will holds true, marries Patsy, and she, come to honor and believe in their true love, takes her place as mistress of the house of Connelly with her common blood surging exultantly through her veins. The Guild juniors are not all suited as a type to the rôles the aristocratic south suggests, but they are fine players. Franchot Tone gives a magnificent performance as Will, and Margaret Baker plays well as Patsy. Mary Morris is distinguished and fine as the mother.

"Good Companions" Staged.

Most of the characters, but little of the spirit of high adventure that endeared the story of "The Good Companions" to its public, have come to the stage in a dramatization of the J. B. Priestley novel, which is a common enough report with dramatized novels. Nothing the theater folk can do can preserve the bloom the imagination puts on book characters.

There is good entertainment in "The Good Companions" for perhaps half its length. The gathering of the various parties to the adventure is promising.

Jess Oakroyd, the robust Yorkshireman, quarrels with the nagging missus, takes his kit of tools and his bag and starts off down the road. The gallant spinster, Elizabeth Trant, bowls along the motor ways and breaks down twixt Tumbleby and Rawsley, where Oakroyd manages to set her engine going again.

The disgusted Inigo Jollifant tosses up his job as a submaster in the Taverns' school, bundles his wisps of songs into his bag, collects his fifty-two pounds sterling and is off with Susie Dean and Morton Mitcham, show folk looking for a job.

They all meet at Rawsley, and there it is they come upon the concert party that was the dinky-dos, stranded and unhappy. There the Good Companions company is organized, with the aid of Miss Trant's money, and the great adventure is started.

Six Months Later.

They're still going six months later, which is the second division of the play. Much the same as to personnel. Mr. Jollifant is in love with Susie Dean, which provides a thread of romance, but Susie is fearfully afraid a husband would interfere with her career and will have none of him.

It is at Gatford that the crash comes. Mr. Wimpers, the cinema man, hires his thugs to break up the show and they do it successfully, tossing vegetables at the warbling pierrots and finally setting fire to the theater.

As a play I think the weakness of "The Good Companions" is its failure to concentrate interest on the adventures of the honest Oakroyd and Miss Trant. In a book story an author can be as diffuse and rambling as he pleases, so long as he is interesting. But in a play he has no time to ramble, and the thinner he spreads his story the less interesting it is.

An English cast has been imported or picked up from the local English colony for the playing of "The Good Companions." Valerie Taylor, who was the lovely Gainsborough lady in "Berkeley Square," is the Miss Trant, and her young husband, Hugh Sinclair, is playing Jollifant. They are the strength of the company. George Carney is the Oakroyd and Vera Lennox a fairly rough and ready Susie Dean. Edward Knoblock helped Priestley with the dramatization.

* *

Week's Plays Not So Good.

The rest of our drama this last week, though there was plenty of it, is not much worth talking about. A Vincent Lawrence play, "Washington Nights," was vicious in its nastiness and, praise be, lasted but a few days.

"Nikki," a musical comedy made from the John Monk Saunders stories, has found some friends, but hardly enough to keep it with us long. The musical hits of the town are the Aborn revivals of the older light operas. "The Chocolate Soldier" has just finished two big weeks, and "The Geisha" is to follow, with good old Jimmy Powers in his old rôle of Mun Hi, keeper of the teahouse.

In "Little Show"

WALTER O'KEEFE, who appears as master of ceremonies in the "Third Little Show" at the Great Northern, was a newspaper, advertising, and vaudeville writer up to 1928, when he authored his first show, "Just a Minute." The next spring, in Hollywood, he wrote his first song hit, "Little by Little," with Bobby Dolan.

Three seasons as master of ceremonies at the Club Gallant, New York, prepared him for the "Third Little Show." Notre Dame is his alma mater.

IN MUSICAL COMEDY

FLORIA WEST.

SHE is one of the principal entertainers in "Girl Crazy," the musical comedy now at the Garrick theater. Miss West is the brisk soubrette who leads a song now and then while Benny Rubin and Blossom Seeley are changing costumes.

The Armchair Playgoer

By Fanny Butcher.

IN NEW YORK.

The only openings in New York which armchair playgoers could attend last week were the revivals of two plays which have been revived often before, Dion Boucicault's "Streets of New York" and August Strindberg's "The Father." They will lure readers into the literature of their time, perhaps, and into the biographies of their authors.

AUGUST STRINDBERG.

Dion Boucicault was one of the most spectacular actor-playwrights of his day. His success began before he was 20 in a play called "London Assurance," which was produced in 1841. He died in New York in 1890, where he had made his home since 1875 and where as much of his reputation had been made as in London.

He was born in Dublin, the son of a French refugee and an Irish mother, and he was said to be the greatest stage Irishman of his day. Perhaps his most famous play was not an original play at all, but an adaptation of a novel by Gerald Griffin, called "The Collegians." The play was given the title "The Colleen Bawn." It was played in almost every city in the United Kingdom and the United States, and it made its author a handsome fortune.

August Strindberg, author of "The Father," was quite another sort of person. Born a generation later than Boucicault and in poverty, he lived his life long in suffering—physical privation as a child, mental turmoil as a youth, and hysterical spiritual disintegration as a man. He made two marriages, both of which were disastrous and both of which led him almost to insanity. There are many who think that he actually was insane.

"The Father" was written in 1887 during the stress of his first marital fiasco and shows the depressing effect of his persecution mania. It concerns the deliberate deluding by a wife of her husband into the belief that he is not the father of his much loved daughter. Insanity, always so near to the author himself, seizes the father and he is finally tricked into a strait-jacket by his old nurse. Only death solves his problem.

When the play appeared it naturally created a furor. It was a landmark of importance in the history of European realism. "Lady Julia" followed it in 1888, and other similar plays, most of which centered in the author's own marital tragedy. In those years [the years when Boucicault was living his last] Strindberg was writing his greatest novels, "The People of Hemso," which was published the same year as "The Father," and "In the Outer Skerries," which appeared in 1890, the year of Boucicault's death.

Strindberg's marriage was dissolved in 1891. His misery was accentuated by financial difficulties and insanity touched him more nearly than ever. He lived twenty-one years after that, however, piling up volumes. He is considered Sweden's greatest modern writer according to critics, and his work has exerted a deep and lasting influence on the European novel and drama.

Critics Often Too Severe with Cinema Epics

By Tom Pettey.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The old days of poking fun at the movies have gone, but a lot of people still like to pick flaws in the celluloid epics. Among the favorite subjects for highbrow magazines and Sunday supplements alike are:

"What is wrong with the talking pictures?"

"Censorship, or the purification of the films."

"Wastefulness in making pictures."

"The dearth of good, original material."

"The lack of art among the film artists."

One could go on and on, filling the page with these topics and still not scratch the surface of what has been written. For the most part the deluge of words has been filled with criticism. Few write in defense of the movies; it just is not profitable. The talkies need no defense, according to their makers, and whatever is written about them is just so much publicity for the old publicity mill. Nevertheless, this column is written in defense of the movies.

No Basic Mistake.

To begin with, there is nothing wrong with the movies. That is, nothing wrong in the sense of a fundamental, basic mistake. On the contrary, the talkies have made magnificent strides this season. The producers have produced the best of pictures, the players have grown in fame and ability, the industry has managed to hold up its head in the midst of depression. When the talkie houses show such pictures as "Street Scene," "Alexander Hamilton," and "Five Star Final" it is foolish to speak ill of the industry.

When such actors as George Arliss, the Barrymore brothers, and others of great skill find their greatest roles in the movies, why should we search for minor flaws?

A second popular topic is censorship. From time to time some highly misinformed writer predicts the downfall of the entire motion picture structure through this evil of evils. Certainly censorship becomes ridiculous at times, but it is necessary and has contributed a great deal to the industry. Without some form of censorship the movies would have hit a burlesque house level and remained there until doomsday.

I have seen just about as many raw scenes in the movies as I ever saw on the stage. It is to the credit of the censor that the films are washing up while the stage is reeking more strongly than ever. No one in a normal frame of mind would wish to see the talkies filled with dirt. For every goofy job of censoring such as putting dresses on Micky Mouse, clothing statues, or making all mothers married women, there have been constructive jobs such as the elimination of the pictures that glorify gangsters, the cutting of shots featuring scenes that might upset the digestive functions and the ban on profanity, except where it is essential to the plot of the picture.

Wastefulness Exaggerated.

Wastefulness in making pictures has been too highly exploited. It is true that there has been and possibly still is a lot of waste about the studios. For that matter, there is a lot of waste about newspaper offices, and banks have been known to fail because of "overhead." One of last season's film hits, "Hell's Angels," has demonstrated that gigantic expenditures running into the millions of dollars is not always money thrown away. If I am informed correctly, the above mentioned picture has paid a tidy profit to young Mr. Hughes, the "spendthrift."

Those producers who hire "talent" at fancy salaries and then make no use of the "talent" are not always dumb-bells. They have learned from experience that it is cheaper to keep a herd of "brains" on the scenario pay roll and pick off the real "ideas," if any, than it is to try to make pictures out of every "masterpiece" that is turned in. The movie folks are not the only ones who go in for "talent" in a big way.

I recall several stories in which high powered "talent" entered into competition with the working press. The publishers spent a lot of money, but they put the staff man's story in the lead. The "talent" provided the filler stuff. In one case I remember a one dollar a word man who arrived on the scene too befuddled to get into action. The local correspondent wired his agency to "sober up another genius." I call that extravagance.

Plenty of Good Material.

As for the dearth of good, original material, why look for original material when the libraries are full of unpictured masterpieces? The classics still offer an almost untouched mine of film material. In case present day literary compositions still are to be desired, the market is good. I saw Louis Bromfield's "Twenty-Four Hours" after the novel had been made into a play. It was as good as one could hope for. And as for original products, just give Eddie Cantor or any one of the four Marx brothers a cameraman and a stage and they will produce original matter in quantity and frequently quality.

The lack of art among the artists needs little explanation. There is no lack. The movie actors and actresses are giving as finished performances as the stage stars.

Week's Films Pepless.

Now, to tell you about a current picture. Ann Harding is on Broadway again. Her picture is called "Devotion" and deals in a charming manner with romance in an English barrister's home. Miss Harding plays the part of a girl grown tired of the humdrum life in her household. She goes out into the world disguised as a middle aged governess and gets employment in the lawyer's home.

Ann Harding in wig and spectacles loses an indefinable something. I like her better as Ann Harding. Nevertheless, the picture will get you.

Notre Dame's Four Horsemen are riding again, but not on college gridirons. They are being featured, with Lew Ayres, in "The Spirit of Notre Dame," the current film at the State-Lake theater.

Indian Summer Brings Chicago Playhouses into Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

AFTER attending and reviewing six premières within eight days to celebrate the grand fall opening of the Chicago theatrical season, one's mind becomes a haze of mixed impressions. Floating around in the fog, however, there are a series of wonderments. For example:

I wonder if Walker Whiteside knows that his frequent expectoration upon the stage, in the rôle of the spitting Irishman in "Surf," dilutes rather than fortifies that South Seas melodrama?

I wonder if Phil Baker and Ted Healy, the aggressive and reckless jesters of the revue called "Crazy Quilt," know that dozens and hundreds of average theater-goers, before buying their tickets to any show, ask me: "Is it clean?"

I wonder if Maurice Browne, who is offering "The Venetian" under the auspices of the Dramatic League of Chicago, knows that the finger of destiny has begun to point in his direction as the Siegfried to arouse the Goodman theater from its present state of coma?

I wonder if Donald Brian, co-starring with Edith Taliaferro in "Private Lives," will tell me the location of the fountain of youth from which he apparently quaffs magic draughts that preserve him as a perpetual Prince Danilo?

I wonder if Beatrice Lillie of "The Third Little Show" isn't the only comedienne in history whose sense of humor refused to be ruined by the acquisition of a British title?

I wonder if Gregory Ratoff, who has brought "Girl Crazy" into Chicago in order to fulfill a vow made upon all the ikons of old Russia, is the Morris Gest of the future?

I wonder why Chicago theater managers continue to use the huddle system for their first nights?

I wonder if the play going year in this town will sustain the spirited pace at which it has started?

Finger of Destiny.

My speculations upon the possibility of Maurice Browne's assuming the directorate of a new repertory company at the Goodman theater, perhaps a year hence when Chicago is dressing its windows in readiness for the Century of Progress exposition, have a background in rumor. There has been some slow burning talk on the subject. The trustees of the Goodman, however, are saying nothing, according to their custom, and Mr. Browne himself has dropped no hint of ambitions in this direction.

He seems to be a logical candidate for this labor of Hercules, if Hubert Osborne does not return to the Goodman, and I rise to place him in nomination. His qualifications are numerous. He is a pioneer of the art theater movement in this country; he has a Chicago background, and a loyal following. He has risen from "little" to "big" theater status. His shy beginning on the fourth floor back of the Fine Arts building twenty years ago has carried him to leadership on the London stage and rating as an international impresario. He has given a convincing demonstration of executive prowess as well as art theater ideals.

On the other hand, his control of the Goodman might be too remote. He has many irons in the fire; he is the lessee or owner of two important theaters in London; he contributes plays to the commercial American stage. As a hypothetical director of the Goodman, his authority would probably be delegated, through most of the year, to the lieutenants that he might place in charge there.

These remarks are intended as first aid to the finger of destiny. If they are wasted, I shall have to find myself another candidate, and probably will begin to cast flirtatious eyes at Eva Le Gallienne.

Flaming Florentines.

Your affection for "The Venetian," which came to Chicago for its American première after a prosperous engagement in London, will depend largely upon your taste for "costume plays." When the drama gets into "costume" it also invades his-

Despite all his medals, Warren Williams appears to be upset about something, but apparently his tirade is giving Bebe Daniels little to worry about. The picture is "Honor of the Family," and it's on display at the present time at the Oriental theater.

By Edward Moore.

ONE of the early performances of the season, promises the Chicago Civic Opera company, will be Mozart's "The Magic Flute." It will be, as far as Chicago's opera is concerned, a novelty, and it is also going to take a lot of casting.

About a quarter century has passed since the work went on here by a professional company. The last performance would seem to have been the time when Fritzi Scheff spilled the operatic beans by appearing as Papagena and getting more applause than the diva who sang the part of the Queen of the Night thought any Papagena was entitled to. It led to feelings and atmosphere not altogether those of sweetness and light, certainly not in the nature of Mozart's golden melodies.

Splendid Cast Chosen.

Papagena, by the way, is not mentioned in the program sent out by the opera company. But for the rest, here is what the company has assembled in the way of a stellar cast. It includes three highly specialized sopranos, a leading contralto, a leading tenor, a leading baritone, a buffo baritone, and a leading basso. They are thus itemized:

Sarastro	Alexander Kipnis
Astrofiammente	Nöel Eadie
Pamina, her daughter	Maria Rajdl
Queen's lady	Frida Leider
Queen's lady	Maria Olszewska
Prince Tamino	Paolo Marion
The Orator	Rudolf Bockelman
Papageno	Eduard Habich
Monostatos	Octave Dua

Conductor—Egon Pollak.

One of the reasons why Herbert Witherspoon made a trip to Europe last summer was to hunt up a coloratura soprano up to the music of Astrofiammente, who is otherwise known as the Queen of the Night. He had auditions here and there, in Paris, Berlin, Munich, and Salzburg, before making his choice. Finally he set-

Regis Toomey is registering stark terror in this scene from "24 Hours," the photoplay adapted from Louis Bromfield's novel of the same name. Miriam Hopkins, shown above; Clive Brook, and Kay Francis also are in the picture, which is at the Chicago.

Fresh from many movie triumphs in their laugh provoking shorts, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy may be seen at the Roosevelt in their first full length picture. The gentleman with the mean looking forceps is James Santell. But maybe they're not real.

This is a puzzle picture. Try to find Hardie Albright, the smiling star of the stage success, "Young Sinners," and Maureen O'Sullivan, recently imported from the "Ould Sod," in this scene from "Skyline" at the Palace theater. (Note: They are in the center.)

Here is something for the children as well as grownups. Leon Janney with "Zip-Zip the Cannaball" in "Penrod and Sam," from Booth Tarkington's famous novel of the same name. It is showing at the Woods for the week.

Good morning!

"The Spirit of Notre Dame" is dedicated to the memory of the late Knute Rockne, famous and beloved head coach of a history making football team. You will remember that Mr. Rockne was on his way to the coast to complete a contract for some two reel football shorts when the airplane crash occurred that cost his life.

This picture's release at the start of the football season and on the eve of the Notre Dame-Northwestern game is timely and something in the nature of a stroke of genius on the part of the producers. Every football fan will want to see it. Every friend and admirer of Rockne will want to see it, while folks who don't know much about affairs of the gridiron, but like to keep up with current conversation, will buy tickets just to get a glimpse of the famous "Four Horsemen," Don Miller, Jim Crowley, Harry Stuhldreher, and Elmer Layden.

"Are those fellows really in this film?" you ask.

You bet they are! In closeups and in action.

* *

You See Them at Work.

You see their work in the Notre Dame-Army encounter cleverly inserted via news reel. As for the closeup—don't they all autograph a football for a small, enthusiastic boy who sentimentally requests their signatures?

"And now, what are you going to do with it, Sonny?" asks one of the four, fatuously.

"I'm goin' to sell it to a guy for ten bucks," replies mamma's little business man.

O, before I forget it—don't ever again pronounce Carideo with the accent on the "rid." It's Car-ri-day-o, bearing down hard on the "day." If you don't believe it, hear Frank himself give you the lowdown in the picture. And he ought to know!

Little Love Stuff.

As far as the actual football stuff goes, "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is fine! And J. Farrell McDonald seems to me the best man who could have been picked to represent Rockne. He bears an astonishing resemblance to the great coach and is a seasoned and sincere actor. He and his team, at practice, at play, and in their little human communions are convincing. It is not their fault that soppy hokum has been introduced into the story, nor should they be criticized for participation in the same. I won't go into detail about the regrettable mush

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY RULE STILL GOOD IN SCHOOLS

Chicago a Pioneer in Physical Training.

BY IRENE STEYSKAL.

A lot of cold, unbiased testing seems to have forced oblivion upon any number of the good old axioms and maxims, but there is one—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," it goes—that apparently has not suffered from a waning of popularity. As far as we know it never has been so much as questioned; certainly not by our law making body in Springfield, which considered it worthy of legislation.

Since laws are generally couched in more formal terms, however, the gentlemen who make them downstate proclaimed that "physical culture" should be taught in the public schools. Since that time each locality has been working out, according to its immediate needs and means, its own program of execution.

In the Chicago schools an attempt to introduce instruction in physical education was made as early as 1863. Definite steps were taken in 1885 following a demonstration of exercises in the Ogden school made by the Chicago Turngemeinde. A committee was appointed by the board of education to formulate a program, an instructor was chosen and provision made for physical education classes at the Lincoln, Brown, Douglass, and King schools.

Chicago Leads Nation.

Chicago was the first city in the country to appoint [the following year] a supervisor of physical education. Henry Suder was the man appointed to the new post, a position which he held for 37 years.

A red letter year for Knute Rockne's alma mater, old Northwest Division High school, now Tuley, was 1890 when it erected the first fully equipped high school gymnasium for the teaching of physical education. Six years later the Franklin school claimed the same record for elementary schools.

In 1911 began the transition from the old swimmin' hole. Hyde Park High school was the first school for boys and girls erected with gymnasia and a swimming pool.

Pritzlaff Present Director.

The bureau of physical education was reorganized in 1925 with the appointment of one director and three supervisors. Two years ago the present director, August H. Pritzlaff, succeeded E. C. Delaporte to that position.

Mr. Pritzlaff had been instructor of physical education, coach and dean of boys at Senn High school preceding his appointment to the directorship. Associated with Mr. Pritzlaff on the bureau as supervisors are H. R. Crook, Vera Gardiner, and Maj. F. L. Beals. Maj. Beals, assisted by Maj. H. H. Moore, is in charge of military training in the high schools. Under him are twenty-six instructors directing the R. O. T. C. units which are established in twenty senior high schools.

Under the supervision of Miss Gardiner and Mr. Crook are the Normal college, with eight teachers of physical education; Crane college, with six; there are 204 instructors in twenty-four senior high schools; seventy-five in twenty-seven junior high schools; the 302 elementary schools have 228 teachers; eleven continuation schools have two instructors; and there are five in the six prevocational schools. There are also 16 physiotherapists employed in the city's four schools for crippled children.

Phases of Physical Education.

Apart from the military training conducted by Maj. Beals, physical education in the public schools comprises physical education classes, corrective work, health education classes; athletic and after-school play; swimming instruction; and the safety patrols in the elementary and junior high schools.

Physical instruction in the kindergartens and elementary schools is, of course, more or less informal. In the kindergartens and through the third grade its consists largely of song games, story plays and the dramatization of activities in the school. From the third grade on a more formal course os provided.

A more definite and diversified program, made possible by equipment, time allotment and the teaching staff, is carried out in the junior high schools. The number of instructors in physical education—one for approximately every 650 pupils—in the junior high schools varies from one to five.

In almost every high school in the city a girls' athletic association is established. Awards for athletic activities are based on a point system that considers not only achievement but sportsmanship, scholarship, and health activities.

Boys of the junior high schools also have their athletic associations. While emphasis is placed in intramural competition, limited competition between schools is permitted in indoor baseball, basketball, swimming and track and field athletics.

Bruno Kluge President.

The program for athletics in the senior high schools, superimposed upon the courses followed in the junior high schools, provides for much wider competition between schools. A board of control made up of representatives, who are physical education instructors, from each high school formulates rules and regulates the conducting of interscholastic competition. Heading this group as president is Bruno Kluge of Bowen High school. George W. Steffens of Austin is vice president, and Mr. Pritzlaff serves as secretary and treasurer.

Games played for coveted city championships range all the way from chess and checkers to football. Lindblom is present holder of the football title. Last season Lindblom won championships also for cross country running and novice and senior gymnastics.

Senn claims championships for golf, ice skating in the senior class, indoor and outdoor track in the senior division, and swimming [25 yards] in the senior and junior divisions.

Other title holders are: Lane for tennis, junior ice skating and baseball; Roosevelt for junior outdoor and indoor track and fencing; Crane for basketball in the heavyweight class and soccer; Marshall for basketball in the lightweight class; Lake View for rifle markmanship; Englewood for swimming [20 yards] in the senior division; Schurz for swimming [20 yards] in the junior division, and Tilden for wrestling.

Tuley claims the checkers champion, and Austin came out with flying colors in the ches tournament.

READY FOR "Y" ROUNDUP

Cowboys are going to invade placid Englewood this week, and the occasion is the membership roundup of the Englewood Y. M. C. A., 66th street and Union avenue. OUR TOWN

Paragraphs About Some Folks You Know.

MRS. BENJAMIN C. ALLIN of 4805 Dorchester avenue has been entertaining a distinguished visitor in the person of her son, Col. Benjamin C. Allin, a former Our Towner. Col. Allin has just returned from a six months' sojourn in India and is giving his old friends quite a line on the changeless east. Incidentally, he did his bit toward changing it, helping a native prince to build a harbor in his realm.

The Klinger-Gruendl clan has double cause for rejoicing these days. A daughter, Rita Dolores, was born to the Edward L. Klingers of 7030 Aberdeen street a few days ago and her first cousin, George Jr., son of the George Gruendls of 1254 West 74th place, chose the same twenty-four hour span to make his entrance into the world.

Our good friends the Fred M. Klines of 7009 Calumet avenue have had quite a time of it. First Don's car was stolen, golf clubs inclosed. Then Edna deserted the family roof for the University of Illinois. And now the senior Klines—both Mr. and Missus—are suffering from severe cases of writers' cramp. Cause being, 150 notices for the Park Manor Woman's club opening had to be sent out by Mrs. Kline as corresponding secretary, and she finally pressed Fred into service around the old dining room table. The notices will be printed next year, if Fred has anything to say about it.

SPEAKING of the good offices of club women's husbands in boosting club activities, we wonder whether members of the Harvey Woman's club realize what they owe G. A. Not as president of the above institution, but as husband of the president of the Harvey Woman's club, he has sent us two communications regarding club doings.

Here's a party given by the guests for the hosts. When Mr. and Mrs. P. L. INSTALLATION OF NEW ENGLEWOOD LIGHTS STARTED

White Way Will Glow Late This Fall.

Englewood's white way got under way Monday when the Commerical Light company, which installed the State street system in the loop, started installation of the underground work on 63d street between Halsted and Peoria streets.

The 6300 block on Halsted street is the other stretch now signed up 100 per cent and work is to be started on it as soon as the installation is complete on 63d street. The work will then be continued in the block which is nearest to 100 per cent signed.

Storm of Protest.

An announcement several weeks ago that work would start at once on the strip now under way brought such a storm of protest from merchants in the other blocks that it was postponed to give them time to procure signatures. The result was especially pleasing in the 6200 block, which is about 90 per cent complete, according to Mr. Donne.

Signatures now aggregate 85 per cent in the 6400 block and slightly less than that on 63d street from Halsted street to Union avenue.

Expectations are that as soon as installation is done on the two 100 per cent strips at least one more block will be ready for the light crew. The new lights are expected to glow on 63d street between Peoria street and Union avenue and on Halsted street between 62d and 65th streets before the fall is over.

$7,000 Cost Per Block.

The merchants are spending a little more than $7,000 a block, or $6 a foot, for the installation of their new lights. There will be two 750 watt lamps on each pole. These are being set approximately 75 feet apart and are 17 feet 6 inches high.

Harry Levinson is chairman of the light committee of the Englewood Business Men's association. Others on the committee and those particularly instrumental in pushing the project have been Leonard Fish, association president, under whom the plan was launched; Mr. Donne, Sam Maling, William Tegtmeier, A. W. Bimrose, Elmer Krauter, Benjamin F. Bellis, and the late Herman Eggers.

Hamilton Park Discussion Group to Meet Tomorrow

Continuing the session of last Monday, members of the Hamilton Park Discussion group will bring suggestions for character development to a special meeting tomorrow evening at Hamilton park fieldhouse, 72d street and Normal boulevard.

Neighborhood Theaters

"Dirigible," hailed as one of the best pictures of the spring, has been sidetracked for some mysterious reason, but at last it's coming into its own. It will be shown Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at the RKO-Englewood theater; today and tomorrow at the Highland theater with "To Many Cooks"; and today and tomorrow with "Broad Minded" at the West Englewood theater.

This picture was made with the help of the navy, is dedicated to it, and is intended to give the public an intimate glimpse of what goes on in the air branch of the service. Jack Holt, the dirigible's commander; Ralph Graves, a seaplane ace; and Fay Wray, his wife, supply the human interest.

Lionel Barrymore at Capitol.

"Guilty Hands" and "Last Flight" are the Capitol theater's double offering this week. "Guilty Hands," from Bayard Veiller's melodrama, gives Lionel Barrymore another opportunity for a splendid performance as a state's attorney who justifiably commits the perfect crime. Kay Francis and Madge Evans are in the supporting cast.

"Last Flight" was made from John Mock Sanders' tragic-comic tale of a group of aviators and a girl at loose ends in Europe immediately after the armistice. Helen Chandler is appealing as Nikki, the distraught heroine. Richard Barthelmess, John Mack Brown, David Manners, Elliott Nugent, and Walter Byron are the aviators.

"Waterloo Bridge" and "Silence."

"Waterloo Bridge" and "Silence" are showing at the Stratford theater the latter part of the week. The former, acclaimed as one of September's best pictures, is a wartime story of a Canadian soldier and a woman of the streets who meet and part on Waterloo bridge. Kent Douglass and Mae Clarke play the leads. "Silence" gives Clive Brook occasion for another of his restrained portrayals as a man who faces death to save the daughter to whom he never gave his name. Marjorie Rambeau and Peggy Shannon are in this, too

John Gilbert in New Rôle.

John Gilbert has a new sort of rôle in "Phantom of Paris," showing Friday and Saturday at the Marquette and Highway theaters with "Transatlantic." He is a magician, wrongfully accused of murdering the father of the girl he loves who, by his ingenuity, reveals the true murderer. Leila Hyams is the girl.

PARKER FORUM AND GIRLS' DRUM CORPS FORMED

George Dennis Head of Clearing House.

Parker Senior High school boasts two new organizations this year, the student forum and the girls' drum and bugle corps. The forum was organized by Thomas C. Johnson, principal, to serve as a clearing house of student ideas on the adminstration of school affairs.

Representatives are elected from every class and organization by students and teachers in order to give expression to every type of student opinion.

Smoking on the school premises, glass breakage, cafeteria service and attendance at study halls are projects in which the forum so far has interested itself. The forum acts on these matters through the influence of individual members on their circle of friends.

George Dennis Heads Forum.

George Dennis is president of the forum; Gordon Zwissler is vice president, and Miss Dorothy Anderson is secretary. Members, each of whom represents a student group, are Samuel Angelich, Miss Janet Baitzer, Richard Borling, Gaylord Brunille, Miss Catherine Carl, Donald Curran, Donald Elliott, Miss Dorothy Elrick, Paul Grimes, and Robert Hallenbeck.

Robert Harper, Miss Dorothy Houseman, Pat Kane, Miss Gertrude Kellogg, James Kerry, Miss Gertrude Lawrence, Miss Louise Malloy, Miss Frances Meyers, Rudolph Mohrien, Frank Naylor, Frank Nekimken, Michael O'Brien, John Shoop, Miss Elaine Skelton, William Smith, Walter Snodell, William Snyder, Edward Snyder, Miss Mary Swearingen, Harvey Taylor, Miss Jean Winter, and Miss Suzanne Weast also are in the forum.

Parker has followed up the success of its new band by organizing an auxiliary body, a girls' drum and bugle corps.

The Parker band has elected officers for the semester. William Winter is president, Miss Florence McCarthy secretary-treasurer, Frank Naylor business manager, and Edward Cornell librarian.

Girl Again Is Editor.

Miss Coral Griswold, the new editor of the "Green and White," school paper, is the seventh consecutive girl editor of the weekly. Her staff includes: Patrick Kane, business manager; William Kennefick, sports editor; William Smith, assistant sports editor; Paul Grimes, editor of Sieve, humor column; Alvin Walgren, advertising manager; James Hynes, assistant advertising manager.

Reporters are Miss Evelyn Dyce, Miss Florence Kelley, Miss Jean Winter, Miss Catherine Burton, Miss Rosemary Stokes, Miss Isabella Thomson, and Miss Margaret Camp. Louis Brook is faculty sponsor.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, Oct. 12.

Rake up bare spots in the lawn, scratch with steel toothed rake, sow grass seed over it, and germination will quickly occur. A little commercial fertilizer will stimulate the young plants into vigorous growth and enable them to endure through the winter. If it is desired to keep root crops outdoors through the winter prepare the place now, before severe frosts. Carrots, late cabbage, beets (not too old and woody), potatoes, sweet potatoes, and turnips may be kept by this method.

Tuesday, Oct. 13.

Some of the early hardy chrysanthemums are bursting into bloom. A new yellow sort, known as Valerine, is a low growing variety attractive for Chicago and vicinity. Keep an eye open for varieties that come into early bloom because only the extremely early kinds can be depended on for a display. Continue to make cuttings of tender plants that have been growing outdoors. Pot a few plants, cutting back at the time of lifting.

Gladiolus that have ripened their leaves should be dug, the excessive soil removed, the corms dried for a few hours, and later placed in a cool, dry basement over winter. Save all bulbils of the rare kinds for future planting. Exchange with gardening friends.

Dahlias may be dug, or the tubers left in the ground until frost. Lift the tubers without breaking because they keep better. Cut off the stems a few inches above the ground before digging. Do not neglect labeling securely. Place a six inch layer of sand on the cellar floor, pack the tubers in layers, covering each layer with dry sand or peatmoss, and cover the top layer with a five or six inch layer.

Wednesday, Oct. 14.

Try a few of the bulbous iris in a sheltered and well drained situation, such as a rock garden. Pansies and violas may be propagated from cuttings at this time, an excellent method of preserving an outstanding variety. Remove the side shoots, with a few roots attached, if possible, and insert them firmly in sandy soil in a cold frame or box which may be placed in the frame. Cover the sash with boards during cold weather. Many other plants may be increased in this way. Plant narcissus bulbs for their effect in the perennial borders, or for naturalizing with shrubs or in the outlying sections of the grounds.

Thursday, Oct. 15.

Bring in the amaryllis from out of doors, gradually dry them off by reducing the supply of water from day to day, and store in a dry, cool place. They become active toward January, at which time they may be repotted. Many inquiries regarding the proper distance apart that street trees should be planted have been received. The elm, which is popular, should be used on wide streets, and planted 50 feet apart. Elms never attain their maximum beauty if planted close together. The hard maple is also a large growing tree and should be used on wide streets. Plant the ash and tree of heaven on narrow streets and 40 feet apart. Use one species along a street instead of a miscellaneous assortment with a different habit of growth. The box elder, poplar, catalpa, and willow must be sparingly used, or planted where nothing else will grow. They are short lived and easily injured by storms.

Friday, Oct. 16.

When planting hedges, and especially the privet, plant at least three to six inches deeper than the lowest branch of the plant. These plants root along the stems and deep planting makes a thicker hedge. When planting cut to within six inches of the ground to force the dormant buds into vigorous activity. Mulch after the ground freezes. Plant a pussy willow (salix caprea has the largest catkins) for a supply of bouquet material in early spring. The native species (salix discolor) has smaller flowers, but is very good. Quarter inch mesh wire will keep rabbits from injuring trees.

Saturday, Oct. 17.

Plant a few shrubs or low trees to attract birds. Useful plants for this purpose are the chokeberry, spicebush, Japanese barberry, cornelian cherry, some dogwoods, Morrow's honeysuckle, mulberry, smooth and staghorn sumac, elderberry, mountain ash, snowberry, Indian currant, snowball, vinurnum dentatum, lantana, lentago, prunifolium, and tomentosum. Wild grape twiggy shrubs form nesting places. Plant some hybrid lilacs to furnish a range of free flowering, tall shrubs, and in unusual colors.

ANGLER TOURNEY CALLED AS FISH CLUTTER LAGOON

Catch All You Can in Hour and Win Prize.

There's going to be a free-for-all fishing tournament Saturday. It's going to be down in Washington park, where Edward Kelly, the boatman, says the fish are so plentiful this year that it is impossible to row boats through the lagoon.

"They're vicious, too!" he said. "They snap at horses which cross the bridle path bridge and jump at birds on overhanging branches."

V. K. Brown, superintendent of playgrounds and sports, said he understood that they were even chasing each other up trees. He opined this was probably dogfish chasing catfish, but it was impossible to substantiate this story.

A hundred ideas were hatched on Mr. Kelly's urgent demand for immediate relief. Suggestions of seining and dynamite were dismissed when one official thought of a fishing tourney. So a fishing tourney it is. It is to be sponsored by the Izaak Walton league, but is open to all.

Limited to Midday Hours.

So Saturday has been set aside as the day. Fishing will start at 9 o'clock in the morning and continue until 3 in the afternoon. These hours were decided on because it was thought that early morning or late afternoon fishing would be taking undue advantage of the finny creatures. It also is figured that the usual midday fish siesta will not prevent some fine catches.

Entries will be received all day Thursday at the boat landing in Washington park. There will be no fee and no age limit. Fifty rowboats will be provided for the contest, two entrants in each boat. But each contestant will be allowed to fish just one hour, a whistle to punctuate the starting and finishing times.

Prizes will be given not only to the person snaring the largest fish and the one with the largest catch, but plans are being made to reward the man who loses the "biggest one" and to the person with the best fish story to tell as a result of his day's experiences.

Stocked Last Year and This.

Lest any one should doubt that there is an oversupply of the finny creatures in the Washington lagoon, it should be known that the place was heavily stocked last spring—and also last year. Mr. Brown said that copious quantities of young bass, pike, and bluegills were dumped into the lagoon and that there already were large numbers of catfish and other members of the bullhead family living there.

The other main event in the south parks Saturday is to be the football field day at 9:30 o'clock in the morning in the Washington park meadow. This is open to boys from 10 to 18, inclusive, with points being given on a graded scale according to age. A maximum of 20 boys is allowed from each of the 18 member playgrounds of the system.

Events include punting, drop kicking, place kicking, and forward passing. The best marks made by the south park lads are to be matched against those of boys from parks in other middle west cities. Since football always has been considered too tough a game for the younger boys, who make up the large percentage of those enrolled in the parks, the field day is set up as the football substitute. It is believed that this makes for better players than too much football when the boys are young.

PACKERS' NINE WINS INDUSTRIAL LEAGUE TITLE

The 6 to 5 victory of the Wilson's Certified nine representing Wilson & Co. over the Illinois Central shops of the Pullman company in the city championship series ended the 14th year of the Wabash avenue Y. M. C. A. Industrial Baseball league. The Wilson nine won the championship of the packing plant division while the Pullman company team had taken the title in the railroad division. There were eight teams in the packing company division, ten in the other.

The league is the outgrowth of the effort of the Wabash avenue department of the Y. M. C. A. to adjust the Negro worker who came from the south to fill the places in the stock yards industries left vacant by workers who had been called into the service in 1917 and 1918. It was during the spring of 1917 that Henry R. Crawford, then physical director of the Wabash branch, conceived the idea of taking up the spare time of these workers in some wholesome recreation.

The packing companies readily encouraged this program which in a few months included music organizations, efficiency clubs, and educational features. In a short time workers of all races drifted into the program.

Today there are the Armour Jubilee Singers, the Armour Efficiency club, the Swift Red Triangle band of 35 pieces, the Swift Efficiency club, the Wilson Efficiency and Choral club. These groups are all colored. The subsidiary companies of these three concerns are represented in these clubs.

A play, "The Patsy," probably will be presented, Mr. Van Dera said.

NEW MARKET TO PROVIDE WORK FOR 600 NEGROES

A new market, owned and operated by Negroes, was opened Thursday at the northeast corner of 51st street and Wabash avenue. The modern brick building, covering 24,000 square feet, with a 98 foot frontage on 51st street and a 245 foot frontage on Wabash avenue, is under long term lease to the South Side Marketing place, an Illinois corporation.

The market will be both an outdoor and indoor market and will sell both retail and wholesale. It has the indorsement of the Ten Year Progress Plan and Program for the Negro in Chicago. Edgar G. Brown, director of the latter, estimated that it will mean employment for more than 600 Negroes.

H. G. WELLS, ONCE FOE OF RADIO, TO MAKE U. S. BOW

Proves He's No Perfect Prognosticator.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

H. G. WELLS.
[Kadel & Herbert.]

H. G. Wells is by no means the perfect prognosticator. No longer ago than 1927 he ran up against radio and found it useless. The famous historian of the future pictured the invisible audience bored to death while a maze of aerials cluttered up the housetops like wire entanglements on the fields of France. Mr. Wells then doubted that even the most ardent fan's enthusiasm could last more than two weeks, and thought that radio listeners must be "very sedentary persons living in badly lighted houses or otherwise unable to read."

Since then Mr. Wells has got over his gloomy outlook and has been employing the ether waves to talk on "What I Would Do with the World." Next week he comes to New York and on Saturday evening he will speak over an NBC coast to coast net, including WENR.

Apparently no one gets homesick easier than a New Yorker abroad. As soon as Jimmy Walker hit the continent he was talking back over the radio. At 4 o'clock this afternoon Roxy is going to speak over NBC from Berlin.

The prince of Wales and John Masefield, poet laureate, will also be heard in international broadcasts this month. The prince is to speak at 2:45 p. m. Wednesday, Oct. 21, over CBS from London, and Masefield will discuss "Ships and Their Builders" at 2:30 the following afternoon on the same net.

When H. H. Rajput, Hindu graduate of Oxford and a former officer in the British intelligence service, came to Chicago to inaugurate his series of adventure stories based on war experiences he turned to the University of Chicago to get real Hindu music. He found there several students with native instruments, among them stringed affairs used in India for more than 2,000 years. Over the air they sound like flutes and other woodwinds.

James Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, dropped in to inspect the Hindu instruments, threw up his hands, and walked out.

Now that the nation's leading dance orchestras are playing college medleys nightly, MCA hastens to point out that 50 per cent of the nationally known orchestras attended college and that 70 per cent of the musicians employed in these orchestras are men of university training.

But not so many of them, possibly, are graduates. Nor does it make any difference.

Ferde Grofe presented a number Friday evening on the Whiteman hour memorializing the life of Knute Rockne. . . . Ernest Naftzger, the Something for Everyone man, has cracked 10,584 jokes over the air and has had his name misspelled 74 ways in fan mail. . . . Kate Smith has seen her fourth full moon come over the mountain from the Palace. . . . Red Cagle, the sometime pigskin carrier, has made his radio debut. . . . CBS is broadcasting football by television. It's the miniature scoreboard arrangement.

Art Jarrett, who has a style combining the lyric and downright, lowdown jazz, will make his bow as a band leader over CBS at 2:30 tomorrow. . . . Harry Stuhldreher, once one of Notre Dame's famed Four Horsemen, will be heard over NBC at 8:15 tonight. . . . Bob Becker, TRIBUNE outdoor writer, and Cal Johnson start a series titled "Around the Campfire" for NBC at 8:45 tomorrow evening. . . . "Seth Parker" and his Jonesport neighbors are going to tour the nation. They will be in Chicago on Oct. 25 and 26 and will broadcast from local studios.

Song hits, fashions, sports, and historic events of the '60s are woven into a new radio series titled Musical Memories, to be heard over CBS beginning next Sunday at 5:30 p. m. . . . Of Cantor's many Cantor for President slogans, we prefer "Don't say can't; say Cantor." . . . Ten minutes after Ted Weems introduced his new "Since I Broke That Record" [you can hear the crack], fans who heard it over the air appeared at the Trianon to hear more. . . . From Russ Columbo, girls: "My ideal girl has to be intelligent, a good sport, and be possessed of an infinite sweetness."

TAMARA TO BE FEATURED WITH RUDY AND BAND

A medley of old Russian songs and modern American tunes are to be presented by Tamara, youthful singer and stage star, when she makes her bow as the guest artist of Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees from 7 to 8 o'clock Thursday evening through W-G-N. While singing the Russian numbers Tamara will play her own accompaniment on the guitar. Tamara was born in Ukraine twenty-one years ago and came to the United States when she was 9 years old. Starting in her theatrical career at an early age, she has already been featured in such productions as Billy Rose's "Crazy Quilt" and Schwab and Mandel's "Free for All."

CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA AGAIN TO BE HEARD ON AIR

13 Saturday Programs Planned.

Chicago's world famous Civic opera will again be broadcast this year to a nation of music lovers by NBC. This announcement was made yesterday by M. H. Aylesworth, president of the company.

The stirring music, pageantry and drama of the opera will be brought to the fireside of American homes, no matter whether in the crowded city or the lonely back woods settlement for the third successive year through the coöperation of the Civic Opera company and NBC.

Many New Presentations.

Under the new directorship of Herbert Witherspoon, famous in his own right as an opera star and as a director, the opera company will this year offer new presentations never before heard in this country and will also bring to radio listeners a host of new and brilliant singers gathered by Mr. Witherspoon from all parts of Europe during a scouting trip for talent last summer.

This year, instead of cutting into the middle of the opera as has been the custom in the past, the broadcast will run from 8 to 8:30 p. m., central standard time, each Saturday night, beginning Nov. 7, thus allowing the radio listener to hear the overture and entire first act of the performance.

13 Operas to Be Presented.

Further perfections in broadcasting technique are expected to be introduced in the broadcasts this year allowing music lovers to hear the music nearly as perfectly as though they were sitting in the best seats in the house. The new parabolic microphones, known as the "human ears" of radio, will be used.

In all 13 operas are expected to be presented during the season of 1931-'32 including old favorites and American premiers.

The Chicago Civic opera was the first grand opera in the world to be broadcast direct from the stage.

Allerton Glee Club to Sing More College Songs

The Allerton Glee club will again include college songs in their program from W-G-N at 9 o'clock Saturday.

COLORATURA

LETIZIA LEITA.
[Moffett-Russell Photo.]

W-G-N will present Signorina Letizia Leita, European coloratura soprano, who has just arrived in this country, at 9:15 this evening.

Signorina Leita has been singing with unusual success in Italy, having made her debut in Milan at the Theatre Del Verme as Gilda in "Rigoletto" a year ago, and also appeared in the "Barber of Seville" and "Lucia De Lammermoor" at the same opera house.

5TH ROW CENTER PREMIER IS SET FOR 5:15 TODAY.

Miss Taliaferro, Brian to Be Presented.

From the theater box office comes the title of W-G-N'S new Sunday theater review, "Fifth Row Center," which will have its premier presentation at 5:15 this afternoon with Edith Taliaferro and Donald Brian, the stars of Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," as its opening attraction.

"Fifth Row Center" is dedicated to the legitimate theater and will present each Sunday intimate chatter about some outstanding show appearing on the Chicago stage, and feature the personal appearance of some star in the production.

Starred as Child.

Edith Taliaferro has appeared in scores of plays in America, England, and Australia. She started her stage career when she was two and a half years old and had star rôles in "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" as a child.

Donald Brian, who supports Miss Taliaferro, has been a stage favorite for many years, his first Broadway appearance having been in "Florodora." Real success, however, did not come to him until the night "The Merry Widow" was unfurled to a wildly enthusiastic audience. Brian made a great hit in the rôle of Prince Danilo and a new star was made. In recent seasons he has appeared in "How's Your Health," "The Queen's Husband," "Candlelight," and the Players' club revival of "Becky Sharp."

Many Stars Presented.

In presenting "Fifth Row Center," W-G-N is enlarging its already successful policy of giving its radio audience stage stars of prominence. During the last year it has brought before the microphone such famous personages as Otis Skinner, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Grace George, De Wolf Hopper, Tom Powers, Oscar Shaw, Blanche Ring, and Lillian Kemble Cooper.

Among the stage attractions which W-G-N will have in future "Fifth Row Center" programs are: "The Silent Witness," "The Third Little Show," "Girl Crazy," "Crazy Quilt," "The Venetian," and "Surf."

PLATINUM TENOR

BILLY WHITE.
[Theatrical Studios.]

Billy White, the "Platinum Tenor," who will be featured singer with Tweet Hogan's orchestra on W-G-N nightly at 12:30 o'clock. For three years Billy has been on the Pacific coast "doubling" his voice for famous talkie stars. Listen to him and then decide whose faces you have seen at the movies with his voice.

YALE BANQUET, GRID TILT WITH U. OF C. ON W-G-N

Angell, Hutchins, Stagg to Speak.

When Yale alumni invade Chicago next week-end for the Yale-Chicago football game most of their celebrations will be carried to the rest of the country over W-G-N, THE TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel.

Five speakers who will be heard at the banquet in the Stevens hotel Friday evening will be Dr. James R. Angell, president of Yale university; Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago and former dean of the Yale law school; George Vincent, chairman of the board of Rockefeller institute; Prof. William Lyon Phelps, Yale's famous writer and critic, and Amos Alonzo Stagg graduate of Yale in 1888, who is celebrating his 40th year as Chicago's football coach.

Music to Be Broadcast.

In addition to its broadcast of the addresses, W-G-N will have specially located microphones in the banquet hall to pick up the music and revelry. There will be the music of the Yale band of almost a hundred pieces, which will be heard in a concert when W-G-N comes on the air at 7:30, and group singing of former members of the glee club who will be gathered at one table.

On Saturday afternoon the Yale football team will appear for the first time in Chicago, playing Alumnus Stagg's Maroons at Stagg field. And Albie Booth will make "his last appearance west of Chapel street," according to advance announcements.

Quin Ryan will take the air from the field at 1:45 next Saturday to give listeners the play by play story of the game and the attendant festivities.

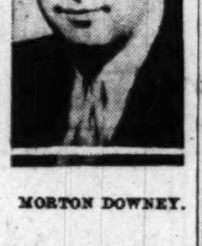
Dr. G. W. Dowie to Speak.

Various religious denominations will be interested in the address of Dr. George W. Dowie, director of the United Spiritual Movement, who will speak at 1 o'clock Thursday on the W-G-N midday services. Many Chicago churches, particularly those of the Presbyterian denomination, are participating in this movement.

Other speakers whom Dr. John L. Dickson, director of the midday services, has obtained for the week are: Dr. Herbert Whiting Virgin, pastor of the North Shore Baptist church, who will talk Monday, and Prof. A. C. McGiffert of the Chicago Theological seminary, who will give the address on Tuesday.

A layman of the Lutheran church, David Chindblom will speak Wednesday, and Dr. W. E. J. Bratz, editor of the Epworth Herald, a journal for young people, is to talk on Saturday. Dr. Dickson will speak at 12:45 on Friday.

MORTON DOWNEY KEEPS BUSY 24 HOURS EACH DAY



MORTON DOWNEY.

From early morning to early morning Morton Downey is a more than busy tenor. Due to his heavy radio, theatrical and supper club activities, he finds it necessary to rise at 8:30 a. m. After some setting up exercises Downey eats a light breakfast and is off for his penthouse office where he spends an hour on business matters. Then he dashes for the vaudeville theater at which he appears four times daily.

Between hours he learns new songs, receives business callers, and is otherwise kept occupied. He must arrange to be at the Columbia studios at 5 o'clock for his rehearsal and broadcast. At 7 o'clock he is rushing back to the theater, only to return to the studios at 10 o'clock for the late broadcast to the west coast.

After the broadcast he goes to the Central Park casino where he entertains until early morning. And so to bed for a few hours of much needed sleep.

MRS. HOOVER TO SPEAK DURING BOAT CEREMONY

Mrs. Herbert Hoover will christen the American Clipper, a new flying boat with a capacity of 45 passengers, at 1:30 tomorrow, the ceremony to be described over both networks.

The event will take place at the Anacosta naval air station in Washington, after which an initial flight will be made, when Mrs. Hoover will be flown over the capital city.

Announcers will also accompany the ship on its flight, and by means of portable sets will broadcast interesting sights which will be witnessed.

By Edward Moore.

THANKS to Brunswick, there is some more Beethoven available for the disk collectors. In album 24, Hall of Fame-International, 90189 to 90194, inclusive, the State Opera orchestra of Berlin plays the sixth, or "Pastoral" symphony under the direction of Hans Pfitzner.

It is no small undertaking to put a complete symphony on the disks, but as one looks back at the accretions of perhaps only a few months, one begins to see the great service the recording companies have been doing in spreading symphonic music around the musical world. This symphony classifies as an important addition to the list. It is Beethoven's finest lyric expression in all the music he wrote for symphony orchestra, and it has received a recording, in a good many respects, worthy of it.

It shows pretty nearly everything Beethoven thought of on the lyric side of his nature: sustained song, gentle imagination, humor, happiness, tenderness, all that one would expect in lyric expression, except one. Rather peculiarly, in spite of his life in Vienna, he would seem to have been little affected by the grace of the aristocratic dance. When he dances in music he is square-toed, and wooden-shod, and it is the only deficiency in the spiritual makeup of one of the greatest composers who ever lived.

An Expression of Feeling.

By no means, the least element in the greatness of this work is Beethoven's refusal to build it as a naturalistic picture of nature. He named it "Pastoral," but he insisted it was to be more an expression of feeling than a tone picture. Other composers might well borrow his viewpoint.

Mr. Pfitzner knows his Beethoven and conducts the symphony well. The recording is almost as good. Eleven sides are taken up by the reproduction, the twelfth being turned over to another Beethoven work, but one almost never heard in this country. It is the adagio movement from the "Street Song" trio, opus 11, written for piano, clarinet, and cello, and played by M. Raucheisen, L. Kohl, and J. Disclez. The performance is faithful and industrious, rather than inspired, but it is correct, and it is a chance to hear one of Beethoven's less known but quite charming works.

Rethberg Sings for Victor.

Victor, in the classification called Triple, presents the extraordinarily beautiful voice of the famous dramatic soprano, Elisabeth Rethberg, in two excerpts not of opera, but of operetta. The Csardas from Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" occupies one side and "Hab' ich nur deine Liebe" from Von Suppe's "Boccaccio," the other number of 7415. They are uncommonly pleasant tunes, and Mme. Rethberg sings them with the same charming loveliness she gives to her rôle in "The Bartered Bride," which is another way of saying that if she had not made a name for herself in the lofty heights of grand opera, she would have been an equally famous figure in the lighter lyric field.

In this connection, there is place for another mention of Richard Tauber, the German tenor, who is about to try his first conclusions on the concert stages of America. Columbia presents him in number G-4058-M with two songs, Leoncavallo's "Mattinata" and Toselli's "Serenade," both accompanied by the Dajos Bela concert orchestra.

These songs do not belong to operetta, but both of them should. In fact, it is a great surprise that they are not sung at least two or three times a night over the radio stations. They fasten themselves to the ear and memory, and stay there indefinitely. And once again there is reason to believe that Mr. Tauber is going to be a hit when he appears in the flesh.

tled upon Miss Eadie, in which decision he agreed with Col. Blois, director of Covent Garden at London. For Miss Eadie sang the part at London and seems to have been well liked.

Another soprano, one of the queen's ladies in waiting, is likewise still to be chosen. Most of the rest of the cast made themselves favorably known in earlier performances. Mme. Leider and Mme. Olszewska have been here for several seasons. Mr. Marion has still to receive the verdict of Chicago audiences.

Talk About Masonry.

There is so much mysterious talk about the connection of "The Magic Flute" with Masonic orders that it is a bit difficult for one not a Mason to straighten out what it is all about. The work was written by Mozart for a carnival theater in Vienna at a time when there was much gossip about the attitude of the ruling classes toward the orders, especially the attitude of the empress, Maria Theresa. One not altogether respectful account tells of how a certain lodge was raided by the police one night under the empress' orders while meanwhile her husband, the emperor, made a quiet and unostentatious disappearance down the back stairs of the building where the meeting was being held.

It is supposed, though here I am subject to correction, that the character of Astrofiammente symbolically represents Maria Theresa, that Tamino in the same manner represents the emperor, that Pamina is the Austrian people, Sarastro is a high minded Viennese, famous in his time and high in Masonry, and so on.

But however hidden the allusions to persons of the period may be, they are most historical from our point of view. Schikaneder, who wrote the book and sang the part of Papageno, was a good showman of his time, and he evolved a story which stands pretty well on its own merits, rather complicated, partly comic, partly serious, but still a tale that can be followed.

* *

Here Is the Story.

Here is the story, put in as few words as possible:

Prince Tamino, who has lost his way and been separated from his companions while in search of adventure, is saved from a huge serpent by three mysterious ladies who prove to be the waiting women of Astrofiammente, Queen of the Night. The queen takes advantage of the situation to implore Tamino to save her daughter, whom the sage old priest, Sarastro, has taken from her by force. Tamino is given a picture of the girl, falls in love with the likeness, and is filled with an ardent desire to serve her. He is given as a companion in his undertaking one Papageno, a gay and rather witless bird catcher.

When Tamino reaches Sarastro's castle his bitter feelings toward the high priest are changed to those of friendship by the assurance of the priests that their leader had acted only in Pamina's best interests and that she lives and is in no danger. Tamino is told that if he successfully passes a series of trials Pamina shall be his.

Tamino and Pamina, convinced of the righteousness of Sarastro's decision, resist every temptation and pass every trial and finally, the Queen of the Night having been confounded in her plots of vengeance, the two are united in the blazing light of truth, while evil and falsehood vanish and sink back into the night.

First Symphony of Season.

With Miss Bertha Ott beginning her list of concerts with three attractions this afternoon, with several other events this afternoon and here and there during the week, with the Chicago Symphony orchestra beginning its regular season Thursday night and its popular series Saturday night, the concert season of 1931-'32 may be considered to be officially opened. There will be plenty of events before it is officially closed. What is to happen this week is itemized in another column of this newspaper.

The orchestra begins its forty-first season; Dr. Stock begins his twenty-seventh as conductor and his thirty-seventh as a member of the organization. There will be no soloist on the opening program, though a considerable number, the first beginning next week, will appear in the course of the season.

For the opening program, Thursday at 8:30 o'clock, Dr. Stock has decreed Wagner's "Rienzi" Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Ballet Suite, a first class program at any time of any season. For the popular program Saturday night there will be Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Overture; Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, Glazounow's "Ruses d'Amour" Ballet Suite, and Strauss' "Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes, another program of distinct merit.

Correcting an Error.

"Dear Mr. Moore: May I correct your statement in THE TRIBUNE anent Rachmaninoff's fourth concerto? Mlle. Gitta Gradova played it last season on the twenty-first program, March 6 and 7. [Editor's note: Quite right. It was a slip of memory. Beg your pardon.]

"Do you not feel that the soloistic 'racket,' if it may be termed such in view of the amazing preponderance of soloists over purely orchestral programs this season, is not slightly overworked? The old story of the British gallery god needs to be dusted off. As you doubtless remember, the Britisher went to an orchestral concert, at which a famous diva was to assist as soloist. The affair disintegrated into a song recital, with the orchestra as accompanist. After about half a dozen encores, the gallery god felt that the thing had progressed far enough.

"'O, shut up!' he yelled. 'I came to listen to the orchestra!'

"There are a number of gallery gods of that description in Chicago, of which number I am proud to be able to count myself. In my personal opinion, which may not count for much, Frederick Stock is a greater musician than all save a possible two or three of the array of soloists. If he is to 'go 'way back and sit down,' and his fine orchestra with him, while the sainted audiences rave over personality possessed of one-tenth the musicianship and artistry which he possesses, would it not be a worth while change in the policy of the orchestral association to suspend operations, and reincorporate as a concert course, or a syndicate of impresarios?

In that event they could have all their soloists. They could also maintain an orchestra; it would not necessarily need to be as fine as the one we have now, as its only function would be that of an accompanist for these same 'personalities.'

"MALCOLM J. YOUNG."

This department agrees thoroughly with Mr. Young's estimate of Dr. Stock. It is necessary to add, however, that the business management of the orchestra began to discover through the most unassailable evidence, that of the box office, that not enough of its patrons were like Mr. Young. In other words, patronage was falling off. That is the reason for the soloists this year, also for the change of time from Saturday to Thursday night.

Music Notes.

Miss Rachel Busey Kinsolving's Musical Mornings will begin in the Crystal ballroom of the Blackstone hotel on Thursday, Nov. 5, with a joint recital by Maria Olszewska, contralto of the Civic Opera company, and Mischa Levitzki, pianist. John Charles Thomas, Civic Opera baritone, and Janet Fairbank, Chicago soprano, will appear jointly on Dec. 19. The third program will be presented by Nina Koshetz, soprano, Gabriel Leonoff, tenor, and Vladimir Dubinsky, baritone. Mario Chamlee, tenor, and Jacques Gordon, violinist, will appear Dec. 29, and Juliet Lippe, soprano, and Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, Jan. 7.

The Joseffer String quartet, a new women's organization, Anna Thelma Joseffer, first violin; Eva Pokoloff, second violin; Sara Shatz, viola, and Lillian Pringle, cello, announces a series of six chamber music evenings on the Sundays of Nov. 8, Dec. 13, Jan. 10, Feb. 14, March 1, and April 10 at the Cordon club.

Beginning next Friday, Arthur Dunham will enter upon his eighth season of Tuesday and Friday noonday organ recitals at the Methodist temple. About sixty recitals will be given. Mr. Dunham's Sonata for organ and about twenty other works of recent composition will be played.

Among the coming musical events will be a song recital by Yvonne Gall on Nov. 1. A similar appearance by her a year ago was one of the artistic successes of the season. Having sung at Ravinia in opera during the summer, she is now on the Pacific coast appearing with the San Francisco and Los Angeles companies. After leaving here she will return to Paris to sing in both of the opera companies of that city, also in Lille, Lyons, and Bordeaux.

When the Civic Opera company opens it doors Nov. 2 with "Tosca," the Metropolitan Opera company in New York will likewise greet its patrons, but with "La Traviata," balancing the cast of Rosa Ponselle, Giacomo Lauri-Volpi, and Giuseppe de Luca against Chicago's Claudia Muzio, Jan Kiepura, and Vanni-Marcoux. Early in the first week the Metropolitan will give the first American performance of Weinberger's "Schwanda, the Bagpipe Player," a work that would seem to have a number of good reasons in its score for being heard.

The Swift & Co. Male chorus has begun rehearsals for the 1931-'32 season under the direction of D. A. Clippinger, its conductor for fourteen years. The association's annual concert will be given at Orchestra hall March 1, with Florence Austral, soprano, as soloist. In addition it will appear in a sacred program at the University of Chicago April 10, and at other times before the Civic Music association at South Bend and for the benefit of the Lake Bluff orphanage at Lake Forest.

Four Horsemen Gallop Over Movie Screen

that here and there goes up the works. You'll recognize it.

Of the love angle, or, as the press representatives call it, "the woman's angle," there is little—and that's a refreshing omission in a movie of this kind. There's too much of a jittery ingénue in one of the first reels, but such as you see of a budding romance between Sally Blane and Lew Ayres is wholesome and satisfactory. Mr. Ayres plays a high school punk who enters Notre Dame and becomes a mighty football man.

Such faults as this movie has lie in story and direction. But I think you may forget the former, or, if not, still enjoy "The Spirit of Notre Dame" from the sports angle and because of the incentive behind the production.

Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, and Dorothy Lee are featured. . . . DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR.'S next starring vehicle will be "Union Depot." . . . Speaking of the FAIRBANKSES — ROBERT SHERWOOD wrote in part of them in his New York column:

"You will hear numerous, varied rumors concerning the future prospects, personal as well as professional, of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. For one thing, there is the ominous report, recurrent in Hollywood, that the Royal Family of the Screen is about to break up—that after more than twelve years of veritably fabulous domestic bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have decided to go their separate ways, she to her church, he to his.

"You will also hear that they are about to make another picture together, that they are not going to make another picture together, but are now embarked on individual enterprises, that they have definitely retired from the films and will never appear before the public in professional capacities again.

"Needless to say, I am not privy to the inner secrets of the Fairbanks menage; but after two months of reasonably close observation of this conspicuous family in Hollywood I have come to the conclusion that there are no secrets worth mentioning. Mary and Doug have just about as much chance of keeping dark their private lives as has the statue of Civic Virtue in City Hall park, New York.

"For Mary and Doug, for all their outward grace and regal mien, were and are terribly, painfully self-conscious. Their exaggerated eminence frightened and appalled them. They clung to each other exactly as two soldiers will cling to each other when they find themselves in the same exposed shell hole during a heavy bombardment.

"Now the extraordinary circumstances of their lives have changed. The lofty pedestal on which they were precariously perched has vanished. Their reign as monarchs of the movies has ended, and they know it—and if there is one thing markedly noticeable in their manner at the present time it is in an overpowering sense of relief.

"It is inevitable that the relaxation of the strain under which both have lived should cause some form of change in the almost incredible relationship that has existed between them. But I think I can safely assure you that you are entitled to laugh in the face of any one who announces that Mary and Doug are going to be divorced.

"The habits of interdependence that they have formed in the past twelve years are far too firmly established to be shattered. Either would be hopelessly and helplessly lost without the other.

"For all I know, thunder and lightning may separate tomorrow. So may storm and strife, hither and yon, light wines and beer, corned beef and cabbage, give and take, and even Amos 'n' Andy. But I'll bet my all that Mary and Doug will stick together."

American Soprano Opens Rhythmic Season in Gotham

By Joan King.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—If other solo recitalists follow the example of Frances Sebel, New York's musical entertainment of 1931-'32 will depart from the trodden paths to embark upon a course both novel and refreshing. To Frances Sebel, American soprano, and native of Cincinnati, went the honor of acting as official inaugurator of the new rhythmic season here, Oct. 4, at Carnegie hall. Miss Sebel made excellent use of this auspicious opportunity by paying honor to her contemporaries. She chose only one number for her program from the well worn library. This was Mendelssohn's "Infelice, Gia dal mio sguardo," with which she opened the evening.

The audience, which was encouragingly large for so early in a new year, was greatly pleased with Miss Sebel's selections. Her second group included a number of novel Spanish songs, "El Vito," my Nin; "Nana," by De Falla; "El Tumba y le," and "La Mom y los Calvos," by Obradors, and "Los Dos Miedos" and "Las Locas Por Amor," by Turina. The Obradors numbers were sung for the first time here on this occasion and were especially well liked by the audience.

Offered First Performance.

Miss Sebel, who demonstrated her musicianship and feeling for the intent of the composer regardless of his nationality throughout the evening, offered a first performance in her third group. This was Mana-Zucca's air to athene from "Hypatia," still in manuscript, and described in program notes as "a grand opera in English based on Charles Kingsley's story." Strauss' "Mein Herz ist Stumm and Nichts"; Weingartner's "Liebesfeier," "Nelken," and "Plauderwaesche"; Blech's "Eine Kleine Geige," "Strampelchen," "Tintenheinz und Plaetscherlottchen," and Hughes' "Jack and Jill" and "Hey Diddle, Diddle" concluded the written list.

In accordance with its custom since the organization was founded in 1928, the Schubert Memorial, Inc., held its annual auditions for candidates for its sponsorship here recently. Twenty-five musicians from eleven states were heard in earlier auditions, in September, all of these having met the entrance requirements, and four were selected for the recent hearing. But the judges, who included Richard Aldrich, Howard Brockway, Fritz Reiner, Nikolai Sokoloff, Sigismond Stojowski, and Willem Willeke, finally decided to make no award for this year. The Schubert Memorial has, thus far, presented nine young Americans in New York concerts. These have been Sadah Schuchari and Ruth Posselt, violinists; Muriel Kerr, Isabelle Yalkowski, and Sascha Gorodnitzki, pianists; Phyllis Kraeuter and Olga Zundel, cellists; Flora Collins, soprano, and Graham Harris, conductor.

To Introduce New Works.

When the Viennese conductor, Erich Kleiber, returned recently from Europe to open the season of the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, which he will direct for the first six weeks this year, he announced a number of new works which he intends to introduce during his stay. These include two compositions to be heard here for the first time by American composers, "The Pagan Symphony," by the late Henry Joslyn, and a rhapsody by Wallingford Riegger. He will also introduce new works by two European composers, Krenek's "Variations for Orchestra" and Weinberger's "Passacaglia," for large orchestra and organ, composed especially for its New York première and dedicated to Mr. Kleiber. Mr. Kleiber will also introduce extracts from Telemann's "Tafelmusik"; three symphonic dances of Reznicek; three extracts from the lyric suite of Alban Berg, arranged for string orchestra; Ravel's Minuet Antique, and the Kleine theater suite of Toch.

Remo Bolognini, well known to Chicago's orchestral audiences by reason of his years as assistant concert master of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, has just been awarded the post of assistant to Mishel Piastro, concert master of the New York Philharmonic. Bolognini is the second Chicago musician to attain important position with the New York orchestra, Alfred Wallenstein having taken the chair of head of the 'cello section two years ago.

Since 1929, when Bolognini left the Chicago orchestra to return to Europe to coach in repertoire with Eugene Ysaye, he has been engaged either in studying or recital giving. He was one of Ysaye's two pupils, the other being Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, during the last days before the Maestro's death. Last season he played in recitals with much success in London, Brussels, Berlin, Cologne, The Hague, Amsterdam, and Paris, also visiting this country for two months. He plays the famous "Baron Vitta" Guarnerius, dated 1730.

Carolina Author

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Paul Green, the university instructor who recently flashed into fame as a playwright, has turned his back on Broadway and returned to North Carolina, where his fame is that of a champion cotton picker.

Three days on the rialto were enough for the author of "The House of Connelly." He spent one of them in the theater and the others in a small room of an obscure hotel.

"I've a lot more work to do," he said, "and I'd rather do it on my little farm, where it is quiet and peaceful."

A part of that work will be the completion of "Potter's Field," his fourth play.

"Mr. Paul," as his southern neighbors call him, is an instructor of philosophy in the University of North Carolina. He has the heavy hands of a toiler. He is proud of the fact that the first prize he ever won was as the best cotton picker in a North Carolina county competition.

GREASY HAIR FROM—

LAZY GLANDS

Hair that is full of grease and has an odor is due to a gland disorder. Soap and water won't help. Face the truth about your hair and scalp!

When the scalp oozes oil from every pore, the glands are wasting nourishment and need attention. Stimulate those lazy glands and all that grease and scale will go. And watch what happens to the hair itself, when properly nourished!

Gland stimulation gives hair new life and new color. You won't have any streaks to "touch up" or gray locks to hide. Pigmentation will slowly but surely revive the natural color of any hair not completely and permanently gray.

Start stimulation of those lazy glands tonight! The way to wake them is by massage. Use your fingertips, dipped in Danderine. The Danderine will cut through the pore filth and get at the gummed glands. One treatment will dissolve every particle of dandruff. The first week will give you a healthy, wholesome scalp. But keep the treatments up until the very feel of your hair tells you it is in perfect condition.

You can get Danderine at any drugstore. It is a marvelous medicine for sick scalps.

WATCH YOUR GLANDS!

WHEN Lazy glands don't work the hair is starved and faded.

WHEN lazy glands don't close, scalp is fouled by secretions.

ANY dandruff is a sign the hair glands need stimulating.

Adopted Child Has Easy Life in Hollywood

Fortunate Waifs Given Every Advantage in Film Star's Home.

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—All Hollywood people are not the carefree selfish egotists that one might think. The same instinct for a hearthstone with happy children's faces exists in the film capital that exists anywhere else in the world. In addition to the children born in Hollywood homes, there are many happy little folks who have been adopted by film stars when an eccentric stork refused to favor the family chimney.

This last year several charming children have been lucky enough to enter film homes where they were eagerly awaited. The most recent adoption was that of little Patricia Hamilton by a new papa and mama, Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hamilton. Patricia was seven weeks old when she was brought to her new home. Next year the Hamiltons plan to find a brother for Patricia.

Before that it was Harold Lloyd and his wife, Mildred, who, tired of the dilatory long legged bird, went out and found a lovely little girl. Peggy, as a playmate for Mildred Gloria. It brought good luck, for not many months later Mr. Stork hustled along with a baby brother, and now the Lloyds have three shining little faces about the table.

Brother for Little Gloria.

Gloria Swanson adopted a little brother for her daughter, Gloria; and Joseph at two became part of the Swanson household when Gloria II. was about four. Gloria did not believe that one child would be happy alone, and chose a boy because she loves the romping play the little fellow brings to the home.

Cecil de Mille has a whole family of adopted children in his home in addition to his own child. From the eldest to the youngest, love and care and advantages have been shared equally, and a family circle of youth and gayety and childish problems and [illegible] character building welcome home the famous director when his day's work is done.

De Mille forbids the word "adopted" in reference to his children as he feels they are too close to his heart to use any word suggesting that they are not wholly his.

Zasu Pitts has the small son left by Barbara Lamarr, whom she is raising with her own little girl. Barbara had adopted the little fellow herself when she lost her heart to him when she visited an orphanage in Texas.

Lead a Royal Life.

Mary Pickford long ago adopted her niece Gwendolyn, the daughter of her sister, Lottie. Wyn is Mary's constant companion and enjoys the sort of a room at Pickfair that most girls only dream of. At present, she is away at school.

Constance Bennett is the proud foster mother of a little four year old son, whom she brought back from one of her European trips. Peter is the constant playmate of little Adrienne Fox, sister Joan's baby by Joan's former husband.

Then there is Philippe de Lacey, the child-actor. His foster mother, Edith de Lacey, a nurse in France during the war, found the little orphaned fellow and brought him to America with her.

Polly Moran boasts a little son, also adopted. Of Italian ancestry, John Michael is Polly's joy and pride, and all the M-G-M lot rings with the tales Polly tells of his achievements at the military school which he attends.

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuri Aoki, last August adopted a little American-Japanese boy from a poor mother in Los Angeles' "Little Tokio." They will take the tot back to Japan with them and rear him there as a true son of the rising sun with all the advantages in Japanese life.

Conway Tearle Is Back.

Conway Tearle, who left Hollywood in a huff a couple of years ago, claiming he was being boycotted because he refused a salary cut, is back again and will play a prominent role in "The False Madonna." Kay Francis and William Boyd are the leads in the story.

Herbert Somborn [Mr. Gloria Swanson II.] has opened a fourth Brown Derby restaurant in Beverly Hills, and is doing well with it.

Gilbert Roland, formerly leading man for Norma Talmadge, is playing in a local stage production of "Camille," with Jane Cowl. It is his first stage experience, and he says it fussed him more than facing crowds as a bull fighter in Mexico in his boyhood days. He comes from a family noted for several generations for its matadors.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

United States Misrepresented.

Dear Miss Tinée: Despite the fact that I cannot allow myself the time to sit to write such a letter as this, I feel that what I should like to tell you needs telling so much that other things will have to wait.

I have noticed from time to time your kindly reviews of the German movies here, and when one considers that you admit ignorance of the language you are surprisingly tolerant and fair. I cannot believe that what the Germans are sending us is the best of what they can do, for most of the German talkies I have seen and heard were not one step above most of the mediocre ones concocted in Hollywood.

But all this does not get me to the point. A German talkie now current in Chicago, under the title of "Zwei Kravatten" (A Pair of Neckties), is thus far one of the most maudlin, the most stupid, the most imbecilic and the most effusively sentimental mush that has ever been grafted on a gullible public. Anything more emotionally silly has never been seen. It transcends in actual childish impossibility anything the most heroic in Hollywood have ever done. The scenes which the picture intends to be of the United States are, perhaps, the most impossible of all.

Imagine a wealthy home in America, such as the one presented in the picture, with a hundred or so servants in gaudy livery; the hostess and her dressing room with the thousand electric lights, which reminded one of nothing more than a lighting fixture store. Also, notice how the dining room table is set: the girls seated around in a circle with their legs bared up to the hips; the two American women bidding for the hand of the handsome German, one offering him twenty million and the other thirty million dollars.

Then, the absolutely impossible incident of the German girl suddenly inheriting forty million dollars. There is a lot more, equally silly. And the fact that there was a bit of good singing does not excuse the picture.

J. E. LORING.

Editor's note: I take it you didn't care for "Zwei Kravatten."

Dear madam: "A Free Soul"—a great picture, great swill. Things equal to the same thing are equal to each other.

Ways that Mystify.

Dear Mae Tinée: For years the critics have said it in print and the public has said it with admission tickets, yet the producers go merrily on. So do not think that I expect this private protest to avail, but it may relieve my mind.

Some time ago Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote a story of Wyoming called "Lost Ecstasy," told with the tenderness of one who knows and loves that country. Our own haunt is not far from the ranch where she spends her summers. So, when we saw the story released under the title of "I Take This Woman," we made a special trip down to see the film. We were prepared to spend a happily miserable evening viewing the familiar beloved panorama of the range, the corrals, bunkhouse, and the little lonely cabins on the high plains.

Well, we were miserable, all right, without any qualifications. Doubtless we should have been warned by the change in title and by your faint praise. For it had not one thing in common with the book except the names of the principal characters; the minor ones were wholly omitted from the film. Not one incident remained unchanged.

The worst was first—the explanation of Kay's presence on the ranch. A worse miscast for the part could not be imagined. This jazz baby could never have portrayed the steadfast Kay of the story, and doubtless this hideous change was made to fit her personality. Gary acted as if he were ashamed to play the part of Tom, yet had the original been reproduced he would have been ideal.

The whole thing was so astounding that we searched for an explanation and found one. With economy in keeping with the times, they bought the story, used the names of the characters for this atrocity. Later they expect to produce the plot under the title of "Lost Ecstasy" and thus get double value. But here are two people who will not be there to see it. In fact, we have not attended a movie since.

TENSLEEP.

Editor's Note: For ways that are dark the heathen Chinee has little on the movie producer. (Sometimes.)

Likes "The Last Flight."

Dear Miss Tinée: I saw the picture "The Last Flight" and thought it delightful and touching, and this morning read your review of it, which expresses my reaction so perfectly I wanted to thank you. You have put into words just what I felt about the picture and think Helen Chandler was, as you say, "intuitive" in her rendition of the whimsical, gay but unsmiling Nikki.

I am sending this appreciation because from remarks made by several persons who sat near me in the audience that "it was the worst show they had ever seen," I have no doubt you will receive plenty of knocks from the undiscerning persons who are not the kind that would understand and value the underlying quality you describe so neatly as "vague, eerie, Alice in Wonderland-ish."

Here is one who was moved and charmed beyond measure, and I am sure there are many more who will likewise love this film, but may not tell you so. Sincerely, MARY CULP.

Editor's Note: It was a lovely picture, wasn't it! You were thoughtful to write.

A Kindly Letter.

Dear Miss Tinée: I'm right behind you when it comes to giving Lowell Sherman a big hand. I have my favorite screen actors and actresses who play excellently, but I'd walk across the city, if necessary, to see Lowell Sherman on the screen. I hardly know what it is, the play does not have to boast much of a plot, the dialogue can be as dull reading as so and so's expedition in the Far East, but when the curtain goes up and Sherman takes the center of the stage it's sure to be the best show in town.

He looks like a million dollars in his clothes, he has an A-1 stage presence, and when he speaks, no matter how dull and ordinary the lines, he puts them over with a bang; everything is done smoothly, well turned, polished, an eyebrow lifted here, a shrug of the shoulders, a wink, all done with a finesse and the perfection of a fine actor.

There, thank you for your "verie kind attention." I never miss your column and, though I've never written you before and perhaps won't again, I want to say that the World's Greatest Newspaper would lose some of its greatness if your column was left out.

Again I offer my profound admiration. It goes for all our house.

E. G. M.

Editor's Note: Mr. Sherman thanks you, THE TRIBUNE thanks you, and I thank you.

October Stirs Stage Season to Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

tery, and some faint glimmering of intelligence in regard to the period in which its story has been placed is required of the playgoer.

The Italian Renaissance is the frame for "The Venetian." It corresponds to the Elizabethan period in England; and it implies, so far as the stage is concerned, a large amount of base conduct, frequent back-stabbings and wine poisonings, and a bustling activity in artistic, intellectual and political affairs. In other words, it is an excellent background for a romantic play—a time of hot passions and gay pageantry in which every one burned the candle at both ends and had a high old time.

This play, handsomely staged by Maurice Browne, is a satisfactory treatment of its material from a modern point of view. It avoids the sawdust theatricalism which curses costume drama. Its characters are thoroughly alive, and they speak a forthright, lucid English which is as frank, at times, as the talk of comedians in a bawdy Broadway revue. If romance with historical trimmings is ever to make a fresh start on the American stage, it will be with plays like "The Venetian."

Romantic Acting.

But if you remain cold to the fascinations of the flamboyant years when the city of Florence was preparing itself as an objective point for future generations of American tourists, you will certainly respond to the acting of Margaret Rawlings as the alluring Bianca, and Wilfrid Walter as her princely paramour. Here are players of high skill and personalities of winning address. Miss Rawlings I have tagged as a little, unsentimentalized Jane Cowl. Mr. Walter has the gifts for leadership in poetic romantic rôles.

When the accidental closing of a door caused a change in the destiny of "The Venetian's" heroine, I found myself skeptical about the existence of spring locks at the time of the Italian Renaissance. The author of this play may be an authority on antique door-locks, but I shall demand confirmation from the Chicago Museum of Industry before I believe in this episode.

Showboat Ahoy!

This column's outcry for showboats last summer seems to have started something. Ralph T. Kettering, manager of the Adelphi theater, says that he is rebuilding an ancient hulk, discovered in the shipyards of Sheboygan, and hopes to have a floating theater of 1,500 in the Chicago river before winter sets in.

Commodore Billy Bryant, now showboating in Cincinnati, is preparing to bring his company here to show us how his dock-end troupe can play Shakespeare. Instigated by George E. Wintz, known as "the king of the one-night stands," he hopes to secure a Chicago theater and turn his crew loose in it.

The showboat atmosphere, aside from the rough-and-ready acting, will be supplied by decorations in the lobby. There are at least three theaters available for this adventure—the Civic, the Princess, and the Cort. Rialto gossips are naming the Civic as the place where Commodore Bryant will hoist his ensign—possibly because that playhouse is on the river front.

New Plays for Gotham Stage; Five Openings

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Broadway will see five premières next week, including three dramas and two musical shows. Here are the announcements:

"Church Mouse"—Opens tomorrow night at the Playhouse. A comedy from the Hungarian which has been extensively produced abroad. William A. Brady is bringing forth the adaptation by the Hattons, of the Paul Frank-Laszlo Fodor original. In the leading rôles will be Ruth Gordon and Bert Lytell.

"Lean Harvest"—Opens Tuesday night at the Forrest. A play by Ronald Jeans which ran during the summer in London. Leslie Banks and Nigel Bruce will be in the cast along with Vera Allen, Leonard Mudie, Patricia Calvert, Charles Esdale, and Molly Pearson.

"Everybody's Welcome"—Opens Tuesday night at the Shubert. The season's first musical comedy from the Shubert workshops. Harold Atteridge has prepared the libretto, Sam Fain the music, and Irving Kahal the lyrics. The players will include Frances Williams, Oscar Shaw, Harriette Lake, and Ann Pennington.

"Pillars of Society"—Opens Wednesday night at the 48th Street. The Ibsen play is the second production of Laurence Langner's repertory group. Among the actors will be Moffat Johnston, Armina Marshall, Dorothy Gish, Rollo Peters, Romney Brent, Fania Marinoff, Edgar Stehli, Jessie Busley, and Knowles Entrikin.

"The Cat and the Fiddle"—Opens Thursday night at the Globe. A romantic musical show by Jerome Kern and Otto Harbach. The large company will include Georges Metaxa, Bettina Hall, Eddie Foy Jr., Lawrence Grossmith, Dorothy Debenham, George F. Meader, Doris Carson, Odette Myrtil, and Jose Ruben.

Unknown Warrior

MAURICE BROWNE will appear in his London success, "The Unknown Warrior," at the Selwyn theater in four matinée performances, starting Sunday, Nov. 8, and closing the afternoon of Armistice day. Rosalinde Fuller is coming from London to play her original part. The play is from the pen of M. Paul Raynal.

After this engagement Mr. Browne will make an eight weeks' tour in "The Unknown Warrior" under the management of James B. Pond.

STAR IN "PRIVATE LIVES"

EDITH TALIAFERRO.

SHE has been leading ingenue and star of dozens of plays, of which "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" are the most easily remembered. Now, as a full blown, fascinating woman of the world, she co-stars with Donald Brian in Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," at the Erlanger theater.

Eugene O'Neill Ends Ten Year Solitude Hunt

Finds Content and Rest from City's Turmoil in Skyscraper.

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Eugene O'Neill has ended a ten year search for solitude. This isolation he has found in a luxurious apartment high above Park avenue's noisy taxicabs and hurrying throngs.

It is an ironic paradox that O'Neill should discover this escape from the crowds where he could work in peace right in the heart of the city.

He experimented with a half dozen other environments before he was won over as a hermit in the metropolis.

Lived in Lighthouse.

His first workshop was in a lonely lighthouse on the seacoast at Provincetown, Mass. Then he took a cottage amid the quiet of Bermuda, and from there slipped away to Shanghai, where he hoped to remain incognito.

Finally, he moved into an out-of-the-way chateau in Tours, France and stayed there for two years. He became weary of the place, and returned last summer with the announced intention of living on a plantation in Virginia.

He came to New York first, and fell in love once again with his old home town. He walked along the waterfront streets where, as a youth, he had mingled with sailors in the old-time saloons. He visited the old haunts he had frequented with his father, when the latter was a star in "Monte Cristo."

* *

Found City Best.

For ten years, O'Neill, weary of his wanderings, has been seeking a haven where he could settle down and work. And, like the prodigal son, he has returned home to find what he sought here in the city.

"I'm glad I spent those years abroad because it gave me a new perspective on my country and its people," he explained. "I think any writer must live abroad to get a true objective view of his native scene."

New Lady Teazle

ETHEL BARRYMORE will come to the Grand Opera House Oct. 19 in her revival of "The School for Scandal," in which she has just completed a tour of the Pacific coast and the northwest. She first acted the rôle of Lady Teazle in 1924 to the Sir Peter of her late uncle, John Drew, in a week's revival of Sheridan's comedy by the Players' club of New York.

This will be the first Chicago performances of the classic since Mrs. Insull's revival in June of 1925 in the Illinois theater.

Miss Barrymore is the third member of her family in direct descent to act Lady Teazle. Her grandmother, Mrs. John Drew, was a famed Lady Teazle, while it was the rôle in which her mother, Georgia Drew Barrymore, made her first appearance as the leading woman of Mrs. Drew's company in Philadelphia. Maurice Barrymore, Miss Barrymore's father, played not fewer than six rôles in "The School for Scandal" in his younger days on the English stage, while John Drew was a matinée idol forty years ago vis-à-vis with Ada Rehan and got his vogue largely on his performance as Charles Surface.

Miss Barrymore's company includes Walter Gilbert as Charles, McKay Morris as Joseph, C. H. Croker-King as Sir Peter, Herry Plimmer as Sir Oliver, A. G. Andrews as Moses, and Beatrice Terry as Mrs. Candour.

The engagement will be for two weeks, after which Miss Barrymore will take the play into New York.

Miss Cornell Wants to Act Roman Matron

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Katharine Cornell, who has become one of Broadway's foremost acting managers in her first year as a producer, already is planning her new play for next season. It is to be "The Rape of Lucrece," a French dramatization based upon Shakespeare's poem.

Miss Cornell sailed this week for a month's vacation in Bermuda. She will return Nov. 16 to reopen in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." This story of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's romance has been one of New York's leading hits since it opened last February, and its popularity forecasts that it will remain on Broadway all winter.

Miss Cornell's rôle requires her to be upon the stage every moment from the time the first curtain rises until a few seconds before the end. She found the task exhausting and decided upon a six weeks' rest.

Although there was no extraordinary success among the new plays of the past week, several of them offer diverting evenings. "Payment Deferred" is an English murder melodrama of novel aspects. In addition to its unusual plot it is distinguished by the performance of Charles Laughton from London.

"The Good Companions," another English importation, is a gigantic picturesque show of character parts. It is a dramatization of J. B. Priestley's novel. Elmer Rice, who revealed a panorama of New York life in his "Street Scene," does the same for Paris in "Left Bank." In this drama he chides the American expatriates who prefer a French Bohemia to the comforts of their native land.

"Cherries Are Ripe," which has been headed for Broadway for more than a year, again has been sidetracked. This is the Anita Loos and John Emerson comedy which was given on tour all last year by Rod La Rocque and Vilma Banky.

Several weeks ago these two were replaced by Basil Sydney and Mary Ellis, but a manager, Arch Selwyn, still was not satisfied with his cast. So the comedy has been temporarily withdrawn and will be brought forth later with two other stars.

Elmer Rice has already written a new drama called "Counsellor-at-Law," and it will have Paul Muni in the lead. . . . Jed Harris opens his season with "Wonder Boy," another satire on movie producers. Hazel Dawn is to be the star. . . . Nikita Balieff of "Chauve Souris" is back to stage a new show on Broadway.

In Classics

VIOLA ROACHE of the Chicago Civic Shakespeare society's company, began her career with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in London. Following several tours with Sir Charles Wyndham, she accepted an engagement in Johannesburg, South Africa, where she played in "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," "As You like It," "Twelfth Night," and "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

As leading woman at the Copley theater in Boston she was seen in the plays of Shaw, Galsworthy, Milne, Barrie, and Shakespeare. A season with Milton Rosner in England followed, after which she returned to America for an engagement in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," with Ina Claire, and "The Woman Disputed," with Lowell Sherman and Ann Harding.

She has also appeared in many films for the M. G. M. and Paramount firms.

Travel Talk.

"France and the Colonial Exposition," first of the new series of E. M. Newman's travel talks, will be given at Orchestra hall next Wednesday and Friday evenings and Saturday afternoon.

Noel Coward's Plays Popular; B'way Gossip

"Improper Duchess," with Irene Bordoni as Star, to Be Withdrawn.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The prevalence of Noel Coward's works on the American stage—he wrote "Private Lives," you may remember, and some of the numbers in "The Third Little Show"—arouses interest in a project to revive his comedy called "Hay Fever." Constance Collier will have the rôle that Laura Hopes Crews acted at Maxine Elliott's theater several years ago. The most recent staging of "Hay Fever" was by the Goodman repertory theater of Chicago last winter, with Margaret Wycherly as the featured player.

Maurice Browne's production of "The Improper Duchess," by Bernard Fagan, will have only a brief life on the American stage, although it was a sizable hit in London. It will be offered next week in Hartford and Providence, but will go no farther. It was intended for the Shubert circuit of subscription theaters, including Chicago. Irene Bordoni has the leading rôle.

Sidney Howard's new play, called "Yellow Jacket," deals with the efforts to eradicate yellow fever from the Caribbean ports which followed the Spanish-American war. It derives, more or less, from a chapter of Paul De Kruif's interesting book called "Microbe Hunters." Arthur Hopkins has a lien on "Yellow Jacket."

"A Modern Virgin" closes its tour in Detroit tonight. Roger Pryor and Margaret Sullavan are probable members of the cast of "Blessed Event," a comedy that the Shuberts now have on their shelves.

Florence Nightingale, whose name will always be associated with women's relief work for armies in the field—she started in the Crimean war—will be the heroine of a play called "The Lady with a Lamp." Leslie Banks, the English actor now in "Lean Harvest," will stage the play for Managers McGowan and Reed, and Edith Evans will come from London to play the famous nurse. Rehearsals will begin Oct. 21. Reginald Berkeley is the author.

Queenie Smith's new operetta will be called "The Little Racketeer." It comes from the German stage, where it bore the same title—a fact which suggests that Berlin has gone in for rackets. Paul Ash and his band will figure in the entertainment.

An English actress rejoicing in the name of Lady George Cholmondoley will soon begin a Canadian tour in a series of plays and dance programs. Galsworthy's "The Silver Box" is on her list. The dance programs will include something called "a play by Rabelais."

Helen Hayes has returned to New York from Hollywood to begin rehearsals for Molnar's "The Good Fairy," which Gilbert Miller will stage. The first performance will be given in Washington Nov. 9, and a week in Pittsburgh will follow.

Irving Berlin and Moss Hart are writing a musical show which will employ a revolving stage and other elaborate mechanical devices. If nothing happens it will appear in New York before the Christmas holidays. The boys haven't agreed upon a title as yet. . . . Frank Craven has written a new play, variously described as a melodrama and a dramatic comedy. John Golden will produce it.

English Actor Wins Cheers on Gotham Stage

Charles Laughton, in "Payment Deferred," Plays Character Role.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The English actor who played Tony Perelli, gangster, in the London production of "On the Spot" has been brought to America by Gilbert Miller in a murder play called "Payment Deferred," which was done at the Lyceum last week.

His name is Charles Laughton, and he has had the somewhat unique experience at home of coming late to the theater and topping the list of character actors in five or six seasons. He was 27 when he made his first stage appearance in 1926, after winning a gold medal at a dramatic school. Since then he has played many parts, and his popularity with the crowd has increased with each of them.

In "Payment Deferred" he is given opportunity of running the gamut of the emotions about which less is heard these days than formerly. His character is that of William Marble, a flabby, beady eyed bank clerk, down on his luck and resentful. Living a lower middle class life in a lower middle class neighborhood, he is much in need of funds.

One evening, when he is fearing the collectors, there comes a young man to call on him. He is a nephew from Australia, has just arrived in London. He has no other relatives on that side of the world and, the estate of his parents having been recently settled, he is well supplied with money. He is also a cagey young man and refuses to loan uncle any of his money. So uncle poisons him and buries his body in the garden.

Haunted by Conscience.

Thereafter, for three tortured acts, William Marble, murderer, is haunted by his conscience as relentlessly as was Matthias in "The Bells." He fears the slamming of doors, the sound of bells, the chatter of people passing in the street, the shouts of children. If any one is seen even so much as raking the garden, he is threatened with hysteria.

He profits from his crime to the extent of some thirty thousand pounds and is able to set his wondering wife and daughter up in style. But disaster follows every move he makes.

He buys a new set of garish furniture, and riding into the house with it comes a little French shopkeeper from just around the corner who proceeds to seduce and blackmail him out of thousands.

He sends his daughter to a fine school in France, where she is promptly lifted out of her natural class and becomes so disgusted with her old home and her old father that when she comes back she takes to being a hostess in a night club.

He buys his wife a new outfit of clothes and a holiday at Bournemouth [so he may have his way with the French girl], but she comes back to him distressed in mind and suspicious. Finally, she has his secrets from him and the shock is so great that she herself drinks poison and is dead on the second floor when the doctor comes—dead of poison she had not the strength to come downstairs to get for herself, the doctor says, which makes it likely at the play's end that William Marble will swing for a murder he did not commit, even though the body buried in the garden is never discovered.

Heavy and Cheerless.

It is a heavy and cheerless play, but fascinating in the way mysteries are. Mr. Laughton, of course, acts Marble to the hilt, the picture of misery incarnate, a sensitive register for all the emotions haunted men are prey to.

For my own part, this type of acting leaves me cold. Character actors are bound to be stage conscious. Laughton is noticeably so, being deliberate in reaching for effects and toying with them. Too frequently it is possible to catch him working at his trade, and that is devastating to illusion and story. But that he is technical master of that trade there is no doubt. He has many believable and impressive moments in repose.

An actress in his company, Cicely Oates by name, outplayed her star in the quiet realities she brought to the rôle of the suspicious wife. She, too, started with fright, blanched with fear, trembled with apprehension, stood stark and staring at the realization of horrible truths, wept with sympathy, and comforted with understanding—and never once were you conscious of a single actress' trick.

"Payment Deferred" is the type of melodrama that makes theater going an exciting business for the young and for those of their elders who are open minded and susceptible. These have been standing to cheer Mr. Laughton at the close of each performance.

Merits High Praise.

I think there is more real drama, more depth of feeling, more sound artistry in the production of Paul Green's "The House of Connelly" by a Theater Guild subsidiary than in any other play of the new season, to date. This play, incidentally, has been in the Guild's possession for two seasons. Whether the managers lacked courage to do it, or were doubtful of its appeal, I do not know. In any event, last summer they turned it over to a group of their younger members with the promise that they could put it in rehearsal if they liked and see what would come of it.

The young people took the script and several others and went away into a sort of artists' camp in Connecticut. There they turned a barn into a theater and rehearsed their plays all summer. When they had "The House of Connelly" ready they asked Mr. Green and the Guild executives to see them play it. The result was so greatly in their favor that the Guild financed a production for the play.

Mr. Green's drama is the story of a disintegrating family, proud in its memory of happier days in the old south. The house of Connelly is a decaying house. Its men, down to the current generation represented by young Will Connelly, are lustful, lazy, washed out, through. Its women are led by a proud mother standing [with the aid of a crutch] firmly by her traditions and her memories, still leaning on the glory of old General Connelly, who fought the war and begat illegitimate offspring, and include a pair of spinster sisters crushed and anemic, but also loyal.

* *

Fates Move In.

A family of poor whites, named Fate, move in as tenant farmers and the daughter, Patsy, hungry for land, plans to seduce Will for his, and Will, hungry for love, takes it from Patsy.

The result is cataclysmic in the Connelly family. Will's uncle Robert, lecherous and modestly alcoholic, shoots himself through his poor weak old head to preserve his pride, Mother Connelly dies of a stroke, and the sisters desert and flee to Atlanta.

But Will holds true, marries Patsy, and she, come to honor and believe in their true love, takes her place as mistress of the house of Connelly with her common blood surging exultantly through her veins. The Guild juniors are not all suited as a type to the rôles the aristocratic south suggests, but they are fine players. Franchot Tone gives a magnificent performance as Will, and Margaret Baker plays well as Patsy. Mary Morris is distinguished and fine as the mother.

"Good Companions" Staged.

Most of the characters, but little of the spirit of high adventure that endeared the story of "The Good Companions" to its public, have come to the stage in a dramatization of the J. B. Priestley novel, which is a common enough report with dramatized novels. Nothing the theater folk can do can preserve the bloom the imagination puts on book characters.

There is good entertainment in "The Good Companions" for perhaps half its length. The gathering of the various parties to the adventure is promising.

Jess Oakroyd, the robust Yorkshireman, quarrels with the nagging missus, takes his kit of tools and his bag and starts off down the road. The gallant spinster, Elizabeth Trant, bowls along the motor ways and breaks down twixt Tumbleby and Rawsley, where Oakroyd manages to set her engine going again.

The disgusted Inigo Jollifant tosses up his job as a submaster in the Taverns' school, bundles his wisps of songs into his bag, collects his fifty-two pounds sterling and is off with Susie Dean and Morton Mitcham, show folk looking for a job.

They all meet at Rawsley, and there it is they come upon the concert party that was the dinky-dos, stranded and unhappy. There the Good Companions company is organized, with the aid of Miss Trant's money, and the great adventure is started.

Six Months Later.

They're still going six months later, which is the second division of the play. Much the same as to personnel. Mr. Jollifant is in love with Susie Dean, which provides a thread of romance, but Susie is fearfully afraid a husband would interfere with her career and will have none of him.

It is at Gatford that the crash comes. Mr. Wimpers, the cinema man, hires his thugs to break up the show and they do it successfully, tossing vegetables at the warbling pierrots and finally setting fire to the theater.

As a play I think the weakness of "The Good Companions" is its failure to concentrate interest on the adventures of the honest Oakroyd and Miss Trant. In a book story an author can be as diffuse and rambling as he pleases, so long as he is interesting. But in a play he has no time to ramble, and the thinner he spreads his story the less interesting it is.

An English cast has been imported or picked up from the local English colony for the playing of "The Good Companions." Valerie Taylor, who was the lovely Gainsborough lady in "Berkeley Square," is the Miss Trant, and her young husband, Hugh Sinclair, is playing Jollifant. They are the strength of the company. George Carney is the Oakroyd and Vera Lennox a fairly rough and ready Susie Dean. Edward Knoblock helped Priestley with the dramatization.

* *

Week's Plays Not So Good.

The rest of our drama this last week, though there was plenty of it, is not much worth talking about. A Vincent Lawrence play, "Washington Nights," was vicious in its nastiness and, praise be, lasted but a few days.

"Nikki," a musical comedy made from the John Monk Saunders stories, has found some friends, but hardly enough to keep it with us long. The musical hits of the town are the Aborn revivals of the older light operas. "The Chocolate Soldier" has just finished two big weeks, and "The Geisha" is to follow, with good old Jimmy Powers in his old rôle of Mun Hi, keeper of the teahouse.

In "Little Show"

WALTER O'KEEFE, who appears as master of ceremonies in the "Third Little Show" at the Great Northern, was a newspaper, advertising, and vaudeville writer up to 1928, when he authored his first show, "Just a Minute." The next spring, in Hollywood, he wrote his first song hit, "Little by Little," with Bobby Dolan.

Three seasons as master of ceremonies at the Club Gallant, New York, prepared him for the "Third Little Show." Notre Dame is his alma mater.

IN MUSICAL COMEDY

FLORIA WEST.

SHE is one of the principal entertainers in "Girl Crazy," the musical comedy now at the Garrick theater. Miss West is the brisk soubrette who leads a song now and then while Benny Rubin and Blossom Seeley are changing costumes.

The Armchair Playgoer

By Fanny Butcher.

IN NEW YORK.

The only openings in New York which armchair playgoers could attend last week were the revivals of two plays which have been revived often before, Dion Boucicault's "Streets of New York" and August Strindberg's "The Father." They will lure readers into the literature of their time, perhaps, and into the biographies of their authors.

AUGUST STRINDBERG.

Dion Boucicault was one of the most spectacular actor-playwrights of his day. His success began before he was 20 in a play called "London Assurance," which was produced in 1841. He died in New York in 1890, where he had made his home since 1875 and where as much of his reputation had been made as in London.

He was born in Dublin, the son of a French refugee and an Irish mother, and he was said to be the greatest stage Irishman of his day. Perhaps his most famous play was not an original play at all, but an adaptation of a novel by Gerald Griffin, called "The Collegians." The play was given the title "The Colleen Bawn." It was played in almost every city in the United Kingdom and the United States, and it made its author a handsome fortune.

August Strindberg, author of "The Father," was quite another sort of person. Born a generation later than Boucicault and in poverty, he lived his life long in suffering—physical privation as a child, mental turmoil as a youth, and hysterical spiritual disintegration as a man. He made two marriages, both of which were disastrous and both of which led him almost to insanity. There are many who think that he actually was insane.

"The Father" was written in 1887 during the stress of his first marital fiasco and shows the depressing effect of his persecution mania. It concerns the deliberate deluding by a wife of her husband into the belief that he is not the father of his much loved daughter. Insanity, always so near to the author himself, seizes the father and he is finally tricked into a strait-jacket by his old nurse. Only death solves his problem.

When the play appeared it naturally created a furor. It was a landmark of importance in the history of European realism. "Lady Julia" followed it in 1888, and other similar plays, most of which centered in the author's own marital tragedy. In those years [the years when Boucicault was living his last] Strindberg was writing his greatest novels, "The People of Hemso," which was published the same year as "The Father," and "In the Outer Skerries," which appeared in 1890, the year of Boucicault's death.

Strindberg's marriage was dissolved in 1891. His misery was accentuated by financial difficulties and insanity touched him more nearly than ever. He lived twenty-one years after that, however, piling up volumes. He is considered Sweden's greatest modern writer according to critics, and his work has exerted a deep and lasting influence on the European novel and drama.

Critics Often Too Severe with Cinema Epics

By Tom Pettey.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The old days of poking fun at the movies have gone, but a lot of people still like to pick flaws in the celluloid epics. Among the favorite subjects for highbrow magazines and Sunday supplements alike are:

"What is wrong with the talking pictures?"

"Censorship, or the purification of the films."

"Wastefulness in making pictures."

"The dearth of good, original material."

"The lack of art among the film artists."

One could go on and on, filling the page with these topics and still not scratch the surface of what has been written. For the most part the deluge of words has been filled with criticism. Few write in defense of the movies; it just is not profitable. The talkies need no defense, according to their makers, and whatever is written about them is just so much publicity for the old publicity mill. Nevertheless, this column is written in defense of the movies.

No Basic Mistake.

To begin with, there is nothing wrong with the movies. That is, nothing wrong in the sense of a fundamental, basic mistake. On the contrary, the talkies have made magnificent strides this season. The producers have produced the best of pictures, the players have grown in fame and ability, the industry has managed to hold up its head in the midst of depression. When the talkie houses show such pictures as "Street Scene," "Alexander Hamilton," and "Five Star Final" it is foolish to speak ill of the industry.

When such actors as George Arliss, the Barrymore brothers, and others of great skill find their greatest roles in the movies, why should we search for minor flaws?

A second popular topic is censorship. From time to time some highly misinformed writer predicts the downfall of the entire motion picture structure through this evil of evils. Certainly censorship becomes ridiculous at times, but it is necessary and has contributed a great deal to the industry. Without some form of censorship the movies would have hit a burlesque house level and remained there until doomsday.

I have seen just about as many raw scenes in the movies as I ever saw on the stage. It is to the credit of the censor that the films are washing up while the stage is reeking more strongly than ever. No one in a normal frame of mind would wish to see the talkies filled with dirt. For every goofy job of censoring such as putting dresses on Micky Mouse, clothing statues, or making all mothers married women, there have been constructive jobs such as the elimination of the pictures that glorify gangsters, the cutting of shots featuring scenes that might upset the digestive functions and the ban on profanity, except where it is essential to the plot of the picture.

Wastefulness Exaggerated.

Wastefulness in making pictures has been too highly exploited. It is true that there has been and possibly still is a lot of waste about the studios. For that matter, there is a lot of waste about newspaper offices, and banks have been known to fail because of "overhead." One of last season's film hits, "Hell's Angels," has demonstrated that gigantic expenditures running into the millions of dollars is not always money thrown away. If I am informed correctly, the above mentioned picture has paid a tidy profit to young Mr. Hughes, the "spendthrift."

Those producers who hire "talent" at fancy salaries and then make no use of the "talent" are not always dumb-bells. They have learned from experience that it is cheaper to keep a herd of "brains" on the scenario pay roll and pick off the real "ideas," if any, than it is to try to make pictures out of every "masterpiece" that is turned in. The movie folks are not the only ones who go in for "talent" in a big way.

I recall several stories in which high powered "talent" entered into competition with the working press. The publishers spent a lot of money, but they put the staff man's story in the lead. The "talent" provided the filler stuff. In one case I remember a one dollar a word man who arrived on the scene too befuddled to get into action. The local correspondent wired his agency to "sober up another genius." I call that extravagance.

Plenty of Good Material.

As for the dearth of good, original material, why look for original material when the libraries are full of unpictured masterpieces? The classics still offer an almost untouched mine of film material. In case present day literary compositions still are to be desired, the market is good. I saw Louis Bromfield's "Twenty-Four Hours" after the novel had been made into a play. It was as good as one could hope for. And as for original products, just give Eddie Cantor or any one of the four Marx brothers a cameraman and a stage and they will produce original matter in quantity and frequently quality.

The lack of art among the artists needs little explanation. There is no lack. The movie actors and actresses are giving as finished performances as the stage stars.

Week's Films Pepless.

Now, to tell you about a current picture. Ann Harding is on Broadway again. Her picture is called "Devotion" and deals in a charming manner with romance in an English barrister's home. Miss Harding plays the part of a girl grown tired of the humdrum life in her household. She goes out into the world disguised as a middle aged governess and gets employment in the lawyer's home.

Ann Harding in wig and spectacles loses an indefinable something. I like her better as Ann Harding. Nevertheless, the picture will get you.

Notre Dame's Four Horsemen are riding again, but not on college gridirons. They are being featured, with Lew Ayres, in "The Spirit of Notre Dame," the current film at the State-Lake theater.

Indian Summer Brings Chicago Playhouses into Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

AFTER attending and reviewing six premières within eight days to celebrate the grand fall opening of the Chicago theatrical season, one's mind becomes a haze of mixed impressions. Floating around in the fog, however, there are a series of wonderments. For example:

I wonder if Walker Whiteside knows that his frequent expectoration upon the stage, in the rôle of the spitting Irishman in "Surf," dilutes rather than fortifies that South Seas melodrama?

I wonder if Phil Baker and Ted Healy, the aggressive and reckless jesters of the revue called "Crazy Quilt," know that dozens and hundreds of average theater-goers, before buying their tickets to any show, ask me: "Is it clean?"

I wonder if Maurice Browne, who is offering "The Venetian" under the auspices of the Dramatic League of Chicago, knows that the finger of destiny has begun to point in his direction as the Siegfried to arouse the Goodman theater from its present state of coma?

I wonder if Donald Brian, co-starring with Edith Taliaferro in "Private Lives," will tell me the location of the fountain of youth from which he apparently quaffs magic draughts that preserve him as a perpetual Prince Danilo?

I wonder if Beatrice Lillie of "The Third Little Show" isn't the only comedienne in history whose sense of humor refused to be ruined by the acquisition of a British title?

I wonder if Gregory Ratoff, who has brought "Girl Crazy" into Chicago in order to fulfill a vow made upon all the ikons of old Russia, is the Morris Gest of the future?

I wonder why Chicago theater managers continue to use the huddle system for their first nights?

I wonder if the play going year in this town will sustain the spirited pace at which it has started?

Finger of Destiny.

My speculations upon the possibility of Maurice Browne's assuming the directorate of a new repertory company at the Goodman theater, perhaps a year hence when Chicago is dressing its windows in readiness for the Century of Progress exposition, have a background in rumor. There has been some slow burning talk on the subject. The trustees of the Goodman, however, are saying nothing, according to their custom, and Mr. Browne himself has dropped no hint of ambitions in this direction.

He seems to be a logical candidate for this labor of Hercules, if Hubert Osborne does not return to the Goodman, and I rise to place him in nomination. His qualifications are numerous. He is a pioneer of the art theater movement in this country; he has a Chicago background, and a loyal following. He has risen from "little" to "big" theater status. His shy beginning on the fourth floor back of the Fine Arts building twenty years ago has carried him to leadership on the London stage and rating as an international impresario. He has given a convincing demonstration of executive prowess as well as art theater ideals.

On the other hand, his control of the Goodman might be too remote. He has many irons in the fire; he is the lessee or owner of two important theaters in London; he contributes plays to the commercial American stage. As a hypothetical director of the Goodman, his authority would probably be delegated, through most of the year, to the lieutenants that he might place in charge there.

These remarks are intended as first aid to the finger of destiny. If they are wasted, I shall have to find myself another candidate, and probably will begin to cast flirtatious eyes at Eva Le Gallienne.

* *

Flaming Florentines.

Your affection for "The Venetian," which came to Chicago for its American première after a prosperous engagement in London, will depend largely upon your taste for "costume plays." When the drama gets into "costume" it also invades his

Despite all his medals, Warren Williams appears to be upset about something, but apparently his tirade is giving Bebe Daniels little to worry about. The picture is "Honor of the Family," and it's on display at the present time at the Oriental theater.

Regis Toomey is registering stark terror in this scene from "24 Hours," the photoplay adapted from Louis Bromfield's novel of the same name. Miriam Hopkins, shown above; Clive Brook, and Kay Francis also are in the picture, which is at the Chicago.

This is a puzzle picture. Try to find Hardie Albright, the smiling star of the stage success, "Young Sinners," and Maureen O'Sullivan, recently imported from the "Ould Sod," in this scene from "Skyline" at the Palace theater. (Note: They are in the center.)

By Edward Moore.

ONE of the early performances of the season, promises the Chicago Civic Opera company, will be Mozart's "The Magic Flute." It will be, as far as Chicago's opera is concerned, a novelty, and it is also going to take a lot of casting. About a quarter century has passed since the work went on here by a professional company. The last performance would seem to have been the time when Fritzi Scheff spilled the operatic beans by appearing as Papagena and getting more applause than the diva who sang the part of the Queen of the Night thought any Papagena was entitled to. It led to feelings and atmosphere not altogether those of sweetness and light, certainly not in the nature of Mozart's golden melodies.

Splendid Cast Chosen.

Papagena, by the way, is not mentioned in the program sent out by the opera company. But for the rest, here is what the company has assembled in the way of a stellar cast. It includes three highly specialized sopranos, a leading contralto, a leading tenor, a leading baritone, a buffo baritone, and a leading basso. They are thus itemized:

Sarastro	Alexander Kipnis
Astrofiammente	Nöel Eadie
Pamina, her daughter	Maria Rajdl
Queen's lady	Frida Leider
Queen's lady	Maria Olszewska
Prince Tamino	Paolo Marion
The Orator	Rudolf Bockelman
Papageno	Eduard Habich
Monostatos	Octave Dua

Conductor—Egon Pollak.

One of the reasons why Herbert Witherspoon made a trip to Europe last summer was to hunt up a coloratura soprano up to the music of Astrofiammente, who is otherwise known as the Queen of the Night. He had auditions here and there, in Paris, Berlin, Munich, and Salzburg, before making his choice. Finally he set-

Good morning!

"The Spirit of Notre Dame" is dedicated to the memory of the late Knute Rockne, famous and beloved head coach of a history making football team. You will remember that Mr. Rockne was on his way to the coast to complete a contract for some two reel football shorts when the airplane crash occurred that cost his life.

This picture's release at the start of the football season and on the eve of the Notre Dame-Northwestern game is timely and something in the nature of a stroke of genius on the part of the producers. Every football fan will want to see it. Every friend and admirer of Rockne will want to see it, while folks who don't know much about affairs of the gridiron, but like to keep up with current conversation, will buy tickets just to get a glimpse of the famous "Four Horsemen," Don Miller, Jim Crowley, Harry Stuhldreher, and Elmer Layden.

"Are those fellows really in this film?" you ask.

You bet they are! In closeups and in action.

* *

You See Them at Work.

You see their work in the Notre Dame-Army encounter cleverly inserted via news reel. As for the closeup—don't they all autograph a football for a small, enthusiastic boy who sentimentally requests their signatures?

"And now, what are you going to do with it, Sonny?" asks one of the four, fatuously.

"I'm goin' to sell it to a guy for ten bucks," replies mamma's little business man.

O, before I forget it—don't ever again pronounce Carideo with the accent on the "rid." It's Car-ri-day-o, bearing down hard on the "day." If you don't believe it, hear Frank himself give you the lowdown in the picture. And he ought to know!

Little Love Stuff.

As far as the actual football stuff goes, "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is fine! And J. Farrell McDonald seems to me the best man who could have been picked to represent Rockne. He bears an astonishing resemblance to the great coach and is a seasoned and sincere actor. He and his team, at practice, at play, and in their little human communions are convincing. It is not their fault that soppy hokum has been introduced into the story, nor should they be criticized for participation in the same. I won't go into detail about the regrettable mush

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY RULE STILL GOOD IN SCHOOLS

Chicago a Pioneer in Physical Training.

BY IRENE STEYSKAL.

A lot of cold, unbiased testing seems to have forced oblivion upon any number of the good old axioms and maxims, but there is one—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," it goes—that apparently has not suffered from a waning of popularity. As far as we know it never has been so much as questioned; certainly not by our law making body in Springfield, which considered it worthy of legislation.

Since laws are generally couched in more formal terms, however, the gentlemen who make them downstate proclaimed that "physical culture" should be taught in the public schools. Since that time each locality has been working out, according to its immediate needs and means, its own program of execution.

In the Chicago schools an attempt to introduce instruction in physical education was made as early as 1863. Definite steps were taken in 1885 following a demonstration of exercises in the Ogden school made by the Chicago Turngemeinde.

Chicago Leads Nation.

Chicago was the first city in the country to appoint [the following year] a supervisor of physical education. Henry Suder was the man appointed to the new post, a position which he held for 37 years.

A red letter year for Knute Rockne's alma mater, old Northwest Division High school, now Tuley, was 1890 when it erected the first fully equipped high school gymnasium for the teaching of physical education. Six years later the Franklin school claimed the same record for elementary schools.

In 1911 began the transition from the old swimmin' hole. Hyde Park High school was the first school for boys and girls erected with gymnasia and a swimming pool.

Pritzlaff Present Director.

The bureau of physical education was reorganized in 1925 with the appointment of one director and three supervisors. Two years ago the present director, August H. Pritzlaff, succeeded E. C. Delaporte to that position.

Mr. Pritzlaff had been instructor of physical education, coach and dean of boys at Senn High school preceding his appointment to the directorship. Associated with Mr. Pritzlaff on the bureau as supervisors are H. R. Crook, Vera Gardiner, and Maj. F. L. Beals. Maj. Beals, assisted by Maj. H. H. Moore, is in charge of military training in the high schools. Under him are twenty-six instructors directing the R. O. T. C. units which are established in twenty senior high schools.

Under the supervision of Miss Gardiner and Mr. Crook are the Normal college, with eight teachers of physical education; Crane college, with six; there are 204 instructors in twenty-four senior high schools; seventy-five in twenty-seven junior high schools; the 302 elementary schools have 228 teachers; eleven continuation schools have two instructors; and there are five in the six prevocational schools. There are also 16 physiotherapists employed in the city's four schools for crippled children.

Apart from the military training conducted by Maj. Beals, physical education in the public schools comprises physical education classes, corrective work, health education classes; athletic and after-school play; swimming instruction; and the safety patrols in the elementary and junior high schools.

Physical instruction in the kindergartens and elementary schools is, of course, more or less informal. In the kindergartens and through the third grade its consists largely of song games, story plays and the dramatization of activities in the school. From the third grade on a more formal course os provided.

A more definite and diversified program, made possible by equipment, time-allotment and the teaching staff, is carried out in the junior high schools. The number of instructors in physical education—one for approximately every 650 pupils—in the junior high schools varies from one to five.

In almost every high school in the city a girls' athletic association is established. Awards for athletic activities are based on a point system that considers not only achievement but sportsmanship, scholarship, and health activities.

Boys of the junior high schools also have their athletic associations. While emphasis is placed in intramural competition, limited competition between schools is permitted in indoor baseball, basketball, swimming and track and field athletics.

Bruno Kluge President.

The program for athletics in the senior high schools, superimposed upon the courses followed in the junior high schools, provides for much wider competition between schools. A board of control made up of representatives, who are physical education instructors, from each high school formulates rules and regulates the conducting of interscholastic competition. Heading this group as president is Bruno Kluge of Bowen High school. George W. Steffens of Austin is vice president, and Mr. Pritzlaff serves as secretary and treasurer.

Games played for coveted city championships range all the way from chess and checkers to football. Lindblom is present holder of the football title. Last season Lindblom won championships also for cross country running and novice and senior gymnastics.

Senn claims championships for golf, ice skating in the senior class, indoor and outdoor track in the senior division, and swimming [25 yards] in the senior and junior divisions.

Other title holders are: Lane for tennis, junior ice skating and baseball; Roosevelt for junior outdoor and indoor track and fencing; Crane for basketball in the heavyweight class and soccer; Marshall for basketball in the lightweight class; Lake View for rifle markmanship; Englewood for swimming [20 yards] in the senior division; Schurz for swimming [20 yards] in the junior division, and Tilden for wrestling.

Tuley claims the checkers champion, and Austin came out with flying colors in the ches tournament.

OUR TOWN

Paragraphs About Some Folks You Know.

MRS. BENJAMIN C. ALLIN of 4805 Dorchester avenue has been entertaining a distinguished visitor in the person of her son, Col. Benjamin C. Allin, a former Our Towner. Col. Allin has just returned from a six months' sojourn in India and is giving his old friends quite a line on the changeless east. Incidentally, he did his bit toward changing it, helping a native prince to build a harbor in his realm.

The Klinger-Gruendl clan has double cause for rejoicing these days. A daughter, Rita Dolores, was born to the Edward L. Klingers of 7030 Aberdeen street a few days ago and her first cousin, George Jr., son of the George Gruendls of 1254 West 74th place, chose the same twenty-four hour span to make his entrance into the world.

Our good friends the Fred M. Klines of 7009 Calumet avenue have had quite a time of it. First Don's car was stolen, golf clubs inclosed. Then Edna deserted the family roof for the University of Illinois. And now the senior Klines—both Mr. and Missus—are suffering from severe cases of writers' cramp. Cause being, 150 notices for the Park Manor Woman's club opening had to be sent out by Mrs. Kline as corresponding secretary, and she finally pressed Fred into service around the old dining room table. The notices will be printed next year, if Fred has anything to say about it.

SPEAKING of the good offices of club women's husbands in boosting club activities, we wonder whether members of the Harvey Woman's club realize what they owe G. A. Stevenson, president of the First National bank of Harvey. Not as president of the above institution, but as husband of the president of the Harvey Woman's club, he has sent us two communications regarding club doings.

Among the gay events on the autumn calendar we note the fall dance and festival of the Sadowski Undertakers, to be held Oct. 24 at Templin's hall, 88th street and Commercial avenue. Aloysius McNeely is chairman, and H. Szumsnki, M. Ziemakowski, R. Sadowski, C. Tanski, and J. Koch are assisting.

Roseland's fingers are crossed for Miss Dorothy Jahn, Miss Roseland, who left last week-end for Hollywood to try her luck in the movies. Maybe the old home town won't be proud if Dorothy's name appears in electric lights some few months hence! Dorothy, you know, got the chance to have a screen test along with the crown of "Miss Roseland" presented in the beauty contest sponsored by the People's store and the South End Chamber of Commerce.

LIONS PROPOSE MEMORIAL TO PAUL CORNELL

Tribute to "Father" of South Parks Planned.

A movement to erect a memorial to Paul Cornell, "father of the south park system," has been started by the Hyde Park Lions club.

I. G. Herzka, who suggested a lasting tribute to the Hyde Park pioneer, has been appointed chairman of the Cornell Memorial committee by President I. M. Cohn.

Mr. Herzka, a tailor, 1618 East 53d street, has been among the loyal Hyde Park enthusiasts since coming to the community in 1896. He recalls Mr. Cornell as a rugged man of the Lincoln type in appearance and he has never ceased paying homage to the lawyer and real estate operator because of his foresight in donating East End park to the city to provide recreation for oncoming generations.

Members of Committee.

It has been Mr. Herzka's custom for years to take early morning walks, both in winter and in summer, through East End park. It is here that the committee proposes to erect a statue of Paul Cornell or a much needed shelter house to his memory.

Members of the committee working with Mr. Herzka on the memorial idea are Dr. E. W. Oliver, George Bilger, Spencer W. Castle, Paul J. Delacour, A. Bernard, William H. Sherwood, Samuel J. Aurelius, Dr. Robert J. Smith, A. P. Dippold and John J. O'Connell.

At a recent meeting of the Lions club John Evans Cornell, son of the pioneer Hyde Parker, was a guest. The memorial plan was broached at the meeting and Mr. Cornell expressed his appreciation of the project. The committee believes that prominent residents of the community, outside the club membership, should be enlisted in the endeavor.

Relieved of All His Cash.

Born in New York state in 1822, Paul Cornell arrived in Chicago by stage coach in 1847. On entering the Lake house, at Lake and Clark streets, young Cornell placed his bundle, containing his resources of $1.50, on the desk beside him, and during his negotiations with the clerk a bystander relieved him of all his worldly possessions.

The incident, however, failed to check the youth's ambitions to play an adventurous part in the developing city. Although he had been admitted to the bar, Cornell saw greater opportunities in real estate. He made a study of the Hyde Park territory and bought 300 acres of land along the lake front. Later he sold 60 of these acres to the Illinois Central railroad with a condition that the company maintain a service of one train daily to the new subdivision.

The subdivision hesitated for a time in its progress and then began to flourish. Cornell built the old Hyde Park hotel and, when it burned, planned for the present structure.

Cornell was one of the original agitators for the south park system of playgrounds and boulevards for the multitudes that would follow. He was one of four commissioners of the first south park system. Mr. Cornell died in 1904, having witnessed great changes in the prairie acres of the Hyde Park he loved.

ANGLER TOURNEY CALLED AS FISH CLUTTER LAGOON

Catch All You Can in Hour and Win Prize.

There's going to be a free-for-all fishing tournament Saturday. It's going to be down in Washington park, where Edward Kelly, the boatman, says the fish are so plentiful this year that it is impossible to row boats through the lagoon.

"They're vicious, too!" he said. "They snap at horses which cross the bridle path bridge and jump at birds on overhanging branches."

V. K. Brown, superintendent of playgrounds and sports, said he understood that they were even chasing each other up trees. He opined this was probably dogfish chasing catfish, but it was impossible to substantiate this story.

A hundred ideas were hatched on Mr. Kelly's urgent demand for immediate relief. Suggestions of seining and dynamite were dismissed when one official thought of a fishing tourney. So a fishing tourney it is. It is to be sponsored by the Izaak Walton league, but is open to all.

Limited to Midday Hours.

So Saturday has been set aside as the day. Fishing will start at 9 o'clock in the morning and continue until 3 in the afternoon. These hours were decided on because it was thought that early morning or late afternoon fishing would be taking undue advantage of the finny creatures. It also is figured that the usual midday fish siesta will not prevent some fine catches.

Entries will be received all day Thursday at the boat landing in Washington park. There will be no fee and no age limit. Fifty rowboats will be provided for the contest, two entrants in each boat. But each contestant will be allowed to fish just one hour, a whistle to punctuate the starting and finishing times.

Prizes will be given not only to the person snaring the largest fish and the one with the largest catch, but plans are being made to reward the man who loses the "biggest one" and to the person with the best fish story to tell as a result of his day's experiences.

Stocked Last Year and This.

Lest any one should doubt that there is an oversupply of the finny creatures in the Washington lagoon, it should be known that the place was heavily stocked last spring—and also last year. Mr. Brown said that copious quantities of young bass, pike, and bluegills were dumped into the lagoon and that there already were large numbers of catfish and other members of the bullhead family living there.

The other main event in the south parks Saturday is to be the football field day at 9:30 o'clock in the morning in the Washington park meadow. This is open to boys from 10 to 18, inclusive, with points being given on a graded scale according to age. A maximum of 20 boys is allowed from each of the 18 member playgrounds of the system.

Events include punting, drop kicking, place kicking, and forward passing. The best marks made by the south park lads are to be matched against those of boys from parks in other middle west cities. Since football always has been considered too tough a game for the younger boys, who make up the large percentage of those enrolled in the parks, the field day is set up as the football substitute. It is believed that this makes for better players than too much football when the boys are young.

D. O. M'DEARMON HEADS CARMEL HIGH QUARTERLY

The Mount Carmel Oriflamme, quarterly publication of the students of Mount Carmel High school, last week announced selection of its staff for the current school year.

David O. McDearmon will be editor in chief and Thomas Mier is managing editor. The Rev. Andrew L. Weldon is faculty adviser. "Hi Lites" are in charge of Russell McCahill, and Ray Gokey will take care of alumni news.

Athletics will be taken care of by Benjamin Berry, Joseph Nowicki, and John Enright. Art is in charge of Fred Cashman, Stanley Zabrowski, and Thomas Foster. Thomas Sullivan will handle the poetry department. Associates are John McKain, Edward Walsh, and Robert Sugrue.

The Oriflamme has won numerous medals and honor ratings from the National Interscholastic Press association, Art Craft guild, Columbia Press association, and various state honors. By successive wins in 1923 and 1924 it became the first high school annual to take a state championship twice in succession.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, Oct. 12.

Rake up bare spots in the lawn, scratch with steel toothed rake, sow grass seed over it, and germination will quickly occur. A little commercial fertilizer will stimulate the young plants into vigorous growth and enable them to endure through the winter. If it is desired to keep root crops outdoors through the winter prepare the place now, before severe frosts. Carrots, late cabbage, beets (not too old and woody), potatoes, sweet potatoes, and turnips may be kept by this method.

Tuesday, Oct. 13.

Some of the early hardy chrysanthemums are bursting into bloom. A new yellow sort, known as Valerine, is a low growing variety attractive for Chicago and vicinity. Keep an eye open for varieties that come into early bloom because only the extremely early kinds can be depended on for a display. Continue to make cuttings of tender plants that have been growing outdoors. Pot a few plants, cutting back at the time of lifting.

Gladiolus that have ripened their leaves should be dug, the excessive soil removed, the corms dried for a few hours, and later placed in a cool, dry basement over winter. Save all bulbils of the rare kinds for future planting. Exchange with gardening friends.

Dahlias may be dug, or the tubers left in the ground until frost. Lift the tubers without breaking because they keep better. Cut off the stems a few inches above the ground before digging. Do not neglect labeling securely. Place a six inch layer of sand on the cellar floor, pack the tubers in layers, covering each layer with dry sand or peatmoss, and cover the top layer with a five or six inch layer.

Wednesday, Oct. 14.

Try a few of the bulbous iris in a sheltered and well drained situation, such as a rock garden. Pansies and violas may be propagated from cuttings at this time, an excellent method of preserving an outstanding variety. Remove the side shoots, with a few roots attached, if possible, and insert them firmly in sandy soil in a cold frame or box which may be placed in the frame. Cover the sash with boards during cold weather. Many other plants may be increased in this way. Plant narcissus bulbs for their effect in the perennial borders, or for naturalizing with shrubs or in the outlying sections of the grounds.

Thursday, Oct. 15.

Bring in the amaryllis from out of doors, gradually dry them off by reducing the supply of water from day to day, and store in a dry, cool place. They become active toward January, at which time they may be repotted. Many inquiries regarding the proper distance apart that street trees should be planted have been received. The elm, which is popular, should be used on wide streets, and planted 50 feet apart. Elms never attain their maximum beauty if planted close together. The hard maple is also a large growing tree and should be used on wide streets. Plant the ash and tree of heaven on narrow streets and 40 feet apart. Use one species along a street instead of a miscellaneous assortment with a different habit of growth. The box elder, poplar, catalpa, and willow must be sparingly used, or planted where nothing else will grow. They are short lived and easily injured by storms.

Friday, Oct. 16.

When planting hedges, and especially the privet, plant at least three to six inches deeper than the lowest branch of the plant. These plants root along the stems and deep planting makes a thicker hedge. When planting cut to within six inches of the ground to force the dormant buds into vigorous activity. Mulch after the ground freezes. Plant a pussy willow (salix caprea has the largest catkins) for a supply of bouquet material in early spring. The native species (salix discolor) has smaller flowers, but is very good. Quarter inch mesh wire will keep rabbits from injuring trees.

Saturday, Oct. 17.

Plant a few shrubs or low trees to attract birds. Useful plants for this purpose are the chokeberry, spicebush, Japanese barberry, cornelian cherry, some dogwoods, Morrow's honeysuckle, mulberry, smooth and staghorn sumac, elderberry, mountain ash, snowberry, Indian currant, snowball, vinurnum dentatum, lantana, lentago, prunifolium, and tomentosum. Wild grape twiggy shrubs form nesting places. Plant some hybrid lilacs to furnish a range of free flowering, tall shrubs, and in unusual colors.

The Linnea Aid society has postponed its fall concert from Oct. 21 to Nov. 4, it was announced last week. The affair will be held in Englewood Swedish Mission church, 59th and Carpenter streets.

HYDE PARK Y. M. WILL HOLD OPEN HOUSE 10 DAYS

Guest Period to Open on Wednesday.

A ten day open house and guest period at the Hyde Park Y. M. C. A. will open with a dinner at 6:30 o'clock Wednesday evening. No membership drives are held at the Hyde Park "Y," and the open house takes the place of such a campaign.

A number of "Y" officials, both local and in other parts of the city, are to be on hand at the dinner. William Francis, president of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. board of managers, is to be the main speaker.

Thursday evening will be homecoming, a dozen former mayors of the "Y" are expected to be among the numerous old residents returning for the occasion. Fred H. Moss, 1225 East 52d street, is general chairman of the open house, with James Bogie as assistant in charge of homecoming arrangements.

Father and son night will be celebrated Friday. No set program is planned, and the evening will be an informal one, with fathers playing billiards and swimming with their sons as they look over the facilities used by the lads.

Chairman Newton C. Farr and other members of the committee of management are coöperating with Mr. Moss in directing the open house, as are members of the staff who include O. E. Peterson, executive secretary; L. W. Underhill, business secretary; C. L. Shaw, program secretary, and Frank M. Wilder, physical director.

The "Y" rifle club also will open its season Wednesday evening on the 50 foot range in the auxiliary gymnasium.

Hodes Reavows Support of Park for South Shore

Ald. Barnet Hodes [7th] last week branded as false the reports that he is lukewarm or opposed to the projected small park and playground for the south shore because the ward remapping placed the proposed site at 76th street and Jeffery avenue on the boundary between the 7th and 8th wards. "There is no substance or fact in this possibility," he wrote to Elmer M. Walsh, president of the South Bryn Mawr Improvement association, in response to a query. He recalled that he has appeared before the south park board urging the park.

The annual series of the Emil G. Neighborhood Theaters

One of the best of recent shows in the loop is at the Tower this week. It is "The Last Flight," which is adapted from "Nikki and Her War Birds." The story is of jangled nerves, lives out of tune, at the close of the world war. Helen Chandler does beautiful work as Nikki and there is appeal to the four lads—Richard Barthelmess, John Mack Brown, David Manners, and Elliott Nugent. Technically excellent, full of suspense, it pulls at the heart. "The Brat" is coupled with it.

"An American Tragedy."

The much discussed "An American Tragedy" holds the center of attention at the Tivoli. Based on a true story of New York state, it deals with a boy's amour dilemma, the unraveling of which is pure tragedy. A shopgirl working under him in a factory has given herself to him, but his love wanes and he wants another—a wealthy girl. Though promising to marry the former, he has decided to drown her. The rowboat turns over—but accidentally. Genuine acting by three youths puts the picture over. Phillips Holmes handles a difficult rôle well; Sylvia Sidney appeals instantly in genuine fashion.

Avalon Offers "Pagan Lady."

"You talk about your God dealing out blessings like He was a delivery boy with a basketful of groceries! My God's not like that." Quoth Evelyn Brent in the title rôle of "Pagan Lady," which is at the Avalon with "Confessions of a Co-ed." She and Charles Bickford, bootlegger, are pretty good folks at heart, as you will find out. Conrad Nagel is a missionary, the first who ever proposed marriage to Miss Brent. Good show. Phillips Holmes and Sylvia Sidney play the leads in "Confessions," which is not so good a show.

Anna May Wong Stars.

Anna May Wong carries off the honors in "Daughter of the Dragon," which shares the Maryland screen with the Gaynor-Farrell romantic and pleasing piece, "Merely Mary Ann." The former picture is another of the Fu Manchu [Warner Oland] series and probably the last, for Fu meets his death. Sessue Hayakawa is another starred player.

"Birth of Nation" at Shore.

Lillian Gish, Henry Walthall, Wallace Reid, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper. Yes—it's "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's master production of 15 years ago, which is drawing as appreciative audiences now as then, for it's just as great on modern day standards as 15 years ago. It shows at the Shore theater Friday and Saturday. "Hell Bound" is an added attraction.

Two Houses Show Darrow Film.

"Mystery of Life," fascinating compilation of Clarence Darrow, is worth looking at, no matter what side of the evolution question you lean toward. It will show with "This Modern Age" at the Grove and Jeffery on Tuesday and Wednesday. The latter has stellar work by Joan Crawford and Pauline Frederick to overcome any other deeficiencies.

Bennetts at Piccadilly.

Constance Bennett [never better] plays with her great dad, Richard Bennett, in "Bought" at the Piccadilly today, Monday, and Tuesday. Fine work by Ben Lyon is thrown in for good measure in this fine movie. You'll like his pipe. The story is of a girl who points everything toward an entreé in society, willing to sell herself to get there. Watch her change her mind. "Sporting Blood," with Clark Gable and some fine horses, and "Silence," powerful work starring Clive Brook, are other features of the week.

C. E. Chadwicks Celebrate Their Golden Wedding Day

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Chadwick, 7808 Saginaw avenue, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary Tuesday. The Chadwicks have lived in Chicago for 26 years. They have five children and nine grandchildren.

S. CHICAGO AVE. PAVING TO BE BEGUN TUESDAY

The paving of South Chicago avenue between 71st and 95th streets with gasoline tax funds will be begun Tuesday with a ceremony sponsored by the South Chicago Chamber of Commerce. President Emmett Whealan of the county board will be the special guest. Others on hand are to include Maj. George A. Quinlan, county highway superintendent; Duncan M. Campbell, assistant superintendent; Ald. William A. Rowan [10th], and Ald. David L. Sutton [8th], as well as leaders of the South Chicago and Grand Crossing [formerly South Woodlawn] chambers of commerce. The paving crew will begin at 71st street and work south. Underground work is complete except for the southern part of the strip to be paved, and that will be done by the time the pavers are ready to begin work there.

CALL ALDERMEN FOR SHOWDOWN ON PROJECTS

S. Side Federation Urges Action Before Fair.

Eleven south side aldermen have been invited to attend the meeting of the South Side Federation of Improvement Associations Wednesday evening in the community room of the Chatfield Trust and Savings bank, 7936 Cottage Grove avenue.

The federation, consisting of 29 member organizations, is particularly interested in gaining as many improvements as possible for the south side before the World's Fair.

Propositions to be discussed with the aldermen include the removal of street car tracks on South Park avenue between 63d and 67th streets, opening Michigan avenue south of 63d street, opening streets through the Nickel Plate right of way, and the opening and widening of 74th street between Damen and Irving avenues.

Track Depression on Program.

Other matters include transportation, schools, parks and playgrounds, stop and go lights, and depression of the Illinois Central tracks on the South Chicago branch.

City council members in the federation's territory who have been asked to the meeting include Ald. Irving Schreiver [5th], Ald. John Healy [6th], Ald. Barnet Hodes [7th], Ald. David L. Sutton [8th], Ald. Sheldon W. Govier [9th], Ald. William A. Rowan [19th], Ald. Thomas A. Doyle [13th], Ald. Terrence F. Moran [16th], Ald. Frank J. Corr [17th], Ald. Walter W. Morris [18th], and Ald. O. E. Northrup [19th].

Two Send Acceptances.

Ald. Healy and Ald. Hodes already have written their acceptances, while Ald. Sutton said he will be unable to attend because of a previous engagement.

Ralph O. Butz, attorney for the federation, will make a report on real estate tax complaints filed by the federation with the assessors and board or review. Gerald H. Voss, president of the federation, will preside at the meeting.

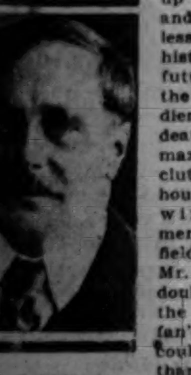
H. G. WELLS, ONCE FOE OF RADIO, TO MAKE U. S. BOW

Proves He's No Perfect Prognosticator.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.



H. G. WELLS.
[Kadel & Herbert.]

H. G. Wells is by no means the perfect prognosticator. No longer ago than 1927 he ran up against radio and found it useless. The famous historian of the future pictured the invisible audience bored to death while a maze of aerials cluttered up the housetops like wire entanglements on the fields of France. Mr. Wells then doubted that even the most ardent fan's enthusiasm could last more than two weeks, and thought that radio listeners must be "very sedentary persons living in badly lighted houses or otherwise unable to read."

Since then Mr. Wells has got over his gloomy outlook and has been employing the ether waves to talk on "What I Would Do with the World." Next week he comes to New York and on Saturday evening he will speak over an NBC coast to coast net, including WENR.

Apparently no one gets homesick easier than a New Yorker abroad. As soon as Jimmy Walker hit the continent he was talking back over the radio. At 4 o'clock this afternoon Roxy is going to speak over NBC from Berlin.

The prince of Wales and John Masefield, poet laureate, will also be heard in international broadcasts this month. The prince is to speak at 2:45 p. m. Wednesday, Oct. 21, over CBS from London, and Masefield will discuss "Ships and Their Builders" at 2:30 the following afternoon on the same net.

When H. H. Rajput, Hindu graduate of Oxford and a former officer in the British intelligence service, came to Chicago to inaugurate his series of adventure stories based on war experiences he turned to the University of Chicago to get real Hindu music. He found there several students with native instruments, among them stringed affairs used in India for more than 2,000 years. Over the air they sound like flutes and other woodwinds.

James Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, dropped in to inspect the Hindu instruments, threw up his hands, and walked out.

Now that the nation's leading dance orchestras are playing college medleys nightly, MCA hastens to point out that 50 per cent of the nationally known orchestras attended college and that 70 per cent of the musicians employed in these orchestras are men of university training.

But not so many of them, possibly, are graduates. Nor does it make any difference.

Ferde Grofe presented a number Friday evening on the Whiteman hour memorializing the life of Knute Rockne. . . . Ernest Naftzger, the Something for Everyone man, has cracked 10,584 jokes over the air and has had his name misspelled 74 ways in fan mail. . . . Kate Smith has seen her fourth full moon come over the mountain from the Palace. . . . Red Cagle, the sometime pigskin carrier, has made his radio debut. . . . CBS is broadcasting football by television. It's the miniature scoreboard arrangement.

Art Jarrett, who has a style combining the lyric and downright, lowdown jazz, will make his bow as a band leader over CBS at 2:30 tomorrow. . . . Harry Stuhldreher, once one of Notre Dame's famed Four Horsemen, will be heard over NBC at 8:15 tonight. . . . Bob Becker, TRIBUNE outdoor writer, and Cal Johnson start a series titled "Around the Campfire" for NBC at 8:45 tomorrow evening. . . . "Seth Parker" and his Jonesport neighbors are going to tour the nation. They will be in Chicago on Oct. 25 and 26 and will broadcast from local studios.

Song hits, fashions, sports, and historic events of the '60s are woven into a new radio series titled Musical Memories, to be heard over CBS beginning next Sunday at 5:30 p. m. . . . Of Cantor's many Cantor for President slogans, we prefer "Don't say can't; say Cantor." . . . Ten minutes after Ted Weems introduced his new "Since I Broke That Record" [you can hear the crack], fans who heard it over the air appeared at the Trianon to hear more. . . . From Russ Columbo, girls: "My ideal girl has to be intelligent, a good sport, and be possessed of an infinite sweetness."

Philadelphia Symphony to Open with Bach, Handel

The whole range of 17th century music, from the founding of modern opera in Italy to the great religious and symphonic school of Bach and Handel, will be surveyed by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia orchestra in the first concert of the season scheduled for 7:15 to 9 p. m. tomorrow.

CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA AGAIN TO BE HEARD ON AIR

13 Saturday Programs Planned.

Chicago's world famous Civic opera will again be broadcast this year to a nation of music lovers by NBC. This announcement was made yesterday by M. H. Aylesworth, president of the company.

The stirring music, pageantry and drama of the opera will be brought to the fireside of American homes, no matter whether in the crowded city or the lonely back woods settlement for the third successive year through the coöperation of the Civic Opera company and NBC.

Many New Presentations.

Under the new directorship of Herbert Witherspoon, famous in his own right as an opera star and as a director, the opera company will this year offer new presentations never before heard in this country and will also bring to radio listeners a host of new and brilliant singers gathered by Mr. Witherspoon from all parts of Europe during a scouting trip for talent last summer.

This year, instead of cutting into the middle of the opera as has been the custom in the past, the broadcast will run from 8 to 8:30 p. m., central standard time, each Saturday night, beginning Nov. 7, thus allowing the radio listener to hear the overture and entire first act of the performance.

13 Operas to Be Presented.

Further perfections in broadcasting technique are expected to be introduced in the broadcasts this year allowing music lovers to hear the music nearly as perfectly as though they were sitting in the best seats in the house. The new parabolic microphones, known as the "human ears" of radio, will be used.

In all 13 operas are expected to be presented during the season of 1931-'32 including old favorites and American premiers.

The Chicago Civic opera was the first grand opera in the world to be broadcast direct from the stage.

Yank Taylor to Talk on Going to Press Hour

O. N. (Yank) Taylor, vice president of the Newspaper Radio Editors' association and radio editor of the Chicago Daily Times, will greet radio listeners over Columbia during Bill Schudt's "Going to Press" from 5 to 5:15 p. m. Wednesday.

5TH ROW CENTER PREMIER IS SET FOR 5:15 TODAY

Miss Taliaferro, Brian to Be Presented.

From the theater box office comes the title of W-G-N'S new Sunday theater review, "Fifth Row Center," which will have its premier presentation at 5:15 this afternoon with Edith Taliaferro and Donald Brian, the stars of Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," as its opening attraction.

"Fifth Row Center" is dedicated to the legitimate theater and will present each Sunday intimate chatter about some outstanding show appearing on the Chicago stage, and feature the personal appearance of some star in the production.

Starred as Child.

Edith Taliaferro has appeared in scores of plays in America, England, and Australia. She started her stage career when she was two and a half years old and had star rôles in "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" as a child.

Donald Brian, who supports Miss Taliaferro, has been a stage favorite for many years, his first Broadway appearance having been in "Florodora." Real success, however, did not come to him until the night "The Merry Widow" was unfurled to a wildly enthusiastic audience. Brian made a great hit in the rôle of Prince Danilo and a new star was made. In recent seasons he has appeared in "How's Your Health," "The Queen's Husband," "Candlelight," and the Players' club revival of "Becky Sharp."

Many Stars Presented.

In presenting "Fifth Row Center," W-G-N is enlarging its already successful policy of giving its radio audience stage stars of prominence. During the last year it has brought before the microphone such famous personages as Otis Skinner, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Grace George, De Wolf Hopper, Tom Powers, Oscar Shaw, Blanche Ring, and Lillian Kemble Cooper.

Among the stage attractions which W-G-N will have in future "Fifth Row Center" programs are: "The Silent Witness," "The Third Little Show," "Girl Crazy," "Crazy Quilt," "The Venetian," and "Surf."

MRS. HOOVER TO SPEAK DURING BOAT CEREMONY

Mrs. Herbert Hoover will christen the American Clipper, a new flying boat with a capacity of 45 passengers, at 1:30 tomorrow, the ceremony to be described over both networks.

The event will take place at the Anacosta naval air station in Washington, after which an initial flight will be made, when Mrs. Hoover will be flown over the capital city.

Announcers will also accompany the ship on its flight, and by means of portable sets will broadcast interesting sights which will be witnessed. By means of a special receiving apparatus located on the ground, the description from the plane will be passed out through the network.

Among the notables who will take part in the ceremonies will be Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, Congressman Will Wood, Clyde W. Kelly, known as the father of the air mail act; Crestes Ferrara, ambassador from Cuba, and J. T. Trippe, president of the Pan-American Airways.

Allerton Glee Club to Sing More College Songs

The Allerton Glee club will again include college songs in their program from W-G-N at 9 o'clock Saturday.

YALE BANQUET, GRID TILT WITH U. OF C. ON W-G-N

Angell, Hutchins, Stagg to Speak.

When Yale alumni invade Chicago next week-end for the Yale-Chicago football game most of their celebrations will be carried to the rest of the country over W-G-N, THE TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel.

Five speakers who will be heard at the banquet in the Stevens hotel Friday evening will be Dr. James R. Angell, president of Yale university; Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago and former dean of the Yale law school; George Vincent, chairman of the board of Rockefeller institute; Prof. William Lyon Phelps, Yale's famous writer and critic, and Amos Alonzo Stagg, graduate of Yale in 1888, who is celebrating his 40th year as Chicago's football coach.

Music to Be Broadcast.

In addition to its broadcast of the addresses, W-G-N will have specially located microphones in the banquet hall to pick up the music and revelry. There will be the music of the Yale band of almost a hundred pieces, which will be heard in a concert when W-G-N comes on the air at 7:30, and group singing of former members of the glee club who will be gathered at one table.

On Saturday afternoon the Yale football team will appear for the first time in Chicago, playing Alumnus Stagg's Maroons at Stagg field. And Albie Booth will make "his last appearance west of Chapel street," according to advance announcements.

Quin Ryan will take the air from the field at 1:45 next Saturday to give listeners the play by play story of the game and the attendant festivities.

Dr. G. W. Dowie to Speak.

Various religious denominations will be interested in the address of Dr. George W. Dowie, director of the United Spiritual Movement, who will speak at 1 o'clock Thursday on the W-G-N midday services. Many Chicago churches, particularly those of the Presbyterian denomination, are participating in this movement..

Other speakers whom Dr. John L. Dickson, director of the midday services, has obtained for the week are: Dr. Herbert Whiting Virgin, pastor of the North Shore Baptist church, who will talk Monday, and Prof. A. C. McGiffert of the Chicago Theological seminary, who will give the address on Tuesday.

A layman of the Lutheran church, David Chindblom will speak Wednesday, and Dr. W. E. J. Bratz, editor of the Epworth Herald, a journal for young people, is to talk on Saturday. Dr. Dickson will speak at 12:45 on Friday.

SENATOR LEWIS WILL BE SUNDAY EVENING SPEAKER

United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis will address the Chicago Sunday Evening club at the meeting to be held tonight at Orchestra hall. Starting at 7:30 p. m., the services will be broadcast through station WMAQ.

During the preliminary services an informal Bible talk on "The Trail of the Pathfiender" will be given by Clifford W. Barnes, president of the organization. Included on the musical program will be an organ recital by Stanley Martin and a vocal solo by Mark Love. Under the direction of Edgar Nelson the choir will sing a group of three anthems in one of which Mrs. Mabel Sharp-Herdien will be heard as soloist.

B. E. Sunny will read the scripture and the prayer is to be led by Dr. von Ogden Vogt of the First Unitarian society of Chicago.

Beethoven Is Available for Disk Collector

"Pastoral" Shows the Lyric Side of Famous Composer's Nature.

By Edward Moore.

THANKS to Brunswick, there is some more Beethoven available for the disk collectors. In album 24, Hall of Fame-International, [illegible] to 90194, inclusive, the State Opera orchestra of Berlin plays the Sixth, or "Pastoral" symphony under the direction of Hans Pfitzner.

It is no small undertaking to put a complete symphony on the disks, but as one looks back at the accretions of perhaps only a few months, one begins to see the great service the recording companies have been doing in spreading symphonic music around the musical world. This symphony classifies as an important addition to the list. It is Beethoven's finest lyric expression in all the music he wrote for symphony orchestra, and it has received a recording, in a good many respects, worthy of it.

It shows pretty nearly everything Beethoven thought of on the lyric side of his nature: sustained song, poetic imagination, humor, happiness, tenderness, all that one would expect in lyric expression, except one. Rather peculiarly, in spite of his life in Vienna, he would seem to have been little affected by the grace of the aristocratic dance. When he dances in music he is square-toed, even wooden-shod, and it is the only deficiency in the spiritual makeup of one of the greatest composers who ever lived.

An Expression of Feeling.

By no means, the least element in the greatness of this work is Beethoven's refusal to build it as a naturalistic picture of nature. He named it "Pastoral," but he insisted it was to be more an expression of feeling than a tone picture. Other composers might well borrow his restraint.

Mr. Pfitzner knows his Beethoven and conducts the symphony well. The recording is almost as good. Eleven sides are taken up by the reproduction, the twelfth being turned over to another Beethoven work, but one almost never heard in this country. It is the adagio movement from the "Street Song" trio, opus 11, written for piano, clarinet, and cello, and played by M. Raucheisen, L. Kohl, and J. [illegible]. The performance is faithful and industrious, rather than inspired, but it is correct, and it is a chance to hear one of Beethoven's less known but quite charming works.

Rethberg Sings for Victor.

Victor, in the classification called [illegible], presents the extraordinarily beautiful voice of the famous dramatic soprano, Elisabeth Rethberg, in two excerpts not of opera, but of operetta. The Csardas from Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" occupies one side and "Hab' ich nur deine Liebe" from Von Suppe's "Boccaccio," the other number of 7415. They are uncommonly pleasant tunes, and Mme. Rethberg sings them with the same charming loveliness she gives to her rôle in "The Bartered Bride," which is another way of saying that if she had not made a name for herself in the lofty heights of grand opera, she would have been an equally famous figure in the lighter lyric field.

In this connection, there is place for another mention of Richard Tauber, the German tenor, who is about to try his first conclusions on the concert stages of America. Columbia presents him in number G-[illegible]-M with two songs, Leoncavallo's "Mattinata" and Toselli's "Serenade," both accompanied by the Dajos Bela concert orchestra.

These songs do not belong to operetta, but both of them should. In fact, it is a great surprise that they are not sung at least two or three times a night over the radio stations. They fasten themselves to the ear and memory, and stay there indefinitely. And once again there is reason to believe that Mr. Tauber is going to be a hit when he appears in the flesh.

* *

In Lighter Veing.

Victor dance records:

[illegible]—"I Love Louisa" and "New Sun in the Sky," by Reisman's orchestra.

[illegible]—"It's the Girl" and "Take it from Me," by Reisman's orchestra.

[illegible]—"Limehouse Blues" and "Echoes of the Jungle," by Ellington's orchestra.

FOUR SINGERS IN THE CAST OF "THE MAGIC FLUTE"

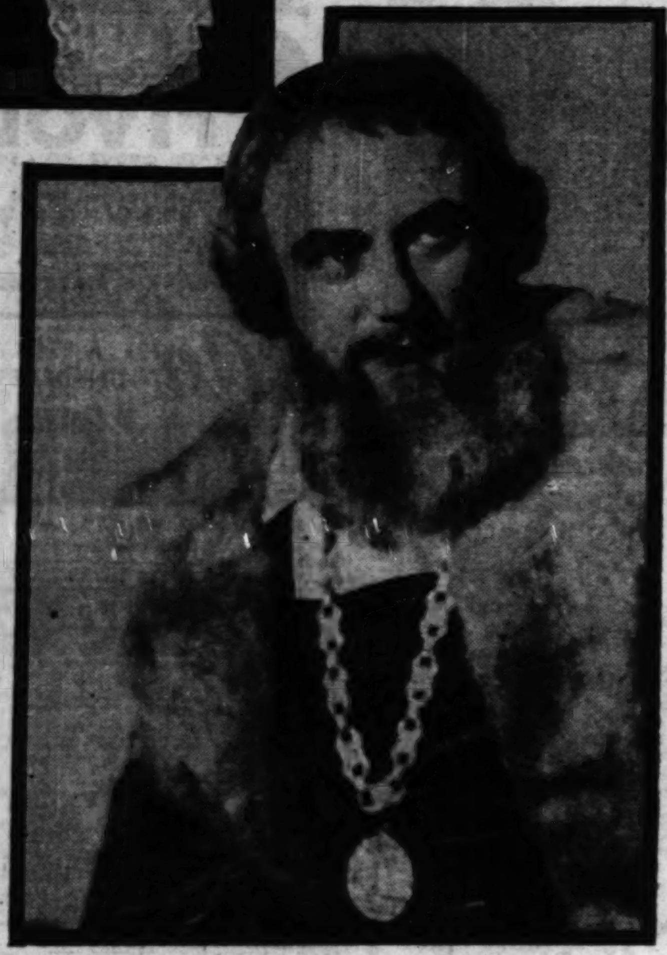
Frida Leider, who will be one of the three ladies in waiting.

Alexander Kipnis, who will sing the role of Sarastro.



Rudolph Bockelmann, who will appear as the Orator.

tled upon Miss Eadie, in which decision he agreed with Col. Blois, director of Covent Garden at London. For Miss Eadie sang the part at London and seems to have been well liked.

Another soprano, one of the queen's ladies in waiting, is likewise still to be chosen. Most of the rest of the cast made themselves favorably known in earlier performances. Mme. Leider and Mme. Olszewska have been here for several seasons. Mr. Marion has still to receive the verdict of Chicago audiences.

Talk About Masonry.

There is so much mysterious talk about the connection of "The Magic Flute" with Masonic orders that it is a bit difficult for one not a Mason to straighten out what it is all about. The work was written by Mozart for a carnival theater in Vienna at a time when there was much gossip about the attitude of the ruling classes toward the orders, especially the attitude of the empress, Maria Theresa. One not altogether respectful account tells of how a certain lodge was raided by the police one night under the empress' orders while meanwhile her husband, the emperor, made a quiet and unostentatious disappearance down the back stairs of the building where the meeting was being held.

It is supposed, though here I am subject to correction, that the character of Astrofiammente symbolically represents Maria Theresa, that Tamino in the same manner represents the emperor, that Pamina is the Austrian people, Sarastro is a high minded Viennese, famous in his time and high in Masonry, and so on.

But however hidden the allusions to persons of the period may be, they are most historical from our point of view. Schikaneder, who wrote the book and sang the part of Papageno, was a good showman of his time, and he evolved a story which stands pretty well on its own merits, rather complicated, partly comic, partly serious, but still a tale that can be followed.

* *

Here Is the Story.

Here is the story, put in as few words as possible:

Prince Tamino, who has lost his way and been separated from his companions while in search of adventure, is saved from a huge serpent by three mysterious ladies who prove to be the waiting women of Astrofiammente, Queen of the Night. The queen takes advantage of the situation to implore Tamino to save her daughter, whom the sage old priest, Sarastro, has taken from her by force. Tamino is given a picture of the girl, falls in love with the likeness, and is filled with an ardent desire to serve her. He is given as a companion in his undertaking one Papageno, a gay and rather witless bird catcher.

When Tamino reaches Sarastro's castle his bitter feelings toward the high priest are changed to those of friendship by the assurance of the priests that their leader had acted only in Pamina's best interests and that she lives and is in no danger. Tamino is told that if he successfully passes a series of trials Pamina shall be his.

Tamino and Pamina, convinced of the righteousness of Sarastro's decision, resist every temptation and pass every trial and finally, the Queen of the Night having been confounded in her plots of vengeance, the two are united in the blazing light of truth, while evil and falsehood vanish and sink back into the night.

First Symphony of Season.

With Miss Bertha Ott beginning her list of concerts with three attractions this afternoon, with several other events this afternoon and here and there during the week, with the Chicago Symphony orchestra beginning its regular season Thursday night and its popular series Saturday night, the concert season of 1931-'32 may be considered to be officially opened. There will be plenty of events before it is officially closed. What is to happen this week is itemized in another column of this newspaper.

The orchestra begins its forty-first season; Dr. Stock begins his twenty-seventh as conductor and his thirty-seventh as a member of the organization. There will be no soloist on the opening program, though a considerable number, the first beginning next week, will appear in the course of the season.

For the opening program, Thursday at 8:30 o'clock, Dr. Stock has decreed Wagner's "Rienzi" Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Ballet Suite, a first class program at any time of any season. For the popular program Saturday night there will be Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Overture; Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, Glazounow's "Ruses d'Amour" Ballet Suite, and Strauss' "Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes, another program of distinct merit.

Correcting an Error.

"Dear Mr. Moore: May I correct your statement in THE TRIBUNE anent Rachmaninoff's fourth concerto? Mlle. Gitta Gradova played it last season on the twenty-first program, March 6 and 7. [Editor's note: Quite right. It was a slip of memory. Beg your pardon.]

"Do you not feel that the soloistic 'racket,' if it may be termed such in view of the amazing preponderance of soloists over purely orchestral programs this season, is not slightly overworked? The old story of the British gallery god needs to be dusted off. As you doubtless remember, the Britisher went to an orchestral concert, at which a famous diva was to assist as soloist. The affair disintegrated into a song recital, with the orchestra as accompanist. After about half a dozen encores, the gallery god felt that the thing had progressed far enough.

"'O, shut up!' he yelled. 'I came to listen to the orchestra!'

"There are a number of gallery gods of that description in Chicago, of which number I am proud to be able to count myself. In my personal opinion, which may not count for much, Frederick Stock is a greater musician than all save a possible two or three of the array of soloists. If he is to 'go 'way back and sit down,' and his fine orchestra with him, while the sainted audiences rave over personality possessed of one-tenth the musicianship and artistry which he possesses, would it not be a worth while change in the policy of the orchestral association to suspend operations, and reincorporate as a concert course, or a syndicate of impresarios?

"In that event they could have all their soloists. They could also maintain an orchestra; it would not necessarily need to be as fine as the one we have now, as its only function would be that of an accompanist for these same 'personalities.'

"MALCOLM J. YOUNG."

This department agrees thoroughly with Mr. Young's estimate of Dr. Stock. It is necessary to add, however, that the business management of the orchestra began to discover through the most unassailable evidence, that of the box office, that not enough of its patrons were like Mr. Young. In other words, patronage was falling off. That is the reason for the soloists this year, also for the change of time from Saturday to Thursday night.

Music Notes.

Miss Rachel Busey Kinsolving's Musical Mornings will begin in the Crystal ballroom of the Blackstone hotel on Thursday, Nov. 5, with a joint recital by Maria Olszewska, contralto of the Civic Opera company, and Mischa Levitzki, pianist. John Charles Thomas, Civic Opera baritone, and Janet Fairbank, Chicago soprano, will appear jointly on Dec. 19. The third program will be presented by Nina Koshetz, soprano, Gabriel Leonoff, tenor, and Vladimir Dubinsky, baritone. Mario Chamlee, tenor, and Jacques Gordon, violinist, will appear Dec. 29, and Juliet Lippe, soprano, and Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, Jan. 7.

The Joseffer String quartet, a new women's organization, Anna Thelma Joseffer, first violin; Eva Pokoloff, second violin; Sara Shatz, viola, and Lillian Pringle, cello, announces a series of six chamber music evenings on the Sundays of Nov. 8, Dec. 13, Jan. 10, Feb. 14, March 3, and April 10 at the Cordon club.

Beginning next Friday, Arthur Dunham will enter upon his eighth season of Tuesday and Friday noonday organ recitals at the Methodist temple. About sixty recitals will be given. Mr. Dunham's Sonata for organ and about twenty other works of recent composition will be played.

Among the coming musical events will be a song recital by Yvonne Gall on Nov. 1. A similar appearance by her a year ago was one of the artistic successes of the season. Having sung at Ravinia in opera during the summer, she is now on the Pacific coast appearing with the San Francisco and Los Angeles companies. After leaving here she will return to Paris to sing in both of the opera companies of that city, also in Lille, Lyons, and Bordeaux.

When the Civic Opera company opens it doors Nov. 2 with "Tosca," the Metropolitan Opera company in New York will likewise greet its patrons, but with "La Traviata," balancing the cast of Rosa Ponselle, Giacomo Lauri-Volpi, and Giuseppe de Luca against Chicago's Claudia Muzio, Jan Kiepura, and Vanni-Marcoux. Early in the first week the Metropolitan will give the first American performance of Weinberger's "Schwanda, the Bagpipe Player," a work that would seem to have a number of good reasons in its score for being heard.

The Swift & Co. Male chorus has begun rehearsals for the 1931-'32 season under the direction of D. A. Clippinger, its conductor for fourteen years. The association's annual concert will be given at Orchestra hall March 1, with Florence Austral, soprano, as soloist. In addition it will appear in a sacred program at the University of Chicago April 10, and at other times before the Civic Music association at South Bend and for the benefit of the Lake Bluff orphanage at Lake Forest.

Four Horsemen Gallop Over Movie Screen

By Mae Tinee.

that here and there goes up the works. You'll recognize it.

Of the love angle, or, as the press representatives call it, "the woman's angle," there is little—and that's a refreshing omission in a movie of this kind. There's too much of a jittery ingénue in one of the first reels, but such as you see of a budding romance between Sally Blane and Lew Ayres is wholesome and satisfactory. Mr. Ayres plays a high school punk who enters Notre Dame and becomes a mighty football man.

Such faults as this movie has lie in story and direction. But I think you may forget the former, or, if not, still enjoy "The Spirit of Notre Dame" from the sports angle and because of the incentive behind the production.

DID YOU LIKE what you DIDN'T EXPECT? Don't forget we're playing the game again this month. Send in YOUR list of October's Six Best photoplays, having it in this office by Nov. 3. Write your name and address plainly on the sheet that bears the list. . . . VIRGINIA SALE, sister of "Chic," has been signed up for "Peach o' Reno." Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, and Dorothy Lee are featured. . . . DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR.'S next starring vehicle will be "Union Depot." . . . Speaking of the FAIRBANKSES — ROBERT SHERWOOD wrote in part of them in his New York column:

"You will hear numerous, varied rumors concerning the future prospects, personal as well as professional, of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. For one thing, there is the ominous report, recurrent in Hollywood, that the Royal Family of the Screen is about to break up—that after more than twelve years of veritably fabulous domestic bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have decided to go their separate ways, she to her church, he to his.

"You will also hear that they are about to make another picture together, that they are not going to make another picture together, but are now embarked on individual enterprises, that they have definitely retired from the films and will never appear before the public in professional capacities again.

"Needless to say, I am not privy to the inner secrets of the Fairbanks menage; but after two months of reasonably close observation of this conspicuous family in Hollywood I have come to the conclusion that there are no secrets worth mentioning. Mary and Doug have just about as much chance of keeping dark their private lives as has the statue of Civic Virtue in City Hall park, New York.

"For Mary and Doug, for all their outward grace and regal mien, were and are terribly, painfully self-conscious. Their exaggerated eminence frightened and appalled them. They clung to each other exactly as two soldiers will cling to each other when they find themselves in the same exposed shell hole during a heavy bombardment.

"Now the extraordinary circumstances of their lives have changed. The lofty pedestal on which they were precariously perched has vanished. Their reign as monarchs of the movies has ended, and they know it—and if there is one thing markedly noticeable in their manner at the present time it is in an overpowering sense of relief.

"It is inevitable that the relaxation of the strain under which both have lived should cause some form of change in the almost incredible relationship that has existed between them. But I think I can safely assure you that you are entitled to laugh in the face of any one who announces that Mary and Doug are going to be divorced.

"The habits of interdependence that they have formed in the past twelve years are far too firmly established to be shattered. Either would be hopelessly and helplessly lost without the other.

"For all I know, thunder and lightning may separate tomorrow. So may storm and strife, hither and yon, light wines and beer, corned beef and cabbage, give and take, and even Amos 'n' Andy. But I'll bet my all that Mary and Doug will stick together."

American Soprano Opens Rhythmic Season in Gotham

By Joan King.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—If other solo recitalists follow the example of Frances Sebel, New York's musical entertainment of 1931-'32 will depart from the trodden paths to embark upon a course both novel and refreshing. To Frances Sebel, American soprano, and native of Cincinnati, went the honor of acting as official inaugurator of the new rhythmic season here, Oct. 4, at Carnegie hall. Miss Sebel made excellent use of this auspicious opportunity by paying honor to her contemporaries. She chose only one number for her program from the well worn library. This was Mendelssohn's "Infelice, Gia dal mio sguardo," with which she opened the evening.

The audience, which was encouragingly large for so early in a new year, was greatly pleased with Miss Sebel's selections. Her second group included a number of novel Spanish songs, "El Vito," my Nin; "Nana," by De Falla; "El Tumba y le," and "La Moza y los Calvos," by Obradors, and "Los Dos Miedos" and "Las Locas Por Amor," by Turina. The Obradors numbers were sung for the first time here on this occasion and were especially well liked by the audience.

Offered First Performance.

Miss Sebel, who demonstrated her musicianship and feeling for the intent of the composer regardless of his nationality throughout the evening, offered a first performance in her third group. This was Mana-Zucca's air to athene from "Hypatia," still in manuscript, and described in program notes as "a grand opera in English based on Charles Kingsley's story." Strauss' "Mein Herz Ist Stumm and Nichts"; Weingartner's "Liebesfeier," "Nelken," and "Plauderwaesche"; Blech's "Eine Kleine Geige," "Strampelchen," "Tintenheinz und Plaetscherlottchen," and Hughes' "Jack and Jill" and "Hey Diddle, Diddle" concluded the written list.

In accordance with its custom since the organization was founded in 1928, the Schubert Memorial, Inc., held its annual auditions for candidates for its sponsorship here recently. Twenty-five musicians from eleven states were heard in earlier auditions, in September, all of these having met the entrance requirements, and four were selected for the recent hearing. But the judges, who included Richard Aldrich, Howard Brockway, Fritz Reiner, Nikolai Sokoloff, Sigismond Stojowski, and Willem Willeke, finally decided to make no award for this year. The Schubert Memorial has, thus far, presented nine young Americans in New York concerts. These have been Sadah Schuchari and Ruth Posselt, violinists; Muriel Kerr, Isabelle Yalkowski, and Sascha Gorodnitzki, pianists; Phyllis Kraeuter and Olga Zundel, cellists; Flora Collins, soprano, and Graham Harris, conductor.

To Introduce New Works.

When the Viennese conductor, Erich Kleiber, returned recently from Europe to open the season of the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, which he will direct for the first six weeks this year, he announced a number of new works which he intends to introduce during his stay. These include two compositions to be heard here for the first time by American composers, "The Pagan Symphony," by the late Henry Joslyn, and a rhapsody by Wallingford Riegger. He will also introduce new works by two European composers, Krenek's "Variations for Orchestra" and Weinberger's "Passacaglia," for large orchestra and organ, composed especially for its New York première and dedicated to Mr. Kleiber. Mr. Kleiber will also introduce extracts from Telemann's "Tafelmusik"; three symphonic dances of Roznicek; three extracts from the lyric suite of Alban Berg, arranged for string orchestra; Ravel's Minuet Antique, and the Kleine theater suite of Toch.

Remo Bolognini, well known to Chicago's orchestral audiences by reason of his years as assistant concert master of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, has just been awarded the post of assistant to Mishel Piastro, concert master of the New York Philharmonic. Bolognini is the second Chicago musician to attain important position with the New York orchestra, Alfred Wallenstein having taken the chair of head of the 'cello section two years ago.

Since 1929, when Bolognini left the Chicago orchestra to return to Europe to coach in repertoire with Eugene Ysaye, he has been engaged either in studying or recital giving. He was one of Ysaye's two pupils, the other being Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, during the last days before the Maestro's death. Last season he played in recitals with much success in London, Brussels, Berlin, Cologne, The Hague, Amsterdam, and Paris, also visiting this country for two months. He plays the famous "Baron Vitta" Guarnerius, dated 1730.

Carolina Author

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Paul Green, the university instructor who recently flashed into fame as a playwright, has turned his back on Broadway and returned to North Carolina, where his fame is that of a champion cotton picker.

Three days on the rialto were enough for the author of "The House of Connelly." He spent one of them in the theater and the others in a small room of an obscure hotel.

"I've a lot more work to do," he said, "and I'd rather do it on my little farm, where it is quiet and peaceful."

A part of that work will be the completion of "Potter's Field," his fourth play.

"Mr. Paul," as his southern neighbors call him, is an instructor of philosophy in the University of North Carolina. He has the heavy hands of a toiler. He is proud of the fact that the first prize he ever won was as the best cotton picker in a North Carolina county competition.

GREASY HAIR FROM—

Start stimulation of those lazy glands tonight! The way to wake them is by massage. Use your fingertips, dipped in Danderine. The Danderine will cut through the pore filth and get at the gummed glands. One treatment will dissolve every particle of dandruff. The first week will give you a healthy, wholesome scalp. But keep the treatments up until the very feel of your hair tells you it is in perfect condition.

You can get Danderine at any drugstore. It is a marvelous medicine for sick scalps.

WATCH YOUR GLANDS!
WHEN Lazy glands won't open, the hair is starved and faded.
WHEN lazy glands don't close, scalp is fouled by secretions.
ANY dandruff is a sign the hair glands need stimulating.

Adopted Child Has Easy Life in Hollywood

Fortunate Waifs Given Every Advantage in Film Star's Home.

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—All Hollywood people are not the carefree selfish egotists that one might think. The same instinct for a hearthstone with happy children's faces exists in the film capital that exists anywhere else in the world. In addition to the children born in Hollywood homes, there are many happy little folks who have been adopted by film stars when an eccentric stork refused to favor the family chimney.

This last year several charming children have been lucky enough to enter film homes where they were eagerly awaited. The most recent adoption was that of little Patricia Hamilton by a new papa and mama, Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hamilton. Patricia was seven weeks old when she was brought to her new home. Next year the Hamiltons plan to find a brother for Patricia.

Before that it was Harold Lloyd and his wife, Mildred, who, tired of the dilatory long legged bird, went out and found a lovely little girl, Peggy, as a playmate for Mildred Gloria. It brought good luck, for not many months later Mr. Stork hustled along with a baby brother, and now the Lloyds have three shining little faces about the table.

Brother for Little Gloria.

Gloria Swanson adopted a little brother for her daughter, Gloria; and Joseph at two became part of the Swanson household when Gloria II. was about four. Gloria did not believe that one child would be happy alone, and chose a boy because she loves the romping play the little fellow brings to the home.

Cecil de Mille has a whole family of adopted children in his home in addition to his own child. From the eldest to the youngest, love and care and advantages have been shared equally, and a family circle of youth and gayety and childish problems and serious character building welcome home the famous director when his day's work is done.

De Mille forbids the word "adopted" in reference to his children as he feels them too close to his heart to use any word suggesting that they are not wholly his.

Zasu Pitts has the small son left by Barbara Lamarr, whom she is raising with her own little girl. Barbara had adopted the little fellow herself when she lost her heart to him when she visited an orphanage in Texas.

Lead a Royal Life.

Mary Pickford long ago adopted her niece Gwendolyn, the daughter of her sister, Lottie. Wyn is Mary's constant companion and enjoys the sort of a room at Pickfair that most girls only dream of. At present, she is away at school.

Constance Bennett is the proud foster mother of a little four year old son, whom she brought back from one of her European trips. Peter is the constant playmate of little Adrienne Fox, sister Joan's baby by Joan's former husband.

Then there is Philippe de Lacey, the child-actor. His foster mother, Edith de Lacey, a nurse in France during the war, found the little orphaned fellow and brought him to America with her.

Polly Moran boasts a little son, also adopted. Of Italian ancestry, John Michael is Polly's joy and pride, and all the M-G-M lot rings with the tales Polly tells of his achievements at the military school which he attends.

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuri Aoki, last August adopted a little American-Japanese boy from a poor mother in Los Angeles' "Little Tokio." They will take the tot back to Japan with them and rear him there as a true son of the rising sun with all the advantages in Japanese life.

Conway Tearle Is Back.

Conway Tearle, who left Hollywood in a huff a couple of years ago, claiming he was being boycotted because he refused a salary cut, is back again and will play a prominent role in "The False Madonna." Kay Francis and William Boyd are the leads in the story.

Herbert Somborn [Mr. Gloria Swanson II.] has opened a fourth Brown Derby restaurant in Beverly Hills, and is doing well with it.

Gilbert Roland, formerly leading man for Norma Talmadge, is playing in a local stage production of "Camille," with Jane Cowl. It is his first stage experience, and he says it fussed him more than facing crowds as a bull fighter in Mexico in his boyhood days. He comes from a family noted for several generations for its matadors.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

United States Misrepresented.

Dear Miss Tinée: Despite the fact that I cannot allow myself the time to sit to write such a letter as this, I feel that what I should like to tell you needs telling so much that other things will have to wait.

I have noticed from time to time your kindly reviews of the German movies here, and when one considers that you admit ignorance of the language you are surprisingly tolerant and fair. I cannot believe that what the Germans are sending us is the best of what they can do, for most of the German talkies I have seen and heard were not one step above most of the mediocre ones concocted in Hollywood.

But all this does not get me to the point. A German talkie now current in Chicago, under the title of "Zwei Kravatten" (A Pair of Neckties), is thus far one of the most maudlin, the most stupid, the most imbecilic and the most effusively sentimental mush that has ever been grafted on a gullible public. Anything more emotionally silly has never been seen. It transcends in actual childish impossibility anything the most heroic in Hollywood have ever done. The scenes which the picture intends to be of the United States are, perhaps, the most impossible of all.

Imagine a wealthy home in America, such as the one presented in the picture, with a hundred or so servants in gaudy livery; the hostess and her dressing room with the thousand electric lights, which reminded one of nothing more than a lighting fixture store. Also, notice how the dining room table is set: the girls seated around in a circle with their legs bared up to the hips; the two American women bidding for the hand of the handsome German, one offering him twenty million and the other thirty million dollars.

Then, the absolutely impossible incident of the German girl suddenly inheriting forty million dollars. There is a lot more, equally silly. And the fact that there was a bit of good singing does not excuse the picture.

J. E. LORING.

Editor's note: I take it you didn't care for "Zwei Kravatten."

Ways that Mystify.

Dear Mae Tinée: For years the critics have said it in print and the public has said it with admission tickets, yet the producers go merrily on. So do not think that I expect this private protest to avail, but it may relieve my mind.

Some time ago Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote a story of Wyoming called "Lost Ecstasy," told with the tenderness of one who knows and loves that country. Our own haunt is not far from the ranch where she spends her summers. So, when we saw the story released under the title of "I Take This Woman," we made a special trip down to see the film. We were prepared to spend a happily miserable evening viewing the familiar beloved panorama of the range, the corrals, bunkhouse, and the little lonely cabins on the high plains.

Well, we were miserable, all right, without any qualifications. Doubtless we should have been warned by the change in title and by your faint praise. For it had not one thing in common with the book except the names of the principal characters; the minor ones were wholly omitted from the film. Not one incident remained unchanged.

The worst was first—the explanation of Kay's presence on the ranch. A worse miscast for the part could not be imagined. This jazz baby could never have portrayed the steadfast Kay of the story, and doubtless this hideous change was made to fit her personality. Gary acted as if he were ashamed to play the part of Tom, yet had the original been reproduced he would have been ideal.

The whole thing was so astounding that we searched for an explanation and found one. With economy in keeping with the times, they bought the story, used the names of the characters for this atrocity. Later they expect to produce the plot under the title of "Lost Ecstasy" and thus get double value. But here are two people who will not be there to see it. In fact, we have not attended a movie since. TENSLEEP.

Editor's Note: For ways that are dark the heathen Chinee has little on the movie producer. (Sometimes.)

Likes "The Last Flight."

Dear Miss Tinée: I saw the picture "The Last Flight" and thought it delightful and touching, and this morning read your review of it, which expresses my reaction so perfectly I wanted to thank you. You have put into words just what I felt about the picture and think Helen Chandler was, as you say, "intuitive" in her rendition of the whimsical, gay but unsmiling Nikki.

I am sending this appreciation because from remarks made by several persons who sat near me in the audience that "it was the worst show they had ever seen," I have no doubt you will receive plenty of knocks from the undiscerning persons who are not the kind that would understand and value the underlying quality you describe so neatly as "vague, eerie, Alice in Wonderland-ish."

Here is one who was moved and charmed beyond measure, and I am sure there are many more who will likewise love this film, but may not tell you so. Sincerely, MARY CULP.

Editor's Note: It was a lovely picture, wasn't it! You were thoughtful to write.

A Kindly Letter.

Dear Miss Tinée: I'm right behind you when it comes to giving Lowell Sherman a big hand. I have my favorite screen actors and actresses who play excellently, but I'd walk across the city, if necessary, to see Lowell Sherman on the screen. I hardly know what it is, the play does not have to boast much of a plot, the dialogue can be as dull reading as so and so's expedition in the Far East, but when the curtain goes up and Sherman takes the center of the stage it's sure to be the best show in town.

He looks like a million dollars in his clothes, he has an A-1 stage presence, and when he speaks, no matter how dull and ordinary the lines, he puts them over with a bang; everything is done smoothly, well turned, polished, an eyebrow lifted here, a shrug of the shoulders, a wink, all done with a finesse and the perfection of a fine actor.

There, thank you for your "verie kind attention." I never miss your column and, though I've never written you before and perhaps won't again, I want to say that the World's Greatest Newspaper would lose some of its greatness if your column was left out.

Again I offer my profound admiration. It goes for all our house.

E. G. M.

Editor's Note: Mr. Sherman thanks you, THE TRIBUNE thanks you, and I thank you.

October Stirs Stage Season to Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

tory, and some faint glimmering of intelligence in regard to the period in which its story has been placed is required of the playgoer.

The Italian Renaissance is the frame for "The Venetian." It corresponds to the Elizabethan period in England; and it implies, so far as the stage is concerned, a large amount of loose conduct, frequent back-stabbings and wine poisonings, and a bustling activity in artistic, intellectual and political affairs. In other words, it is an excellent background for a romantic play—a time of hot passions and gay pageantry in which every one burned the candle at both ends and had a high old time.

This play, handsomely staged by Maurice Browne, is a satisfactory treatment of its material from a modern point of view. It avoids the sawdust theatricalism which curses costume drama. Its characters are thoroughly alive, and they speak a forthright, lucid English which is as frank, at times, as the talk of comedians in a bawdy Broadway revue. If romance with historical trimmings is ever to make a fresh start on the American stage, it will be with plays like "The Venetian."

Romantic Acting.

But if you remain cold to the fascinations of the flamboyant years when the city of Florence was preparing itself as an objective point for future generations of American tourists, you will certainly respond to the acting of Margaret Rawlings as the alluring Bianca, and Wilfrid Walter as her princely paramour. Here are players of high skill and personalities of winning address. Miss Rawlings I have tagged as a little, unsentimentalized Jane Cowl. Mr. Walter has the gifts for leadership in robust romantic rôles.

When the accidental closing of a door caused a change in the destiny of "The Venetian's" heroine, I found myself skeptical about the existence of spring locks at the time of the Italian Renaissance. The author of this play may be an authority on antique door-locks, but I shall demand confirmation from the Chicago Museum of Industry before I believe in this episode.

Showboat Ahoy!

This column's outcry for showboats last summer seems to have started something. Ralph T. Kettering, manager of the Adelphi theater, says that he is rebuilding an ancient hulk, discovered in the shipyards of Sheboygan, and hopes to have a floating theater of 1,500 in the Chicago river before winter sets in.

Commodore Billy Bryant, now showboating in Cincinnati, is preparing to bring his company here to show us how his deck-end troupe can play Shakespeare. Instigated by George E. Wintz, known as "the king of the one-night stands," he hopes to secure a Chicago theater and turn his crew loose in it.

The showboat atmosphere, aside from the rough-and-ready acting, will be supplied by decorations in the lobby. There are at least three theaters available for this adventure—the Civic, the Princess, and the Cort. Rialto gossips are naming the Civic as the place where Commodore Bryant will hoist his ensign—possibly because that playhouse is on the river front.

New Plays for Gotham Stage; Five Openings

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Broadway will see five premières next week, including three dramas and two musical shows. Here are the announcements:

"Church Mouse"—Opens tomorrow night at the Playhouse. A comedy from the Hungarian which has been extensively produced abroad. William A. Brady is bringing forth the adaptation by the Hattons of the Paul Frank-Laszlo Fodor original. In the leading rôles will be Ruth Gordon and Bert Lytle.

"Lean Harvest"—Opens Tuesday night at the Forrest. A play by Ronald Jeans which ran during the summer in London. Leslie Banks and Nigel Bruce will be in the cast along with Vera Allen, Leonard Mudie, Patricia Calvert, Charles Esdale, and Molly Pearson.

"Everybody's Welcome" — Opens Tuesday night at the Shubert. The season's first musical comedy from the Shubert workshops. Harold Atteridge has prepared the libretto, Sam Fain the music, and Irving Kahal the lyrics. The players will include Frances Williams, Oscar Shaw, Harriette Lake, and Ann Pennington.

"Pillars of Society" — Opens Wednesday night at the 48th Street. The Ibsen play is the second production of Laurence Langner's repertory group. Among the actors will be Moffat Johnston, Armina Marshall, Dorothy Gish, Rollo Peters, Romney Brent, Fania Marinoff, Edgar Stehli, Jessie Busley, and Knowles Entrikin.

"The Cat and the Fiddle"—Opens Thursday night at the Globe. A romantic musical show by Jerome Kern and Otto Harbach. The large company will include Georges Metaxa, Bettina Hall, Eddie Foy Jr., Lawrence Grossmith, Dorothy Debenham, George F. Meader, Doris Carson, Odette Myrtil, and Jose Ruben.

Unknown Warrior

MAURICE BROWNE will appear in his London success, "The Unknown Warrior," at the Selwyn theater in four matinée performances, starting Sunday, Nov. 8 and closing the afternoon of Armistice day. Rosalinde Fuller is coming from London to play her original part. The play is from the pen of M. Paul Raynal.

After this engagement Mr. Browne will make an eight weeks' tour in "The Unknown Warrior" under the management of James B. Pond.

STAR IN "PRIVATE LIVES"

EDITH TALIAFERRO.

SHE has been leading ingenue and star of dozens of plays, of which "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" are the most easily remembered. Now, as a full blown, fascinating woman of the world, she co-stars with Donald Brian in Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," at the Erlanger theater.

Eugene O'Neill Ends Ten Year Solitude Hunt

Finds Content and Rest from City's Turmoil in Skyscraper.

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Eugene O'Neill has ended a ten year search for solitude. This isolation he has found in a luxurious apartment high above Park avenue's noisy taxicabs and hurrying throngs.

It is an ironic paradox that O'Neill should discover this escape from the crowds where he could work in peace right in the heart of the city.

He experimented with a half dozen other environments before he was won over as a hermit in the metropolis.

Lived in Lighthouse.

His first workshop was in a lonely lighthouse on the seacoast at Provincetown, Mass. Then he took a cottage amid the quiet of Bermuda, and from there slipped away to Shanghai, where he hoped to remain incognito.

Finally, he moved into an out-of-the-way chateau in Tours, France and stayed there for two years. He became weary of the place, and returned last summer with the announced intention of living on a plantation in Virginia.

He came to New York first, and fell in love once again with his old home town. He walked along the waterfront streets where, as a youth, he had mingled with sailors in the old-time saloons. He visited the old haunts he had frequented with his father, when the latter was a star in "Monte Cristo."

* *

Found City Best.

For ten years, O'Neill, weary of his wanderings, has been seeking a haven where he could settle down and work. And, like the prodigal son, he has returned home to find what he sought here in the city.

"I'm glad I spent those years abroad because it gave me a new perspective on my country and its people," he explained. "I think any writer must live abroad to get a true objective view of his native scene."

New Lady Teazle

ETHEL BARRYMORE will come to the Grand Opera House Oct. 19 in her revival of "The School for Scandal," in which she has just completed a tour of the Pacific coast and the northwest. She first acted the rôle of Lady Teazle in 1924 to the Sir Peter of her late uncle, John Drew, in a week's revival of Sheridan's comedy by the Players' club of New York.

This will be the first Chicago performances of the classic since Mrs. Insull's revival in June of 1925 in the Illinois theater.

Miss Barrymore is the third member of her family in direct descent to act Lady Teazle. Her grandmother, Mrs. John Drew, was a famed Lady Teazle, while it was the rôle in which her mother, Georgia Drew Barrymore, made her first appearance as the leading woman of Mrs. Drew's company in Philadelphia. Maurice Barrymore, Miss Barrymore's father, played not fewer than six rôles in "The School for Scandal" in his younger days on the English stage, while John Drew was a matinée idol forty years ago vis-à-vis with Ada Rehan and got his vogue largely on his performance as Charles Surface.

Miss Barrymore's company includes Walter Gilbert as Charles, McKay Morris as Joseph, C. H. Croker-King as Sir Peter, Herry Plimmer as Sir Oliver, A. G. Andrews as Moses, and Beatrice Terry as Mrs. Candour.

The engagement will be for two weeks, after which Miss Barrymore will take the play into New York.

Miss Cornell Wants to Act Roman Matron

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Katharine Cornell, who has become one of Broadway's foremost acting managers in her first year as a producer, already is planning her new play for next season. It is to be "The Rape of Lucrece," a French dramatization based upon Shakespeare's poem.

Miss Cornell sailed this week for a month's vacation in Bermuda. She will return Nov. 16 to reopen in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." This story of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's romance has been one of New York's leading hits since it opened last February, and its popularity forecasts that it will remain on Broadway all winter.

Miss Cornell's rôle requires her to be upon the stage every moment from the time the first curtain rises until a few seconds before the end. She found the task exhausting and decided upon a six weeks' rest.

Although there was no extraordinary success among the new plays of the past week, several of them offer diverting evenings. "Payment Deferred" is an English murder melodrama of novel aspects. In addition to its unusual plot it is distinguished by the performance of Charles Laughton from London.

"The Good Companions," another English importation, is a gigantic picturesque show of character parts. It is a dramatization of J. B. Priestley's novel. Elmer Rice, who revealed a panorama of New York life in his "Street Scene," does the same for Paris in "Left Bank." In this drama he chides the American expatriates who prefer a French Bohemia to the comforts of their native land.

"Cherries Are Ripe," which has been headed for Broadway for more than a year, again has been sidetracked. This is the Anita Loos and John Emerson comedy which was given on tour all last year by Rod La Rocque and Vilma Banky.

Several weeks ago these two were replaced by Basil Sydney and Mary Ellis, but a manager, Arch Selwyn, still was not satisfied with his cast. So the comedy has been temporarily withdrawn and will be brought forth later with two other stars.

Elmer Rice has already written a new drama called "Counsellor-at-Law," and it will have Paul Muni in the lead. . . . Jed Harris opens his season with "Wonder Boy," another satire on movie producers. Hazel Dawn is to be the star. . . . Nikita Balieff of "Chauve Souris" is back to stage a new show on Broadway.

In Classics

VIOLA ROACHE of the Chicago Civic Shakespeare society's company, began her career with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in London. Following several tours with Sir Charles Wyndham, she accepted an engagement in Johannesburg, South Africa, where she played in "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," "As You like It," "Twelfth Night," and "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

As leading woman at the Copley theater in Boston she was seen in the plays of Shaw, Galsworthy, Milne, Barrie, and Shakespeare. A season with Milton Rosner in England followed, after which she returned to America for an engagement in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," with Ina Claire, and "The Woman Disputed," with Lowell Sherman and Ann Harding.

She has also appeared in many films for the M. G. M. and Paramount firms.

Travel Talk.

"France and the Colonial Exposition," first of the new series of E. M. Newman's travel talks, will be given at Orchestra hall next Wednesday and Friday evenings and Saturday afternoon.

Noel Coward's Plays Popular; B'way Gossip

"Improper Duchess," with Irene Bordoni as Star, to Be Withdrawn.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The prevalence of Noel Coward's works on the American stage—he wrote "Private Lives," you may remember, and some of the numbers in "The Third Little Show"—arouses interest in a project to revive his comedy called "Hay Fever." Constance Collier will have the rôle that Laura Hopes Crews acted at Maxine Elliott's theater several years ago. The most recent staging of "Hay Fever" was by the Goodman repertory theater of Chicago last winter, with Margaret Wycherly as the featured player.

Maurice Browne's production of "The Improper Duchess," by Bernard Fagan, will have only a brief life on the American stage, although it was a sizable hit in London. It will be offered next week in Hartford and Providence, but will go no farther. It was intended for the Shubert circuit of subscription theaters, including Chicago. Irene Bordoni has the leading rôle.

Sidney Howard's new play, called "Yellow Jacket," deals with the efforts to eradicate yellow fever from the Caribbean ports which followed the Spanish-American war. It derives, more or less, from a chapter of Paul De Kruif's interesting book called "Microbe Hunters." Arthur Hopkins has a lien on "Yellow Jacket."

"A Modern Virgin" closes its tour in Detroit tonight. Roger Pryor and Margaret Sullavan are probable members of the cast of "Blessed Event," a comedy that the Shuberts now have on their shelves.

Florence Nightingale, whose name will always be associated with women's relief work for armies in the field —she started in the Crimean war— will be the heroine of a play called "The Lady with a Lamp." Leslie Banks, the English actor now in "Lean Harvest," will stage the play for Managers McGowan and Reed, and Edith Evans will come from London to play the famous nurse. Rehearsals will begin Oct. 21. Reginald Berkeley is the author.

Queenie Smith's new operetta will be called "The Little Racketeer." It comes from the German stage, where it bore the same title—a fact which suggests that Berlin has gone in for rackets. Paul Ash and his band will figure in the entertainment.

An English actress rejoicing in the name of Lady George Cholmondoley will soon begin a Canadian tour in a series of plays and dance programs. Galsworthy's "The Silver Box" is on her list. The dance programs will include something called "a play by Rabelais."

Helen Hayes has returned to New York from Hollywood to begin rehearsals for Molnar's "The Good Fairy," which Gilbert Miller will stage. The first performance will be given in Washington Nov. 9, and a week in Pittsburgh will follow.

Irving Berlin and Moss Hart are writing a musical show which will employ a revolving stage and other elaborate mechanical devices. If nothing happens it will appear in New York before the Christmas holidays. The boys haven't agreed upon a title as yet. . . . Frank Craven has written a new play, variously described as a melodrama and a dramatic comedy. John Golden will produce it.

English Actor Wins Cheers on Gotham Stage

Charles Laughton, in "Payment Deferred," Plays Character Role.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The English actor who played Tony Perelli, gangster, in the London production of "On the Spot" has been brought to America by Gilbert Miller in a murder play called "Payment Deferred," which was done at the Lyceum last week.

His name is Charles Laughton, and he has had the somewhat unique experience at home of coming late to the theater and topping the list of character actors in five or six seasons. He was 27 when he made his first stage appearance in 1926, after winning a gold medal at a dramatic school. Since then he has played many parts, and his popularity with the crowd has increased with each of them.

In "Payment Deferred" he is given opportunity of running the gamut of the emotions about which less is heard these days than formerly. His character is that of William Marble, a flabby, beady eyed bank clerk, down on his luck and resentful. Living a lower middle class life in a lower middle class neighborhood, he is much in need of funds.

One evening, when he is fearing the collectors, there comes a young man to call on him. He is a nephew from Australia, has just arrived in London. He has no other relatives on that side of the world and, the estate of his parents having been recently settled, he is well supplied with money. He is also a cagey young man and refuses to loan uncle any of his money. So uncle poisons him and buries his body in the garden.

Haunted by Conscience.

Thereafter, for three tortured acts, William Marble, murderer, is haunted by his conscience as relentlessly as was Matthias in "The Bells." He fears the slamming of doors, the sound of bells, the chatter of people passing in the street, the shouts of children. If any one is seen even so much as raking the garden, he is threatened with hysteria.

He profits from his crime to the extent of some thirty thousand pounds and is able to set his wondering wife and daughter up in style. But disaster follows every move he makes.

He buys a new set of garish furniture, and riding into the house with it comes a little French shopkeeper from just around the corner who proceeds to seduce and blackmail him out of thousands.

He sends his daughter to a fine school in France, where she is promptly lifted out of her natural class and becomes so disgusted with her old home and her old father that when she comes back she takes to being a hostess in a night club.

He buys his wife a new outfit of clothes and a holiday at Bournemouth [so he may have his way with the French girl], but she comes back to him distressed in mind and suspicious. Finally, she has his secrets from him and the shock is so great that she herself drinks poison and is dead on the second floor when the doctor comes—dead of poison she had not the strength to come downstairs to get for herself, the doctor says, which makes it likely at the play's end that William Marble will swing for a murder he did not commit, even though the body buried in the garden is never discovered.

Heavy and Cheerless.

It is a heavy and cheerless play, but fascinating in the way mysteries are. Mr. Laughton, of course, acts Marble to the hilt, the picture of misery incarnate, a sensitive register for all the emotions haunted men are prey to.

For my own part, this type of acting leaves me cold. Character actors are bound to be stage conscious. Laughton is noticeably so, being deliberate in reaching for effects and toying with them. Too frequently it is possible to catch him working at his trade, and that is devastating to illusion and story. But that he is technical master of that trade there is no doubt. He has many believable and impressive moments in repose.

An actress in his company, Cicely Oates by name, outplayed her star in the quiet realities she brought to the rôle of the suspicious wife. She, too, started with fright, blanched with fear, trembled with apprehension, stood stark and staring at the realization of horrible truths, wept with sympathy, and comforted with understanding—and never once were you conscious of a single actress' trick.

"Payment Deferred" is the type of melodrama that makes theater going an exciting business for the young and for those of their elders who are open minded and susceptible. These have been standing to cheer Mr. Laughton at the close of each performance.

Merits High Praise.

I think there is more real drama, more depth of feeling, more sound artistry in the production of Paul Green's "The House of Connelly" by a Theater Guild subsidiary than in any other play of the new season, to date. This play, incidentally, has been in the Guild's possession for two seasons. Whether the managers lacked courage to do it, or were doubtful of its appeal, I do not know. In any event, last summer they turned it over to a group of their younger members with the promise that they could put it in rehearsal if they liked and see what would come of it.

The young people took the script and several others and went away into a sort of artists' camp in Connecticut. There they turned a barn into a theater and rehearsed their plays all summer. When they had "The House of Connelly" ready they asked Mr. Green and the Guild executives to see them play it. The result was so greatly in their favor that the Guild financed a production for the play.

Mr. Green's drama is the story of a disintegrating family, proud in its memory of happier days in the old south. The house of Connelly is a decaying house. Its men, down to the current generation represented by young Will Connelly, are lustful, lazy, washed out, through. Its women are led by a proud mother standing [with the aid of a crutch] firmly by her traditions and her memories, still leaning on the glory of old General Connelly, who fought the war and begat illegitimate offspring, and include a pair of spinster sisters crushed and anemic, but also loyal.

* *

Fates Move In.

A family of poor whites, named Fate, move in as tenant farmers and the daughter, Patsy, hungry for land, plans to seduce Will for his, and Will, hungry for love, takes it from Patsy.

The result is cataclysmic in the Connelly family. Will's uncle Robert, lecherous and modestly alcoholic, shoots himself through his poor weak old head to preserve his pride, Mother Connelly dies of a stroke, and the sisters desert and flee to Atlanta.

But Will holds true, marries Patsy, and she, come to honor and believe in their true love, takes her place as mistress of the house of Connelly with her common blood surging exultantly through her veins. The Guild juniors are not all suited as a type to the rôles the aristocratic south suggests, but they are fine players. Franchot Tone gives a magnificent performance as Will, and Margaret Baker plays well as Patsy. Mary Morris is distinguished and fine as the mother.

"Good Companions" Staged.

Most of the characters, but little of the spirit of high adventure that endeared the story of "The Good Companions" to its public, have come to the stage in a dramatization of the J. B. Priestley novel, which is a common enough report with dramatized novels. Nothing the theater folk can do can preserve the bloom the imagination puts on book characters.

There is good entertainment in "The Good Companions" for perhaps half its length. The gathering of the various parties to the adventure is promising.

Jess Oakroyd, the robust Yorkshireman, quarrels with the nagging missus, takes his kit of tools and his bag and starts off down the road. The gallant spinster, Elizabeth Trant, bowls along the motor ways and breaks down twixt Tumbleby and Rawsley, where Oakroyd manages to set her engine going again.

The disgusted Inigo Jollifant tosses up his job as a submaster in the Taverns' school, bundles his wisps of songs into his bag, collects his fifty-two pounds sterling and is off with Susie Dean and Morton Mitcham, show folk looking for a job.

They all meet at Rawsley, and there it is they come upon the concert party that was the dinky-dos, stranded and unhappy. There the Good Companions company is organized, with the aid of Miss Trant's money, and the great adventure is started.

Six Months Later.

They're still going six months later, which is the second division of the play. Much the same as to personnel. Mr. Jollifant is in love with Susie Dean, which provides a thread of romance, but Susie is fearfully afraid a husband would interfere with her career and will have none of him.

It is at Gatford that the crash comes. Mr. Wimpers, the cinema man, hires his thugs to break up the show and they do it successfully, tossing vegetables at the warbling pierrots and finally setting fire to the theater.

As a play I think the weakness of "The Good Companions" is its failure to concentrate interest on the adventures of the honest Oakroyd and Miss Trant. In a book story an author can be as diffuse and rambling as he pleases, so long as he is interesting. But in a play he has no time to ramble, and the thinner he spreads his story the less interesting it is.

An English cast has been imported or picked up from the local English colony for the playing of "The Good Companions." Valerie Taylor, who was the lovely Gainsborough lady in "Berkeley Square," is the Miss Trant, and her young husband, Hugh Sinclair, is playing Jollifant. They are the strength of the company. George Carney is the Oakroyd and Vera Lennox a fairly rough and ready Susie Dean. Edward Knoblock helped Priestley with the dramatization.

* *

Week's Plays Not So Good.

The rest of our drama this last week, though there was plenty of it, is not much worth talking about. A Vincent Lawrence play, "Washington Nights," was vicious in its nastiness and, praise be, lasted but a few days.

"Nikki," a musical comedy made from the John Monk Saunders stories, has found some friends, but hardly enough to keep it with us long. The musical hits of the town are the Aborn revivals of the older light operas. "The Chocolate Soldier" has just finished two big weeks, and "The Geisha" is to follow, with good old Jimmy Powers in his old rôle of Mun Hi, keeper of the teahouse.

In "Little Show"

WALTER O'KEEFE, who appears as master of ceremonies in the "Third Little Show" at the Great Northern, was a newspaper, advertising, and vaudeville writer up to 1928, when he authored his first show, "Just a Minute." The next spring, in Hollywood, he wrote his first song hit, "Little by Little," with Bobby Dolan.

Three seasons as master of ceremonies at the Club Gallant, New York, prepared him for the "Third Little Show." Notre Dame is his alma mater.

IN MUSICAL COMEDY

FLORIA WEST.

SHE is one of the principal entertainers in "Girl Crazy," the musical comedy now at the Garrick theater. Miss West is the brisk soubrette who leads a song now and then while Benny Rubin and Blossom Seeley are changing costumes.

The Armchair Playgoer

By Fanny Butcher.

IN NEW YORK.

The only openings in New York which armchair playgoers could attend last week were the revivals of two plays which have been revived often before, Dion Boucicault's "Streets of New York" and August Strindberg's "The Father." They will lure readers into the literature of their time, perhaps, and into the biographies of their authors.

AUGUST STRINDBERG.

Dion Boucicault was one of the most spectacular actor-playwrights of his day. His success began before he was 20 in a play called "London Assurance," which was produced in 1841. He died in New York in 1890, where he had made his home since 1875 and where as much of his reputation had been made as in London.

He was born in Dublin, the son of a French refugee and an Irish mother, and he was said to be the greatest stage Irishman of his day. Perhaps his most famous play was not an original play at all, but an adaptation of a novel by Gerald Griffin, called "The Collegians." The play was given the title "The Colleen Bawn." It was played in almost every city in the United Kingdom and the United States, and it made its author a handsome fortune.

August Strindberg, author of "The Father," was quite another sort of person. Born a generation later than Boucicault and in poverty, he lived his life long in suffering—physical privation as a child, mental turmoil as a youth, and hysterical spiritual disintegration as a man. He made two marriages, both of which were disastrous and both of which led him almost to insanity. There are many who think that he actually was insane.

"The Father" was written in 1887 during the stress of his first marital fiasco and shows the depressing effect of his persecution mania. It concerns the deliberate deluding by a wife of her husband into the belief that he is not the father of his much loved daughter. Insanity, always so near to the author himself, seizes the father and he is finally tricked into a strait-jacket by his old nurse. Only death solves his problem.

When the play appeared it naturally created a furor. It was a landmark of importance in the history of European realism. "Lady Julia" followed it in 1888, and other similar plays, most of which centered in the author's own marital tragedy. In those years [the years when Boucicault was living his last] Strindberg was writing his greatest novels, "The People of Hemso," which was published the same year as "The Father," and "In the Outer Skerries," which appeared in 1890, the year of Boucicault's death.

Strindberg's marriage was dissolved in 1891. His misery was accentuated by financial difficulties and insanity touched him more nearly than ever. He lived twenty-one years after that, however, piling up volumes. He is considered Sweden's greatest modern writer according to critics, and his work has exerted a deep and lasting influence on the European novel and drama.

Critics Often Too Severe with Cinema Epics

By Tom Pettey.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The old days of poking fun at the movies have gone, but a lot of people still like to pick flaws in the celluloid epics. Among the favorite subjects for highbrow magazines and Sunday supplements alike are:

"What is wrong with the talking pictures?"

"Censorship, or the purification of the films."

"Wastefulness in making pictures."

"The dearth of good, original material."

"The lack of art among the film artists."

One could go on and on, filling the page with these topics and still not scratch the surface of what has been written. For the most part the deluge of words has been filled with criticism. Few write in defense of the movies; it just is not profitable. The talkies need no defense, according to their makers, and whatever is written about them is just so much publicity for the old publicity mill. Nevertheless, this column is written in defense of the movies.

No Basic Mistake.

To begin with, there is nothing wrong with the movies. That is, nothing wrong in the sense of a fundamental, basic mistake. On the contrary, the talkies have made magnificent strides this season. The producers have produced the best of pictures, the players have grown in fame and ability, the industry has managed to hold up its head in the midst of depression. When the talkie houses show such pictures as "Street Scene," "Alexander Hamilton," and "Five Star Final" it is foolish to speak ill of the industry.

When such actors as George Arliss, the Barrymore brothers, and others of great skill find their greatest roles in the movies, why should we search for minor flaws?

A second popular topic is censorship. From time to time some highly misinformed writer predicts the downfall of the entire motion picture structure through this evil of evils. Certainly censorship becomes ridiculous at times, but it is necessary and has contributed a great deal to the industry. Without some form of censorship the movies would have hit a burlesque house level and remained there until doomsday.

I have seen just about as many raw scenes in the movies as I ever saw on the stage. It is to the credit of the censor that the films are washing up while the stage is reeking more strongly than ever. No one in a normal frame of mind would wish to see the talkies filled with dirt. For every goofy job of censoring such as putting dresses on Micky Mouse, clothing statues, or making all mothers married women, there have been constructive jobs such as the elimination of the pictures that glorify gangsters, the cutting of shots featuring scenes that might upset the digestive functions and the ban on profanity, except where it is essential to the plot of the picture.

Wastefulness Exaggerated.

Wastefulness in making pictures has been too highly exploited. It is true that there has been and possibly still is a lot of waste about the studios. For that matter, there is a lot of waste about newspaper offices, and banks have been known to fail because of "overhead." One of last season's film hits, "Hell's Angels," has demonstrated that gigantic expenditures running into the millions of dollars is not always money thrown away. If I am informed correctly, the above mentioned picture has paid a tidy profit to young Mr. Hughes, the "spendthrift."

Those producers who hire "talent" at fancy salaries and then make no use of the "talent" are not always dumb-bells. They have learned from experience that it is cheaper to keep a herd of "brains" on the scenario pay roll and pick off the real "ideas," if any, than it is to try to make pictures out of every "masterpiece" that is turned in. The movie folks are not the only ones who go in for "talent" in a big way.

I recall several stories in which high powered "talent" entered into competition with the working press. The publishers spent a lot of money, but they put the staff man's story in the lead. The "talent" provided the filler stuff. In one case I remember a one dollar a word man who arrived on the scene too befuddled to get into action. The local correspondent wired his agency to "sober up another genius." I call that extravagance.

Plenty of Good Material.

As for the dearth of good, original material, why look for original material when the libraries are full of unpictured masterpieces? The classics still offer an almost untouched mine of film material. In case present day literary compositions still are to be desired, the market is good. I saw Louis Bromfield's "Twenty-Four Hours" after the novel had been made into a play. It was as good as one could hope for. And as for original products, just give Eddie Cantor or any one of the four Marx brothers a cameraman and a stage and they will produce original matter in quantity and frequently quality.

The lack of art among the artists needs little explanation. There is no lack. The movie actors and actresses are giving as finished performances as the stage stars.

Week's Films Pepless.

Now, to tell you about a current picture. Ann Harding is on Broadway again. Her picture is called "Devotion" and deals in a charming manner with romance in an English barrister's home. Miss Harding plays the part of a girl grown tired of the humdrum life in her household. She goes out into the world disguised as a middle aged governess and gets employment in the lawyer's home.

Ann Harding in wig and spectacles loses an indefinable something. I like her better as Ann Harding. Nevertheless, the picture will get you.

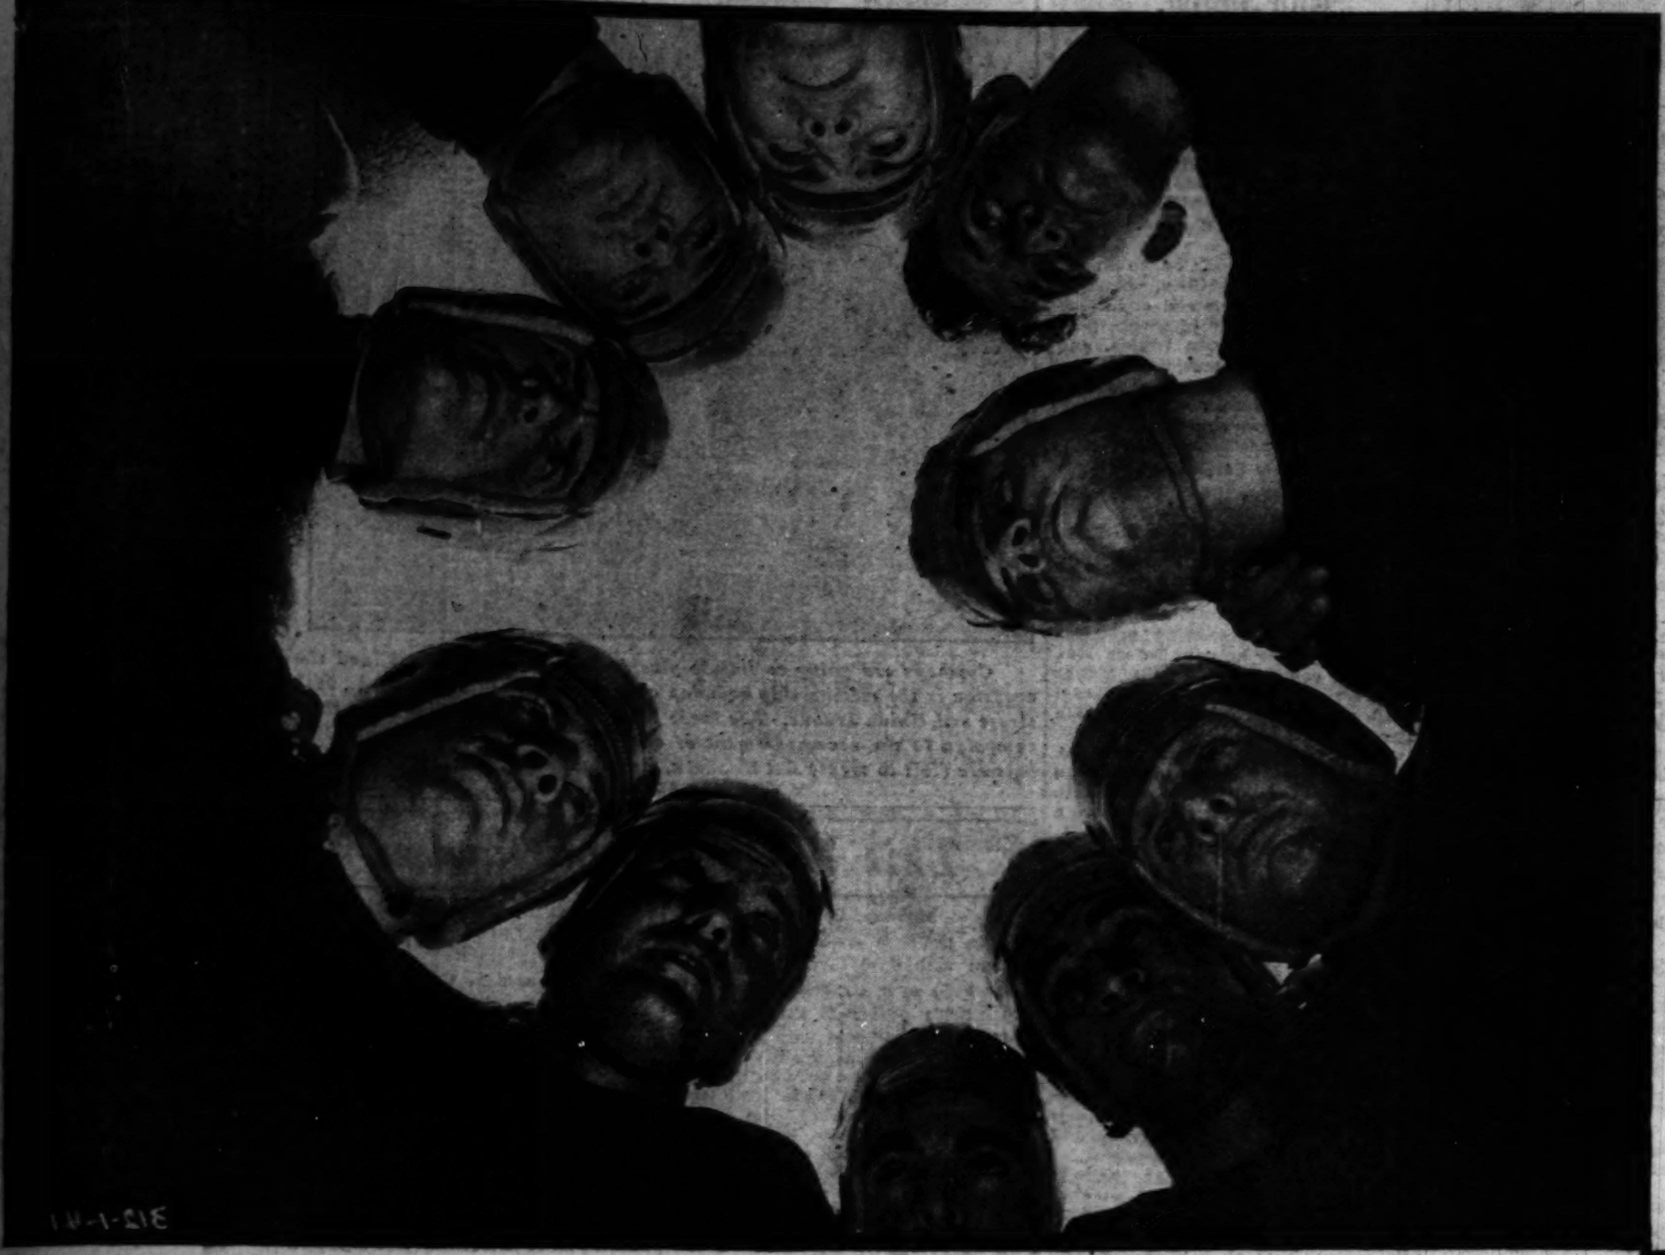
among the October attractions



Notre Dame's Four Horsemen are riding again, but not on college gridirons. They are being featured, with Lew Ayres, in "The Spirit of Notre Dame," the current film at the State-Lake theater.

Alyce Chappele of the twinkling toes danced her way into Chicago theatergoers' hearts with Lou Holtz in "You Said It," at the Grand.

Despite all his medals, Warren Williams appears to be upset about something, but apparently his tirade is giving Bebe Daniels little to worry about. The picture is "Honor of the Family," and it's on display at the present time at the Oriental theater.

Regis Toomey is registering stark terror in this scene from "24 Hours," the photoplay adapted from Louis Bromfield's novel of the same name. Miriam Hopkins, shown above; Clive Brook, and Kay Francis also are in the picture, which is at the Chicago.

This is a puzzle picture. Try to find Hardie Albright, the smiling star of the stage success, "Young Sinners," and Maureen O'Sullivan, recently imported from the "Ould Sod," in this scene from "Skyline" at the Palace theater. (Note: They are in the center.)

Fresh from many movie triumphs in their laugh provoking shorts, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy may be seen at the Roosevelt in their first full length picture. The gentleman with the mean looking forceps is James Saniell. But maybe they're not real.

ZIP-ZI

Here is something for the children as well as grownups. Leon Janney with "Zip-Zip the Cannaball" in "Penrod and Sam," from Booth Tarkington's famous novel of the same name. It is showing at the Woods for the week.

Indian Summer Brings Chicago Playhouses into Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

AFTER attending and reviewing six premières within eight days to celebrate the grand fall opening of the Chicago theatrical season, one's mind becomes a haze of mixed impressions. Floating around in the fog, however, there are a series of wonderments. For example:

I wonder if Walker Whiteside knows that his frequent expectoration upon the stage, in the rôle of the spitting Irishman in "Surf," dilutes rather than fortifies that South Seas melodrama?

I wonder if Phil Baker and Ted Healy, the aggressive and reckless jesters of the revue called "Crazy Quilt," know that dozens and hundreds of average theater-goers, before buying their tickets to any show, ask me: "Is it clean?"

I wonder if Maurice Browne, who is offering "The Venetian" under the auspices of the Dramatic League of Chicago, knows that the finger of destiny has begun to point in his direction as the Siegfried to arouse the Goodman theater from its present state of coma?

I wonder if Donald Brian, co-starring with Edith Taliaferro in "Private Lives," will tell me the location of the fountain of youth from which he apparently quaffs magic draughts that preserve him as a perpetual Prince Danilo?

I wonder if Beatrice Lillie of "The Third Little Show" isn't the only comedienne in history whose sense of humor refused to be ruined by the acquisition of a British title?

I wonder if Gregory Ratoff, who has brought "Girl Crazy" into Chicago in order to fulfill a vow made upon all the ikons of old Russia, is the Morris Gest of the future?

I wonder why Chicago theater managers continue to use the huddle system for their first nights?

I wonder if the play going year in this town will sustain the spirited pace at which it has started?

Finger of Destiny.

My speculations upon the possibility of Maurice Browne's assuming the directorate of a new repertory company at the Goodman theater, perhaps a year hence when Chicago is dressing its windows in readiness for the Century of Progress exposition, have a background in rumor. There has been some slow burning talk on the subject. The trustees of the Goodman, however, are saying nothing, according to their custom, and Mr. Browne himself has dropped no hint of ambitions in this direction.

He seems to be a logical candidate for this labor of Hercules, if Hubert Osborne does not return to the Goodman, and I rise to place him in nomination. His qualifications are numerous. He is a pioneer of the art theater movement in this country; he has a Chicago background, and a loyal following. He has risen from "little" to "big" theater status. His shy beginning on the fourth floor back of the Fine Arts building twenty years ago has carried him to leadership on the London stage and rating as an international impresario. He has given a convincing demonstration of executive prowess as well as art theater ideals.

On the other hand, his control of the Goodman might be too remote. He has many irons in the fire; he is the lessee or owner of two important theaters in London; he contributes plays to the commercial American stage. As a hypothetical director of the Goodman, his authority would probably be delegated, through most of the year, to the lieutenants that he might place in charge there.

These remarks are intended as first aid to the finger of destiny. If they are wasted, I shall have to find myself another candidate, and probably will begin to cast flirtatious eyes at Eva Le Gallienne.

* *

Flaming Florentines.

Your affection for "The Venetian," which came to Chicago for its American première after a prosperous engagement in London, will depend largely upon your taste for "costume plays." When the drama gets into "costume" it also invades his-

By Edward Moore.

ONE of the early performances of the season, promises the Chicago Civic Opera company, will be Mozart's "The Magic Flute." It will be, as far as Chicago's opera is concerned, a novelty, and it is also going to take a lot of casting.

About a quarter century has passed since the work went on here by a professional company. The last performance would seem to have been the time when Fritzi Scheff spilled the operatic beans by appearing as Papagena and getting more applause than the diva who sang the part of the Queen of the Night thought any Papagena was entitled to. It led to feelings and atmosphere not altogether those of sweetness and light, certainly not in the nature of Mozart's golden melodies.

Splendid Cast Chosen.

Papagena, by the way, is not mentioned in the program sent out by the opera company. But for the rest, here is what the company has assembled in the way of a stellar cast. It includes three highly specialized sopranos, a leading contralto, a leading tenor, a leading baritone, a buffo baritone, and a leading basso. They are thus itemized:

Sarastro	Alexander Kipnis
Astrofiammente	Nöel Eadie
Pamina, her daughter	Maria Rajdl
Queen's lady	Frida Leider
Queen's lady	Maria Olszewska
Prince Tamino	Paolo Marion
The Orator	Rudolf Bockelman
Papageno	Eduard Habich
Monostatos	Octave Dua

Conductor—Egon Pollak.

One of the reasons why Herbert Witherspoon made a trip to Europe last summer was to hunt up a coloratura soprano up to the music of Astrofiammente, who is otherwise known as the Queen of the Night. He had auditions here and there, in Paris, Berlin, Munich, and Salzburg, before making his choice. Finally he set-

By Mae Tinee.

Good morning!

"The Spirit of Notre Dame" is dedicated to the memory of the late Knute Rockne, famous and beloved head coach of a history making football team. You will remember that Mr. Rockne was on his way to the coast to complete a contract for some two reel football shorts when the airplane crash occurred that cost his life.

This picture's release at the start of the football season and on the eve of the Notre Dame-Northwestern game is timely and something in the nature of a stroke of genius on the part of the producers. Every football fan will want to see it. Every friend and admirer of Rockne will want to see it, while folks who don't know much about affairs of the gridiron, but like to keep up with current conversation, will buy tickets just to get a glimpse of the famous "Four Horsemen," Don Miller, Jim Crowley, Harry Stuhldreher, and Elmer Layden.

"Are those fellows really in this film?" you ask.

You bet they are! In closeups and in action.

* *

You See Them at Work.

You see their work in the Notre Dame-Army encounter cleverly inserted via news reel. As for the closeup—don't they all autograph a football for a small, enthusiastic boy who sentimentally requests their signatures?

"And now, what are you going to do with it, Sonny?" asks one of the four, fatuously.

"I'm goin' to sell it to a guy for ten bucks," replies mamma's little business man.

O, before I forget it—don't ever again pronounce Carideo with the accent on the "rid." It's Car-ri-day-o, bearing down hard on the "day." If you don't believe it, hear Frank himself give you the lowdown in the picture. And he ought to know!

Little Love Stuff.

As far as the actual football stuff goes, "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is fine! And J. Farrell McDonald seems to me the best man who could have been picked to represent Rockne. He bears an astonishing resemblance to the great coach and is a seasoned and sincere actor. He and his team, at practice, at play, and in their little human communions are convincing. It is not their fault that soppy hokum has been introduced into the story, nor should they be criticized for participation in the same. I won't go into detail about the regrettable mush

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY RULE STILL GOOD IN SCHOOLS

Chicago a Pioneer in Physical Training.

BY IRENE STEYSKAL.

A lot of cold, unbiased testing seems to have forced oblivion upon any number of the good old axioms and maxims, but there is one—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," it goes—that apparently has not suffered from a waning of popularity. As far as we know it never has been so much as questioned; certainly not by our law making body in Springfield, which considered it worthy of legislation.

Since laws are generally couched in more formal terms, however, the gentlemen who make them downstate proclaimed that "physical culture" should be taught in the public schools. Since that time each locality has been working out, according to its immediate needs and means, its own program of execution.

In the Chicago schools an attempt to introduce instruction in physical education was made as early as 1863. Definite steps were taken in 1885 following a demonstration of exercises in the Ogden school made by the Chicago Turngemeinde.

Chicago Leads Nation.

Chicago was the first city in the country to appoint [the following year] a supervisor of physical education. Henry Suder was the man appointed to the new post, a position which he held for 37 years.

A red letter year for Knute Rockne's alma mater, old Northwest Division High school, now Tuley, was 1890 when it erected the first fully equipped high school gymnasium for the teaching of physical education. Six years later the Franklin school claimed the same record for elementary schools.

In 1911 began the transition from the old swimmin' hole. Hyde Park High school was the first school for boys and girls erected with gymnasia and a swimming pool.

Pritzlaff Present Director.

The bureau of physical education was reorganized in 1925 with the appointment of one director and three supervisors. Two years ago the present director, August H. Pritzlaff, succeeded E. C. Delaporte to that position.

Mr. Pritzlaff had been instructor of physical education, coach and dean of boys at Senn High school preceding his appointment to the directorship. Associated with Mr. Pritzlaff on the bureau as supervisors are H. R. Crook, Vera Gardiner, and Maj. F. L. Beals. Maj. Beals, assisted by Maj. H. H. Moore, is in charge of military training in the high schools. Under him are twenty-six instructors directing the R. O. T. C. units which are established in twenty senior high schools.

Under the supervision of Miss Gardiner and Mr. Crook are the Normal college, with eight teachers of physical education; Crane college, with six; there are 204 instructors in twenty-four senior high schools; seventy-five in twenty-seven junior high schools; the 302 elementary schools have 228 teachers; eleven continuation schools have two instructors; and there are five in the six prevocational schools. There are also 16 physiotherapists employed in the city's four schools for crippled children.

Apart from the military training conducted by Maj. Beals, physical education in the public schools comprises physical education classes, corrective work, health education classes; athletic and after-school play; swimming instruction; and the safety patrols in the elementary and junior high schools.

Physical instruction in the kindergartens and elementary schools is, of course, more or less informal. In the kindergartens and through the third grade its consists largely of song games, story plays and the dramatization of activities in the school. From the third grade on a more formal course os provided.

A more definite and diversified program, made possible by equipment, time allotment and the teaching staff, is carried out in the junior high schools. The number of instructors in physical education—one for approximately every 650 pupils—in the junior high schools varies from one to five.

In almost every high school in the city a girls' athletic association is established. Awards for athletic activities are based on a point system that considers not only achievement but sportsmanship, scholarship, and health activities.

Boys of the junior high schools also have their athletic associations. While emphasis is placed in intramural competition, limited competition between schools is permitted in indoor baseball, basketball, swimming and track and field athletics.

Bruno Kluge President.

The program for athletics in the senior high schools, superimposed upon the courses followed in the junior high schools, provides for much wider competition between schools. A board of control made up of representatives, who are physical education instructors, from each high school formulates rules and regulates the conducting of interscholastic competition. Heading this group as president is Bruno Kluge of Bowen High school. George W. Steffens of Austin is vice president, and Mr. Pritzlaff serves as secretary and treasurer.

Games played for coveted city championships range all the way from chess and checkers to football. Lindblom is present holder of the football title. Last season Lindblom won championships also for cross country running and novice and senior gymnastics.

Senn claims championships for golf, ice skating in the senior class, indoor and outdoor track in the senior division, and swimming [25 yards] in the senior and junior divisions.

Other title holders are: Lane for tennis, junior ice skating and baseball; Roosevelt for junior outdoor and indoor track and fencing; Crane for basketball in the heavyweight class and soccer; Marshall for basketball in the lightweight class; Lake View for rifle markmanship; Englewood for swimming [20 yards] in the senior division; Schurz for swimming [20 yards] in the junior division, and Tilden for wrestling.

Tuley claims the checkers champion, and Austin came out with flying colors in the ches tournament.

BRING IN SHEAVES OF PARK PETITIONS

Elmer M. Walsh (center), president of the South Bryn Mawr Improvement association, is shown here holding a sheaf of signed petitions which will be presented to the south park board Oct. 21 when a delegation makes its demand for action on the proposed South Shore park. Leaders of the South Bryn Mawr body seated with Mr. Walsh are Mrs. Edith I. Soderborg, secretary, and Henry C. Moore, treasurer. Standing ae W. E. Landau, director; Mrs. Esther Davisson, vice president, and Russell Carlson, vice president. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

Federation to Demand Action Before Fair.

Eleven south side aldermen have been invited to attend the meeting of the South Side Federation of Improvement Associations Wednesday evening in the community room of the Chatfield Trust and Savings bank, 7936 Cottage Grove avenue.

The federation, consisting of 28 member organizations, is particularly interested in gaining as many improvements as possible for the south side before the World's Fair.

Propositions to be discussed with the aldermen include the removal of street car tracks on South Park avenue between 63d and 67th streets, opening Michigan avenue south of 63d street, opening streets through the Nickel Plate right of way, and the opening and widening of 74th street between Damen and Irving avenues.

Track Depression on Program.

Other matters include transportation, schools, parks and playgrounds, stop and go lights, and depression of the Illinois Central tracks on the South Chicago branch.

City council members in the federation's territory who have been asked to the meeting include Ald. Irving Schreiver [5th], Ald. John Healy [6th], Ald. Barnet Hodes [7th], Ald. David L. Sutton [8th], Ald. Sheldon W. Govier [9th], Ald. William A. Rowan [19th], Ald. Thomas A. Doyle [13th], Ald. Terrence F. Moran [16th], Ald. Frank J. Corr [17th], Ald. Walter W. Morris [18th], and Ald. O. E. Northrup [19th].

Two Send Acceptances.

Ald. Healy and Ald. Hodes already have written their acceptances, while Ald. Sutton said he will be unable to attend because of a previous engagement.

Ralph O. Butz, attorney for the federation, will make a report on real estate tax complaints filed by the federation with the assessors and board or review.

NEWLY FORMED YOUNG PEOPLE'S LEAGUE TO MEET

The first regular meeting of the newly formed Young People's League of the South Side, drawn from four conservative Jewish congregations, will be held Thursday evening at Rodfei Zedek temple, 54th street and Greenwood avenue. A cultural and social program is to be formulated. The league came into being about two months ago when Rabbi Benjamin Daskal of Rodfei Zedek called representatives together. Bernard Sachar is president and Miss Dorothy Harris is secretary of the body. Member groups are Woodlawn Young People's club, Rodfei Zedek Young People's club, Junior Assembly of South Side Hebrew congregation, and Chatham Young People's club.

Roseland Lions to Hear Members Talk Impromptu

Impromptu speeches by members will compose the program of the Roseland Lions club at its weekly luncheon Thursday at the 111th street Y. M. C. A., corner of State street. James R. H. French will talk on his experiences as a British soldier during the war. C. O. Nelson and William Caley will discuss problems of their respective businesses.

ALL COMMUNITY SESSION CALLED IN CHESTERFIELD

Problems to Be Taken Up with Sutton.

The Chesterfield Improvement association will launch its winter program in earnest when it holds an all community meeting at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening in Tuley park fieldhouse. Ald. David L. Sutton [8th] will be the principal speaker, and leaders of most of Chesterfield's organizations will be on hand.

Local leaders scheduled to speak include Dr. T. S. Schmillen, president of Chesterfield Commercial club; Gus Akerlund, commander of Chesterfield post, No. 695, American Legion, and Mrs. Mae Manley, president of the Chesterfield American Legion auxiliary. Joseph C. Tufo, president of the improvement association, will be in charge of the meeting.

Chesterfield Corps to Play.

Entertainment will be furnished by the drum and bugle corps of the Chesterfield post, under the direction of Charles A. Michalak, past commander.

According to the schedule drawn up by Mr. Tufo, Ald. Sutton is to have a busy evening discussing problems which are to be brought before him. First, of course, will be the matter of street openings through the Nickel Plate railroad between 87th and 95th streets.

The association also will ask Ald. Sutton to use his offices to obtain an extension of bus service on South Park avenue from 87th street to 95th street.

Seek Added Street Lights.

Other important points on the association's program include a request for additional street lights between 87th and 95th streets on Cottage Grove avenue and the resurfacing of this section of Cottage Grove avenue. In addition Ald. Sutton will be asked to see to it that Chesterfield gets its share of the appropriations from the vehicle tax funds for resurfacing of its asphalt streets. There is to be a discussion in this connection as to whether certain macadam streets in the district should be resurfaced by the city by special assessment.

Mr. Tufo will ask that the city order the Liberty theater be wrecked or that proper barricades be erected to protect children of the neighborhood. The theater, begun several years ago in the 9100 block on Cottage Grove avenue, never was completed.

The Chesterfield group has joined with the Calumet Gateway Improvement association in asking the abandonment of the loading platform for garbage and ashes near 90th street and Dobson avenue. The matter of regular and frequent removal of garbage will be taken up with Ald. Sutton.

Street Markers to Be Sought.

A demand will be made on the alderman for street markers which are missing in the district and painting of fire plugs in the area bounded by 87th and 95th streets and Dauphin and Calumet avenues will also be sought.

The proposal for widening St. Lawrence avenue between 83d and 87th streets by special assessment will be up for discussion, since part of the Chesterfield district would be affected by indirect benefit assessments.

Other officers of the association besides Mr. Tufo are: Vice president, Guy A. Skinner; treasurer, Dennis Murtaugh; secretary, Arthur R. Jensen; directors, Eugene H. Block, Charles D. Gile, Mrs. Anna Klein, Mrs. Frances Murray, Edmund W. Magerstadt, Mr. Tufo, and Mr. Skinner.

The association is pleased over the new ward boundaries, since these place Chesterfield all in one ward, the 8th, rather than splitting it between the 8th and 10th wards.

S. CHICAGO AVE. PAVING TO BE BEGUN TUESDAY

The paving of South Chicago avenue between 71st and 95th streets with gasoline tax funds will be begun Tuesday with a ceremony sponsored by the South Chicago Chamber of Commerce. President Emmett Whealan of the county board will be the special guest. Others on hand are to include Maj. George A. Quinlan, county highway superintendent; Duncan M. Campbell, assistant superintendent; Ald. William A. Rowan [10th], and Ald. David L. Sutton [8th], as well as leaders of the South Chicago and Grand Crossing [formerly South Woodlawn] chambers of commerce. The paving crew will begin at 71st street and work south. Underground work is complete except for the southern part of the strip to be paved, and that will be done by the time the pavers are ready to begin work there.

CALUMET GROUP HEARS MEYERING TOMORROW NIGHT

Sheriff William D. Meyering will be the principal speaker at a meeting of the Calumet Gateway Improvement association at 8:15 o'clock tomorrow evening at 8928 Stony Island avenue. Entertainment in the form of stunts of magic will be given by Donald J. Hughes.

Reports on the situation with regard to street openings through the Nickel Plate right of way are to be made and the question of further extension of the north boundaries of the association taken up.

It was learned last week that there will be no funds available for installation of additional lights in the Stony Island avenue parkway between 80th and 94th street until after the 1932 appropriations have been made.

Brainerd Group to See Jarecki's "Day at Polls"

County Judge Edmund K. Jarecki and his players will present a play, "A Day at the Polls," before the Brainerd Improvement association at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening at Fort Dearborn school, 9025 South Throop street. The play, written by Judge Jarecki, illustrates the value of the franchise and presents solutions of major election day problems.

READY FOR "Y" ROUNDUP

Cowboys are going to invade placid Englewood this week, and the occasion is the membership roundup of the Englewood Y. M. C. A., 66th street and Union avenue. The three leaders seen here talking over their campaign to the accompaniment of chaps, boots, lariats, and ten gallon hats are (left to right) Art Swanson, Ray Ballantine, and Harry Himmel. This Week in the Garden

Monday, Oct. 12.

Rake up bare spots in the lawn, scratch with steel toothed rake, sow grass seed over it, and germination will quickly occur. A little commercial fertilizer will stimulate the young plants into vigorous growth and enable them to endure through the winter. If it is desired to keep root crops outdoors through the winter prepare the place now, before severe frosts. Carrots, late cabbage, beets (not too old and woody), potatoes, sweet potatoes, and turnips may be kept by this method.

Tuesday, Oct. 13.

Some of the early hardy chrysanthemums are bursting into bloom. A new yellow sort, known as Valerine, is a low growing variety attractive for Chicago and vicinity. Keep an eye open for varieties that come into early bloom because only the extremely early kinds can be depended on for a display. Continue to make cuttings of tender plants that have been growing outdoors. Pot a few plants, cutting back at the time of lifting.

Gladiolus that have ripened their leaves should be dug, the excessive soil removed, the corms dried for a few hours, and later placed in a cool, dry basement over winter. Save all bulbils of the rare kinds for future planting. Exchange with gardening friends.

Dahlias may be dug, or the tubers left in the ground until frost. Lift the tubers without breaking because they keep better. Cut off the stems a few inches above the ground before digging. Do not neglect labeling securely. Place a six inch layer of sand on the cellar floor, pack the tubers in layers, covering each layer with dry sand or peatmoss, and cover the top layer with a five or six inch layer.

Wednesday, Oct. 14.

Try a few of the bulbous iris in a sheltered and well drained situation, such as a rock garden. Pansies and violas may be propagated from cuttings at this time, an excellent method of preserving an outstanding variety. Remove the side shoots, with a few roots attached, if possible, and insert them firmly in sandy soil in a cold frame or box which may be placed in the frame. Cover the sash with boards during cold weather. Many other plants may be increased in this way. Plant narcissus bulbs for their effect in the perennial borders, or for naturalizing with shrubs or in the outlying sections of the grounds.

Thursday, Oct. 15.

Bring in the amaryllis from out of doors, gradually dry them off by reducing the supply of water from day to day, and store in a dry, cool place. They become active toward January, at which time they may be repotted. Many inquiries regarding the proper distance apart that street trees should be planted have been received. The elm, which is popular, should be used on wide streets, and planted 50 feet apart. Elms never attain their maximum beauty if planted close together. The hard maple is also a large growing tree and should be used on wide streets. Plant the ash and tree of heaven on narrow streets and 40 feet apart. Use one species along a street instead of a miscellaneous assortment with a different habit of growth. The box elder, poplar, catalpa, and willow must be sparingly used, or planted where nothing else will grow. They are short lived and easily injured by storms.

Friday, Oct. 16.

When planting hedges, and especially the privet, plant at least three to six inches deeper than the lowest branch of the plant. These plants root along the stems and deep planting makes a thicker hedge. When planting cut to within six inches of the ground to force the dormant buds into vigorous activity. Mulch after the ground freezes. Plant a pussy willow (salix caprea has the largest catkins) for a supply of bouquet material in early spring. The native species (salix discolor) has smaller flowers, but is very good. Quarter inch mesh wire will keep rabbits from injuring trees.

Saturday, Oct. 17.

Plant a few shrubs or low trees to attract birds. Useful plants for this purpose are the chokeberry, spicebush, Japanese barberry, cornelian cherry, some dogwoods, Morrow's honeysuckle, mulberry, smooth and staghorn sumac, elderberry, mountain ash, snowberry, Indian currant, snowball, vinurnum dentatum, lantana, lentago, prunifolium, and tomentosum. Wild grape twiggy shrubs form nesting places. Plant some hybrid lilacs to furnish a range of free flowering, tall shrubs, and in unusual colors.

Linnea Concert Postponed.

The Linnea Aid society has postponed its fall concert from Oct. 21 to Nov. 4, it was announced last week. The affair will be held in Englewood Swedish Mission church, 59th and Carpenter streets.

60 Foursomes to Tee Off Next Friday.

The South Chicago Y. M. C. A.'s annual fall campaign for new members will get under way Friday evening with a tee off meeting of leaders and workers at dinner in the "Y" building, 3039 East 91st street.

The campaign as outlined by J. Fred Sheehy will be conducted along the lines of a golf tournament. Workers will be divided into 60 foursomes, each of which will be under a captain. The foursomes will be grouped in ten divisions, including industries, neighborhoods, residents, women and girls, and boys.

A goal of 700 new and continuing members has been set for the campaign. Five hundred men members are sought and 200 women as associate members.

Final Reports Oct. 23.

The first meeting Friday evening will be followed by meetings Oct. 19 and Oct. 21 when reports of captains and division leaders will be made. On Oct. 23 the final reports will be made at a dinner meeting of all the workers.

Assisting Mr. Sheehy with the direction of the drive are Andrew Reed, former secretary, and L. B. Robertson, chairman of the membership campaign. Division leaders include Charles L. Waggoner, E. L. Bost, and J. L. Hyland, industries; E. G. Tutt, committee of management; Carl J. Schroeder, east side; John Hanberg, South Chicago and south shore.

George L. Danforth Jr., Charles L. Waggoner, Perrin Rule and George E. Rose will constitute a professional foursome.

Boys' Meetings Open Today.

The boys' greater meetings organization of the "Y" will open its sixth season at 3 o'clock this afternoon. The club is conducted entirely by boys, meeting 25 Sundays each season. L. T. Crossman will speak this afternoon. Officers are Michael Nagy, president; Paul Nelson, vice president; Donald Moss, secretary; William Winters, treasurer; Philip Nelson, chancellor, and Robert Mey, sergeant at arms. Mr. Henderson is connected with the Wisconsin Steel company, and is a former boys' work secretary at the North Avenue-Larrabee Y. M. C. A.

TRAFFIC LIGHTS SOUGHT AT 83D AND SO. SHORE

Ald. Barnet Hodes [7th] will ask the south park board to install stop and go traffic lights at the intersection of 83d street and South Shore drive. Ald. Hodes previously had asked that the city install the lights, but this intersection comes under south park jurisdiction. As the result of a traffic count made recently, Leslie Sorensen, city traffic engineer, last week informed Ald. Hodes that lights should be installed without doubt. Mr. Sorensen also stated that warning signals will be placed at 79th street and Essex avenue as soon as approved by the bureau of streets. A check also has been completed at this corner.

Boys Busy Making Plaques for Park Sport Champions

The new south park plaques, given this year for the first time to winning teams in the various sports and playground contests, are being made by the boys at Fuller park under the supervision of William Collins. The plaques are of wood and bronze castings with a space in the center for the insertion of the names of the winning teams. About 80 of these shields are to be given out.

ANGLER TOURNEY CALLED AS FISH CLUTTER LAGOON

Offer Prizes for Best Catches in Hour.

There's going to be a free-for-all fishing tournament Saturday. It's going to be down in Washington park, where Edward Kelly, the boatman, says the fish are so plentiful this year that it is impossible to row boats through the lagoon.

"They're vicious, too!" he said. "They snap at horses which cross the bridle path bridge and jump at birds on overhanging branches."

V. K. Brown, superintendent of playgrounds and sports, said he understood that they were even chasing each other up trees. He opined this was probably dogfish chasing catfish, but it was impossible to substantiate this story.

A hundred ideas were hatched on Mr. Kelly's urgent demand for immediate relief. Suggestions of seining and dynamite were dismissed when one official thought of a fishing tourney. So a fishing tourney it is. It is to be sponsored by the Izaak Walton league, but is open to all.

Limited to Midday Hours.

So Saturday has been set aside as the day. Fishing will start at 9 o'clock in the morning and continue until 3 in the afternoon. These hours were decided on because it was thought that early morning or late afternoon fishing would be taking undue advantage of the finny creatures. It also is figured that the usual midday fish siesta will not prevent some fine catches.

Entries will be received all day Thursday at the boat landing in Washington park. There will be no fee and no age limit. Fifty rowboats will be provided for the contest, two entrants in each boat. But each contestant will be allowed to fish just one hour, a whistle to punctuate the starting and finishing times.

Prizes will be given not only to the person snaring the largest fish and the one with the largest catch, but plans are being made to reward the man who loses the "biggest one" and to the person with the best fish story to tell as a result of his day's experiences.

Stocked Last Year and This.

Lest any one should doubt that there is an oversupply of the finny creatures in the Washington lagoon, it should be known that the place was heavily stocked last spring—and also last year. Mr. Brown said that copious quantities of young bass, pike, and bluegills were dumped into the lagoon and that there already were large numbers of catfish and other members of the bullhead family living there.

The other main event in the south parks Saturday is to be the football field day at 9:30 o'clock in the morning in the Washington park meadow. This is open to boys from 10 to 18, inclusive, with points being given on a graded scale according to age. A maximum of 20 boys is allowed from each of the 18 member playgrounds of the system.

Events include punting, drop kicking, place kicking, and forward passing. The best marks made by the south park lads are to be matched against those of boys from parks in other middle west cities. Since football always has been considered too tough a game for the younger boys, who make up the large percentage of those enrolled in the parks, the field day is set up as the football substitute. It is believed that this makes for better players than too much football when the boys are young.

HEAR BRAINERD UNION STATION PLEA TUESDAY

Civic leaders representing groups in the Ridge Civic council and the West Auburn Community council will rally at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning at 1 North La Salle street when the Illinois commerce commission holds a hearing on the Brained union depot petition. Two arguments will be stressed by witnesses for the groups seeking the station. The station will be urged as a measure of public convenience. Increased safety to children of the community if all trains stop at 89th and Loomis streets also will be argued. The lower accident rate of the Rock Island railroad, which stops there, as compared with the Pere Marquette and the Baltimore and Ohio roads' record, will be cited.

Roseland's fingers are crossed for Miss Dorothy Jahn, Miss Roseland, who left last week-end for Hollywood to try her luck in the movies. Maybe the old home town won't be proud if Dorothy's name appears in electric lights some few months hence! Dorothy, you know, got the chance to have a screen test along with the crown of "Miss Roseland" presented in the beauty contest sponsored by the People's store and the South End Chamber of Commerce.

Why wait twenty-five or even fifty years to stage a big blowout celebrating the fact that you're happily married? Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Humphreys, 1655 West 82d street, broke with tradition when they took eighteen friends to dinner and the theater on their first wedding anniversary.

One of Roseland's old guard, Mrs. Katherine Ambuul Bass, reached the 77 year mark the other day. Children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren gathered at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. Vander Veen, 11933 Princeton avenue, to help her observe the occasion with due ceremony.

CANADA has been calling Ridge residents this fall. Mr. and Mrs. William C. Waddell, 9641 Winchester avenue, have been visiting friends in Montreal and Quebec and Mrs. A. Jewett, 1708 West 105th place, has been in Windsor.

Here's a party given by the guests for the hosts. When Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Korzeniecki, 12245 Parnell avenue, observed their golden wedding anniversary the other day, 100 or so friends dropped in on them without warning, and arranged a regular celebration for them, flowers, refreshments, programs, games, prizes, and all.

H. G. WELLS, ONCE FOE OF RADIO, TO MAKE U. S. BOW

Proves He's No Perfect Prognosticator.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

H. G. WELLS.
[Kadel & Herbert.]

H. G. Wells is by no means the perfect prognosticator. No longer ago than 1927 he ran up against radio and found it useless. The famous historian of the future pictured the invisible audience bored to death while a maze of aerials cluttered up the housetops like wire entanglements on the fields of France. Mr. Wells then doubted that even the most ardent fan's enthusiasm could last more than two weeks, and thought that radio listeners must be "very sedentary persons living in badly lighted houses or otherwise unable to read."

Since then Mr. Wells has got over his gloomy outlook and has been employing the ether waves to talk on "What I Would Do with the World." Next week he comes to New York and on Saturday evening he will speak over an NBC coast to coast net, including WENR.

Apparently no one gets homesick easier than a New Yorker abroad. As soon as Jimmy Walker hit the continent he was talking back over the radio. At 4 o'clock this afternoon Roxy is going to speak over NBC from Berlin.

The prince of Wales and John Masefield, poet laureate, will also be heard in international broadcasts this month. The prince is to speak at 2:45 p. m. Wednesday, Oct. 21, over CBS from London, and Masefield will discuss "Ships and Their Builders" at 2:30 the following afternoon on the same net.

When H. H. Rajput, Hindu graduate of Oxford and a former officer in the British intelligence service, came to Chicago to inaugurate his series of adventure stories based on war experiences he turned to the University of Chicago to get real Hindu music. He found there several students with native instruments, among them stringed affairs used in India for more than 2,000 years. Over the air they sound like flutes and other woodwinds.

James Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, dropped in to inspect the Hindu instruments, threw up his hands, and walked out.

Now that the nation's leading dance orchestras are playing college medleys nightly, MCA hastens to point out that 50 per cent of the nationally known orchestras attended college and that 70 per cent of the musicians employed in these orchestras are men of university training.

But not so many of them, possibly, are graduates. Nor does it make any difference.

Ferde Grofe presented a number Friday evening on the Whiteman hour memorializing the life of Knute Rockne. . . . Ernest Naftzger, the Something for Everyone man, has cracked 10,584 jokes over the air and has had his name misspelled 74 ways in fan mail. . . . Kate Smith has seen her fourth full moon come over the mountain from the Palace. . . . Red Cagle, the sometime pigskin carrier, has made his radio debut. . . . CBS is broadcasting football by television. It's the miniature scoreboard arrangement.

Art Jarrett, who has a style combining the lyric and downright, lowdown jazz, will make his bow as a band leader over CBS at 2:30 tomorrow. . . . Harry Stuhldreher, once one of Notre Dame's famed Four Horsemen, will be heard over NBC at 8:15 tonight. . . . Bob Becker, TRIBUNE outdoor writer, and Cal Johnson start a series titled "Around the Campfire" for NBC at 8:45 tomorrow evening. . . . "Seth Parker" and his Jonesport neighbors are going to tour the nation. They will be in Chicago on Oct. 25 and 26 and will broadcast from local studios.

Song hits, fashions, sports, and historic events of the '60s are woven into a new radio series titled Musical Memories, to be heard over CBS beginning next Sunday at 5:30 p. m. . . . Of Cantor's many Cantor for President slogans, we prefer "Don't say can't; say Cantor." . . . Ten minutes after Ted Weems introduced his new "Since I Broke That Record" [you can hear the crack], fans who heard it over the air appeared at the Trianon to hear more. . . . From Russ Columbo, girls: "My ideal girl has to be intelligent, a good sport, and be possessed of an infinite sweetness."

MRS. HOOVER TO SPEAK DURING BOAT CEREMONY

Mrs. Herbert Hoover will christen the American Clipper, a new flying boat with a capacity of 45 passengers, at 1:30 tomorrow, the ceremony to be described over both networks.

The event will take place at the Anacosta naval air station in Washington, after which an initial flight will be made, when Mrs. Hoover will be flown over the capital city.

Announcers will also accompany the ship on its flight, and by means of portable sets will broadcast interesting sights which will be witnessed. By means of a special receiving apparatus located on the ground, the description from the plane will be passed out through the network.

Among the notables who will take part in the ceremonies will be Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, Congressman Will Wood, Clyde W. Kelly, known as the father of the air mail act; Orestes Ferrara, ambassador from Cuba, and J. T. Trippe, president of the Pan-American Airways.

FEATURE W-G-N PROGRAMS THIS WEEK

Elizabeth Lennox (left), contralto, who will be featured over W-G-N at 8:30 tomorrow evening. Donald Brian, who plays the male lead in Noel Coward's "Private Lives," will speak over W-G-N at 5:15 this afternoon, inaugurating the new "Fifth Row Center" program. Edith Taliaferro, the feminine star of "Private Lives, will also speak on the theater hour this afternoon.

CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA AGAIN TO BE HEARD ON AIR

13 Saturday Programs Planned.

Chicago's world famous Civic opera will again be broadcast this year to a nation of music lovers by NBC. This announcement was made yesterday by M. H. Aylesworth, president of the company.

The stirring music, pageantry and drama of the opera will be brought to the fireside of American homes, no matter whether in the crowded city or the lonely back woods settlement for the third successive year through the coöperation of the Civic Opera company and NBC.

Many New Presentations.

Under the new directorship of Herbert Witherspoon, famous in his own right as an opera star and as a director, the opera company will this year offer new presentations never before heard in this country and will also bring to radio listeners a host of new and brilliant singers gathered by Mr. Witherspoon from all parts of Europe during a scouting trip for talent last summer.

This year, instead of cutting into the middle of the opera as has been the custom in the past, the broadcast will run from 8 to 8:30 p. m., central standard time, each Saturday night, beginning Nov. 7, thus allowing the radio listener to hear the overture and entire first act of the performance.

13 Operas to Be Presented.

Further perfections in broadcasting technique are expected to be introduced in the broadcasts this year allowing music lovers to hear the music nearly as perfectly as though they were sitting in the best seats in the house. The new parabolic microphones, known as the "human ears" of radio, will be used.

In all 13 operas are expected to be presented during the season of 1931-'32 including old favorites and American premiers.

The Chicago Civic opera was the first grand opera in the world to be broadcast direct from the stage.

TAMARA TO BE FEATURED WITH RUDY AND BAND

A medley of old Russian songs and modern American tunes are to be presented by Tamara, youthful singer and stage star, when she makes her bow as the guest artist of Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees from 7 to 8 o'clock Thursday evening through W-G-N. While singing the Russian numbers Tamara will play her own accompaniment on the guitar. Tamara was born in Ukraine twenty-one years ago and came to the United States when she was 9 years old. Starting in her theatrical career at an early age, she has already been featured in such productions as Billy Rose's "Crazy Quilt" and Schwab and Mandel's "Free for All."

COLORATURA

LETIZIA LEITA.
[Moffett-Russell Photo.]

W-G-N will present Signorina Letizia Leita, European coloratura soprano, who has just arrived in this country, at 9:15 this evening.

Signorina Leita has been singing with unusual success in Italy, having made her debut in Milan at the Theatre Del Verme as Gilda in "Rigoletto" a year ago, and also appeared in the "Barber of Seville" and "Lucia De Lammermoor" at the same opera house.

TEA TIME SINGERS

10 GIRLS TO VIE IN STATE RADIO TEST ON W-G-N

Ten girls, winners in their home towns, will compete over W-G-N from 8 to 8:45 next Saturday evening in the state finals of the fifth national radio auditions. The contest to select the finalists among the young men singers, to be held Oct. 24, will also be heard over W-G-N.

In this state contest the winners—a young man and a young woman—will qualify to represent Illinois in the midwestern finals, to be broadcast Nov. 15 on W-G-N. The winners of this latter contest will then represent the entire middle west in the grand finals, to be held in New York some time in December.

This contest for young women is under the direction of Dr. Daniel Protheroe, Chicago choral leader, who is state audition chairman. Mrs. Edmund Joseph Tyler, is again local chairman for the Chicago district.

The young women and the towns which they represent in this state contest are:

5TH ROW CENTER PREMIER IS SET FOR 5:15 TODAY

Miss Taliaferro, Brian to Be Presented.

From the theater box office comes the title of W-G-N'S new Sunday theater review, "Fifth Row Center," which will have its premier presentation at 5:15 this afternoon with Edith Taliaferro and Donald Brian, the stars of Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," as its opening attraction.

"Fifth Row Center" is dedicated to the legitimate theater and will present each Sunday intimate chatter about some outstanding show appearing on the Chicago stage, and feature the personal appearance of some star in the production.

Starred as Child.

Edith Taliaferro has appeared in scores of plays in America, England, and Australia. She started her stage career when she was two and a half years old and had star rôles in "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" as a child.

Donald Brian, who supports Miss Taliaferro, has been a stage favorite for many years, his first Broadway appearance having been in "Florodora." Real success, however, did not come to him until the night "The Merry Widow" was unfurled to a wildly enthusiastic audience. Brian made a great hit in the rôle of Prince Danilo and a new star was made. In recent seasons he has appeared in "How's Your Health," "The Queen's Husband," "Candlelight," and the Players' club revival of "Becky Sharp."

Many Stars Presented.

In presenting "Fifth Row Center," W-G-N is enlarging its already successful policy of giving its radio audience stage stars of prominence. During the last year it has brought before the microphone such famous personages as Otis Skinner, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Grace George, De Wolf Hopper, Tom Powers, Oscar Shaw, Blanche Ring, and Lillian Kemble Cooper.

Among the stage attractions which W-G-N will have in future "Fifth Row Center" programs are: "The Silent Witness," "The Third Little Show," "Girl Crazy," "Crazy Quilt," "The Venetian," and "Surf."

O. N. (Yank) Taylor, vice president of the Newspaper Radio Editors' association and radio editor of the Chicago Daily Times, will greet radio listeners over Columbia during Bill Schudt's "Going to Press" from 5 to 5:15 p. m. Wednesday.

YALE BANQUET, GRID TILT WITH U. OF C. ON W-G-N

Angell, Hutchins, Stagg to Speak.

When Yale alumni invade Chicago next week-end for the Yale-Chicago football game most of their celebrations will be carried to the rest of the country over W-G-N, THE TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel.

Five speakers who will be heard at the banquet in the Stevens hotel Friday evening will be Dr. James R. Angell, president of Yale university; Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago and former dean of the Yale law school; George Vincent, chairman of the board of Rockefeller institute; Prof. William Lyon Phelps, Yale's famous writer and critic, and Amos Alonzo Stagg, graduate of Yale in 1888, who is celebrating his 40th year as Chicago's football coach.

Music to Be Broadcast.

In addition to its broadcast of the addresses, W-G-N will have specially located microphones in the banquet hall to pick up the music and revelry. There will be the music of the Yale band of almost a hundred pieces, which will be heard in a concert when W-G-N comes on the air at 7:30, and group singing of former members of the glee club who will be gathered at one table.

On Saturday afternoon the Yale football team will appear for the first time in Chicago, playing Alumnus Stagg's Maroons at Stagg field. And Albie Booth will make "his last appearance west of Chapel street," according to advance announcements.

Quin Ryan will take the air from the field at 1:45 next Saturday to give listeners the play by play story of the game and the attendant festivities.

Dr. G. W. Dowie to Speak.

Various religious denominations will be interested in the address of Dr. George W. Dowie, director of the United Spiritual Movement, who will speak at 1 o'clock Thursday on the W-G-N midday services. Many Chicago churches, particularly those of the Presbyterian denomination, are participating in this movement..

Other speakers whom Dr. John L. Dickson, director of the midday services, has obtained for the week are: Dr. Herbert Whiting Virgin, pastor of the North Shore Baptist church, who will talk Monday, and Prof. A. C. McGiffert of the Chicago Theological seminary, who will give the address on Tuesday.

A layman of the Lutheran church, David Chindblom will speak Wednesday, and Dr. W. E. J. Bratz, editor of the Epworth Herald, a journal for young people, is to talk on Saturday. Dr. Dickson will speak at 12:45 on Friday.

MORTON DOWNEY KEEPS BUSY 24 HOURS EACH DAY

From early morning to early morning Morton Downey is a more than busy tenor. Due to his heavy radio, theatrical and supper club activities, he finds it necessary to rise at 8:30 a. m. After some setting up exercises Downey eats a light breakfast and is off for his penthouse office where he spends an hour on business matters. Then he dashes for the vaudeville theater at which he appears four times daily.

MORTON DOWNEY.

Between hours he learns new songs, receives business callers, and is otherwise kept occupied. He must arrange to be at the Columbia studios at 5 o'clock for his rehearsal and broadcast. At 7 o'clock he is rushing back to the theater, only to return to the studios at 10 o'clock for the late broadcast to the west coast.

After the broadcast he goes to the Central Park casino where he entertains until early morning. And so to bed for a few hours of much needed sleep.

BROADCASTERS TO HEAR HOOVER AT ANNUAL MEET

President Hoover's address before the National Association of Broadcasters on Oct. 26 will be broadcast over networks from 11 to 11:30 a. m. The President will speak from the White House, addressing by wire the ninth annual convention of the association, which will be held in Detroit.

Walter J. Damm of Milwaukee, president of the association, will call the organization to order and introduce Mayor Frank Murphy of Detroit, who will welcome the delegates. There will be a brief response by William S. Hedges of Chicago, former president of the association.

Mr. Damm will then introduce President Hoover, who speaks from Washington. Following the chief executive there will be an address by Maj. Gen. Charles Saltzman, chairman of the federal radio commission.

Neighborhood Theaters

One of the best of recent shows in the loop is at the Tower this week. It is "The Last Flight," which is adapted from "Nikki and Her War Birds." The story is of jangled nerves, lives out of tune, at the close of the world war. Helen Chandler does beautiful work as Nikki and there is appeal to the four lads—Richard Barthelmess, John Mack Brown, David Manners, and Elliott Nugent. Technically excellent, full of suspense, it pulls at the heart. "The Brat" is coupled with it.

"An American Tragedy."

The much discussed "An American Tragedy" holds the center of attention at the Tivoli. Based on a true story of New York state, it deals with a boy's amour dilemma, the unraveling of which is pure tragedy. A shopgirl working under him in a factory has given herself to him, but his love wanes and he wants another—a wealthy girl. Though promising to marry the former, he has decided to drown her. The rowboat turns over—but accidentally. Genuine acting by three youths puts the picture over. Phillips Holmes handles a difficult rôle well; Sylvia Sidney appeals instantly in genuine fashion.

Avalon Offers "Pagan Lady."

"You talk about your God dealing out blessings like He was a delivery boy with a basketful of groceries! My God's not like that." Quoth Evelyn Brent in the title rôle of "Pagan Lady," which is at the Avalon with "Confessions of a Co-ed." She and Charles Bickford, bootlegger, are pretty good folks at heart, as you will find out. Conrad Nagel is a missionary, the first who ever proposed marriage to Miss Brent. Good show. Phillips Holmes and Sylvia Sidney play the leads in "Confessions," which is not so good a show.

Anna May Wong Stars.

Anna May Wong carries off the honors in "Daughter of the Dragon," which shares the Maryland screen with the Gaynor-Farrell romantic and pleasing piece, "Merely Mary Ann." The former picture is another of the Fu Manchu [Warner Oland] series and probably the last, for Fu meets his death. Sessue Hayakawa is another starred player.

"Birth of Nation" at Shore.

Lillian Gish, Henry Walthall, Wallace Reid, Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper. Yes—it's "The Birth of a Nation," D. W. Griffith's master production of 15 years ago, which is drawing as appreciative audiences now as then, for it's just as great on modern day standards as 15 years ago. It shows at the Shore theater Friday and Saturday. "Hell Bound" is an added attraction.

Two Houses Show Darrow Film.

"Mystery of Life," fascinating compilation of Clarence Darrow, is worth looking at, no matter what side of the evolution question you lean toward. It will show with "This Modern Age" at the Grove and Jeffery on Tuesday and Wednesday. The latter has stellar work by Joan Crawford and Pauline Frederick to overcome any other deeficiencies.

Lionel Barrymore at Capitol.

"Guilty Hands" and "Last Flight" are the Capitol theater's double offering this week. "Guilty Hands," from Bayard Veiller's melodrama, gives Lionel Barrymore another opportunity for a splendid performance as a state's attorney who justifiably commits the perfect crime. Kay Francis and Madge Evans are in the supporting cast.

SENATOR LEWIS WILL BE SUNDAY EVENING SPEAKER

United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis will address the Chicago Sunday Evening club at the meeting to be held tonight at Orchestra hall. Starting at 7:30 p. m., the services will be broadcast through station WMAQ.

During the preliminary services an informal Bible talk on "The Trail of the Pathfiender" will be given by Clifford W. Barnes, president of the organization. Included on the musical program will be an organ recital by Stanley Martin and a vocal solo by Mark Love. Under the direction of Edgar Nelson the choir will sing a group of three anthems in one of which Mrs. Mabel Sharp-Herdien will be heard as soloist.

B. E. Sunny will read the scripture and the prayer is to be led by Dr. von Ogden Vogt of the First Unitarian society of Chicago.

Philadelphia Symphony to Open with Bach, Handel

The whole range of 17th century music, from the founding of modern opera in Italy to the great religious and symphonic school of Bach and Handel, will be surveyed by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia orchestra in the first concert of the season scheduled for 7:15 to 9 p. m. tomorrow.

Beethoven Is Available for Disk Collector

"Pastoral" Shows the Lyric Side of Famous Composer's Nature.

By Edward Moore.

THANKS to Brunswick, there is some more Beethoven available for the disk collectors. In album 36, Hall of Fame-International, 90189 to 90194, inclusive, the State Opera orchestra of Berlin plays the sixth, or "Pastoral" symphony under the direction of Hans Pfitzner.

It is no small undertaking to put a complete symphony on the disks, but as one looks back at the accretions of perhaps only a few months, one begins to see the great service the recording companies have been doing in spreading symphonic music around the musical world. This symphony classifies as an important addition to the list. It is Beethoven's finest lyric expression in all the music he wrote for symphony orchestra, and it has received a recording, in a good many respects, worthy of it.

It shows pretty nearly everything Beethoven thought of on the lyric side of his nature: sustained song, poetic imagination, humor, happiness, tenderness, all that one would expect in lyric expression, except one. Rather peculiarly, in spite of his life in Vienna, he would seem to have been little affected by the grace of the aristocratic dance. When he dances in music he is square-toed, even wooden-shod, and it is the only deficiency in the spiritual makeup of one of the greatest composers who ever lived.

An Expression of Feeling.

By no means, the least element in the greatness of this work is Beethoven's refusal to build it as a naturalistic picture of nature. He named it "Pastoral," but he insisted it was to be more an expression of feeling than a tone picture. Other composers might well borrow his restraint.

Mr. Pfitzner knows his Beethoven and conducts the symphony well. The recording is almost as good. Eleven sides are taken up by the reproduction, the twelfth being turned over to another Beethoven work, but one almost never heard in this country. It is the adagio movement from the "Street Song" trio, opus 11, written for piano, clarinet, and cello, and played by M. Raucheisen, L. Kohl, and J. Diesler. The performance is faithful and industrious, rather than inspired, but it is correct, and it is a chance to hear one of Beethoven's less known but quite charming works.

Rethberg Sings for Victor.

Victor, in the classification called Victrola, presents the extraordinary beautiful voice of the famous operatic soprano, Elisabeth Rethberg, in two excerpts not of opera, but of operetta. The Csardas from Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" occupies one side and "Hab' ich nur deine Liebe" from Von Suppe's "Boccaccio," the other number of 7415. They are uncommonly pleasant tunes, and Mme. Rethberg sings them with the same charming loveliness she gives to her rôle in "The Bartered Bride," which is another way of saying that if she had not made a name for herself in the lofty heights of grand opera, she would have been an equally famous figure in the lighter lyric field.

In this connection, there is place for another mention of Richard Tauber, the German tenor, who is about to try his first conclusions on the concert stages of America. Columbia presents him in number G-4063-M with two songs, Leoncavallo's "Mattinata" and Toselli's "Serenade," both accompanied by the Dajos Bela concert orchestra.

These songs do not belong to operetta, but both of them should. In fact, it is a great surprise that they are not sung at least two or three times a night over the radio stations. They fasten themselves to the ear and memory, and stay there indefinitely. And once again there is reason to believe that Mr. Tauber is going to be a hit when he appears in the flesh.

tled upon Miss Eadie, in which decision he agreed with Col. Blois, director of Covent Garden at London. For Miss Eadie sang the part at London and seems to have been well liked.

Another soprano, one of the queen's ladies in waiting, is likewise still to be chosen. Most of the rest of the cast made themselves favorably known in earlier performances. Mme. Leider and Mme. Olszewska have been here for several seasons. Mr. Marion has still to receive the verdict of Chicago audiences.

Talk About Masonry.

There is so much mysterious talk about the connection of "The Magic Flute" with Masonic orders that it is a bit difficult for one not a Mason to straighten out what it is all about. The work was written by Mozart for a carnival theater in Vienna at a time when there was much gossip about the attitude of the ruling classes toward the orders, especially the attitude of the empress, Maria Theresa. One not altogether respectful account tells of how a certain lodge was raided by the police one night under the empress' orders while meanwhile her husband, the emperor, made a quiet and unostentatious disappearance down the back stairs of the building where the meeting was being held.

It is supposed, though here I am subject to correction, that the character of Astroflammente symbolically represents Maria Theresa, that Tamino in the same manner represents the emperor, that Pamina is the Austrian people, Sarastro is a high minded Viennese, famous in his time and high in Masonry, and so on.

But however hidden the allusions to persons of the period may be, they are most historical from our point of view. Schikaneder, who wrote the book and sang the part of Papageno, was a good showman of his time, and he evolved a story which stands pretty well on its own merits, rather complicated, partly comic, partly serious, but still a tale that can be followed.

* *

Here Is the Story.

Here is the story, put in as few words as possible:

Prince Tamino, who has lost his way and been separated from his companions while in search of adventure, is saved from a huge serpent by three mysterious ladies who prove to be the waiting women of Astroflammente, Queen of the Night. The queen takes advantage of the situation to implore Tamino to save her daughter, whom the sage old priest, Sarastro, has taken from her by force. Tamino is given a picture of the girl, falls in love with the likeness, and is filled with an ardent desire to serve her. He is given as a companion in his undertaking one Papageno, a gay and rather witless bird catcher.

When Tamino reaches Sarastro's castle his bitter feelings toward the high priest are changed to those of friendship by the assurance of the priests that their leader had acted only in Pamina's best interests and that she lives and is in no danger. Tamino is told that if he successfully passes a series of trials Pamina shall be his.

Tamino and Pamina, convinced of the righteousness of Sarastro's decision, resist every temptation and pass every trial and finally, the Queen of the Night having been confounded in her plots of vengeance, the two are united in the blazing light of truth, while evil and falsehood vanish and sink back into the night.

First Symphony of Season.

With Miss Bertha Ott beginning her list of concerts with three attractions this afternoon, with several other events this afternoon and here and there during the week, with the Chicago Symphony orchestra beginning its regular season Thursday night and its popular series Saturday night, the concert season of 1931-'32 may be considered to be officially opened. There will be plenty of events before it is officially closed. What is to happen this week is itemized in another column of this newspaper.

The orchestra begins its forty-first season; Dr. Stock begins his twenty-seventh as conductor and his thirty-seventh as a member of the organization. There will be no soloist on the opening program, though a considerable number, the first beginning next week, will appear in the course of the season.

For the opening program, Thursday at 8:30 o'clock, Dr. Stock has decreed Wagner's "Rienzi" Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Ballet Suite, a first class program at any time of any season. For the popular program Saturday night there will be Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Overture; Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, Glazounow's "Ruses d'Amour" Ballet Suite, and Strauss' "Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes, another program of distinct merit.

Correcting an Error.

"Dear Mr. Moore: May I correct your statement in THE TRIBUNE anent Rachmaninoff's fourth concerto? Mlle. Gitta Gradova played it last season on the twenty-first program, March 6 and 7. [Editor's note: Quite right. It was a slip of memory. Beg your pardon.]

"Do you not feel that the soloistic 'racket,' if it may be termed such in view of the amazing preponderance of soloists over purely orchestral programs this season, is not slightly overworked? The old story of the British gallery god needs to be dusted off. As you doubtless remember, the Britisher went to an orchestral concert, at which a famous diva was to assist as soloist. The affair disintegrated into a song recital, with the orchestra as accompanist. After about half a dozen encores, the gallery god felt that the thing had progressed far enough.

"'O, shut up!' he yelled. 'I came to listen to the orchestra!'

"There are a number of gallery gods of that description in Chicago, of which number I am proud to be able to count myself. In my personal opinion, which may not count for much, Frederick Stock is a greater musician than all save a possible two or three of the array of soloists. If he is to 'go 'way back and sit down,' and his fine orchestra with him, while the sainted audiences rave over personality possessed of one-tenth the musicianship and artistry which he possesses, would it not be a worth while change in the policy of the orchestral association to suspend operations, and reincorporate as a concert course, or a syndicate of impresarios?

"In that event they could have all their soloists. They could also maintain an orchestra; it would not necessarily need to be as fine as the one we have now, as its only function would be that of an accompanist for these same 'personalities.'

"MALCOLM J. YOUNG."

This department agrees thoroughly with Mr. Young's estimate of Dr. Stock. It is necessary to add, however, that the business management of the orchestra began to discover through the most unassailable evidence, that of the box office, that not enough of its patrons were like Mr. Young. In other words, patronage was falling off. That is the reason for the soloists this year, also for the change of time from Saturday to Thursday night.

Music Notes.

Miss Rachel Busey Kinsolving's Musical Mornings will begin in the Crystal ballroom of the Blackstone hotel on Thursday, Nov. 5, with a joint recital by Maria Olszewska, contralto of the Civic Opera company, and Mischa Levitzki, pianist. John Charles Thomas, Civic Opera baritone, and Janet Fairbank, Chicago soprano, will appear jointly on Dec. 19. The third program will be presented by Nina Koshetz, soprano, Gabriel Leonoff, tenor, and Vladimir Dubinsky, baritone. Mario Chamlee, tenor, and Jacques Gordon, violinist, will appear Dec. 29, and Juliet Lippe, soprano, and Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, Jan. 7.

The Joseffer String quartet, a new women's organization, Anna Thelma Joseffer, first violin; Eva Pokoloff, second violin; Sara Shatz, viola, and Lillian Pringle, cello, announces a series of six chamber music evenings on the Sundays of Nov. 8, Dec. 13, Jan. 10, Feb. 14, March 3, and April 10 at the Cordon club.

Beginning next Friday, Arthur Dunham will enter upon his eighth season of Tuesday and Friday noonday organ recitals at the Methodist temple. About sixty recitals will be given. Mr. Dunham's Sonata for organ and about twenty other works of recent composition will be played.

Among the coming musical events will be a song recital by Yvonne Gall on Nov. 1. A similar appearance by her a year ago was one of the artistic successes of the season. Having sung at Ravinia in opera during the summer, she is now on the Pacific coast appearing with the San Francisco and Los Angeles companies. After leaving here she will return to Paris to sing in both of the opera companies of that city, also in Lille, Lyons, and Bordeaux.

When the Civic Opera company opens it doors Nov. 2 with "Tosca," the Metropolitan Opera company in New York will likewise greet its patrons, but with "La Traviata," balancing the cast of Rosa Ponselle, Giacomo Lauri-Volpi, and Giuseppe de Luca against Chicago's Claudia Muzio, Jan Kiepura, and Vanni-Marcoux. Early in the first week the Metropolitan will give the first American performance of Weinberger's "Schwanda, the Bagpipe Player," a work that would seem to have a number of good reasons in its score for being heard.

The Swift & Co. Male chorus has begun rehearsals for the 1931-'32 season under the direction of D. A. Clippinger, its conductor for fourteen years. The association's annual concert will be given at Orchestra hall March 1, with Florence Austral, soprano, as soloist. In addition it will appear in a [illegible] program at the University of Chicago April 10, and at other times before the Civic Music association at South Bend and for the benefit of the Lake Bluff orphanage at Lake Forest.

Four Horsemen Gallop Over Movie Screen

By Mae Tinee.

that here and there goes up the works. You'll recognize it.

Of the love angle, or, as the press representatives call it, "the woman's angle," there is little—and that's a refreshing omission in a movie of this kind. There's too much of a jittery ingénue in one of the first reels, but such as you see of a budding romance between Sally Blane and Lew Ayres is wholesome and satisfactory. Mr. Ayres plays a high school punk who enters Notre Dame and becomes a mighty football man.

Such faults as this movie has lie in story and direction. But I think you may forget the former, or, if not, still enjoy "The Spirit of Notre Dame" from the sports angle and because of the incentive behind the production.

Bits aBOUTem.

DID YOU LIKE what you DIDN'T EXPECT? Don't forget we're playing the game again this month. Send in YOUR list of October's Six Best photoplays, having it in this office by Nov. 3. Write your name and address plainly on the sheet that bears the list. . . . VIRGINIA SALE, sister of "Chic," has been signed up for "Peach o' Reno." Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, and Dorothy Lee are featured. . . . DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR.'S next starring vehicle will be "Union Depot." . . . Speaking of the FAIRBANKSES — ROBERT SHERWOOD wrote in part of them in his New York column:

"You will hear numerous, varied rumors concerning the future prospects, personal as well as professional, of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. For one thing, there is the ominous report, recurrent in Hollywood, that the Royal Family of the Screen is about to break up — that after more than twelve years of veritably fabulous domestic bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have decided to go their separate ways, she to her church, he to his.

"You will also hear that they are about to make another picture together, that they are not going to make another picture together, but are now embarked on individual enterprises, that they have definitely retired from the films and will never appear before the public in professional capacities again.

"Needless to say, I am not privy to the inner secrets of the Fairbanks menage; but after two months of reasonably close observation of this conspicuous family in Hollywood I have come to the conclusion that there are no secrets worth mentioning. Mary and Doug have just about as much chance of keeping dark their private lives as has the statue of Civic Virtue in City Hall park, New York.

"For Mary and Doug, for all their outward grace and regal mien, were and are terribly, painfully self-conscious. Their exaggerated eminence frightened and appalled them. They clung to each other exactly as two soldiers will cling to each other when they find themselves in the same exposed shell hole during a heavy bombardment.

"Now the extraordinary circumstances of their lives have changed. The lofty pedestal on which they were precariously perched has vanished. Their reign as monarchs of the movies has ended, and they know it—and if there is one thing markedly noticeable in their manner at the present time it is in an overpowering sense of relief.

"It is inevitable that the relaxation of the strain under which both have lived should cause some form of change in the almost incredible relationship that has existed between them. But I think I can safely assure you that you are entitled to laugh in the face of any one who announces that Mary and Doug are going to be divorced.

"The habits of interdependence that they have formed in the past twelve years are far too firmly established to be shattered. Either would be hopelessly and helplessly lost without the other.

"For all I know, thunder and lightning may separate tomorrow. So may storm and strife, hither and yon, light wines and beer, corned beef and cabbage, give and take, and even Amos 'n' Andy. But I'll bet my all that Mary and Doug will stick together."

American Soprano Opens Rhythmic Season in Gotham

By Joan King.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—If other solo recitalists follow the example of Frances Sebel, New York's musical entertainment of 1931-'32 will depart from the trodden paths to embark upon a course both novel and refreshing. To Frances Sebel, American soprano, and native of Cincinnati, went the honor of acting as official inaugurator of the new rhythmic season here, Oct. 4, at Carnegie hall. Miss Sebel made excellent use of this auspicious opportunity by paying honor to her contemporaries. She chose only one number for her program from the well worn library. This was Mendelssohn's "Infelice, Gia dal mio sguardo," with which she opened the evening.

The audience, which was encouragingly large for so early in a new year, was greatly pleased with Miss Sebel's selections. Her second group included a number of novel Spanish songs, "El Vito," my Nin; "Nana," by De Falla; "El Tumba y le," and "La Moza y los Calvos," by Obradors, and "Los Dos Miedos" and "Las Locas Por Amor," by Turina. The Obradors numbers were sung for the first time here on this occasion and were especially well liked by the audience.

Offered First Performance.

Miss Sebel, who demonstrated her musicianship and feeling for the intent of the composer regardless of his nationality throughout the evening, offered a first performance in her third group. This was Mana-Zucca's air to Athene from "Hypatia," still in manuscript, and described in program notes as "a grand opera in English based on Charles Kingsley's story." Strauss' "Mein Herz ist Stumm and Nichts"; Weingartner's "Liebesfeier," "Nelken," and "Plauderwaesche"; Blech's "Eine Kleine Geige," "Strampelchen," "Tintenheinz und Plaetscherlottchen," and Hughes' "Jack and Jill" and "Hey Diddle, Diddle" concluded the written list.

In accordance with its custom since the organization was founded in 1928, the Schubert Memorial, Inc., held its annual auditions for candidates for its sponsorship here recently. Twenty-five musicians from eleven states were heard in earlier auditions, in September, all of these having met the entrance requirements, and four were selected for the recent hearing. But the judges, who included Richard Aldrich, Howard Brockway, Fritz Reiner, Nikolai Sokoloff, Sigismond Stojowski, and Willem Willeke, finally decided to make no award for this year. The Schubert Memorial has, thus far, presented nine young Americans in New York concerts. These have been Sadah Schuchari and Ruth Posselt, violinists; Muriel Kerr, Isabelle Yalkowski, and Sascha Gorodnitzski, pianists; Phyllis Kraeuter and Olga Zundel, cellists; Flora Collins, soprano, and Graham Harris, conductor.

To Introduce New Works.

When the Viennese conductor, Erich Kleiber, returned recently from Europe to open the season of the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, which he will direct for the first six weeks this year, he announced a number of new works which he intends to introduce during his stay. These include two compositions to be heard here for the first time by American composers, "The Pagan Symphony," by the late Henry Joslyn, and a rhapsody by Wallingford Riegger. He will also introduce new works by two European composers, Krenek's "Variations for Orchestra" and Weinberger's "Passacaglia," for large orchestra and organ, composed especially for its New York première and dedicated to Mr. Kleiber. Mr. Kleiber will also introduce extracts from Telemann's "Tafelmusik"; three symphonic dances of Reznicek; three extracts from the lyric suite of Alban Berg, arranged for string orchestra; Ravel's Minuet Antique, and the Kleine theater suite of Toch.

Remo Bolognini, well known to Chicago's orchestral audiences by reason of his years as assistant concert master of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, has just been awarded the post of assistant to Mishel Piastro, concert master of the New York Philharmonic. Bolognini is the second Chicago musician to attain important position with the New York orchestra, Alfred Wallenstein having taken the chair of head of the 'cello section two years ago.

Since 1929, when Bolognini left the Chicago orchestra to return to Europe to coach in repertoire with Eugene Ysaye, he has been engaged either in studying or recital giving. He was one of Ysaye's two pupils, the other being Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, during the last days before the Maestro's death. Last season he played in recitals with much success in London, Brussels, Berlin, Cologne, The Hague, Amsterdam, and Paris, also visiting this country for two months. He plays the famous "Baron Vitta" Guarnerius, dated 1730.

Carolina Author

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Paul Green, the university instructor who recently flashed into fame as a playwright, has turned his back on Broadway and returned to North Carolina, where his fame is that of a champion cotton picker.

Three days on the rialto were enough for the author of "The House of Connelly." He spent one of them in the theater and the others in a small room of an obscure hotel.

"I've a lot more work to do," he said, "and I'd rather do it on my little farm, where it is quiet and peaceful."

A part of that work will be the completion of "Potter's Field," his fourth play.

"Mr. Paul," as his southern neighbors call him, is an instructor of philosophy in the University of North Carolina. He has the heavy hands of a toiler. He is proud of the fact that the first prize he ever won was as the best cotton picker in a North Carolina county competition.

GREASY HAIR FROM—

LAZY GLANDS

Hair that is full of grease and has an odor is due to a gland disorder. Soap and water won't help. Face the truth about your hair and scalp!

When the scalp oozes oil from every pore, the glands are wasting nourishment and need attention. Stimulate those lazy glands and all that grease and scale will go. And watch what happens to the hair itself, when properly nourished!

Gland stimulation gives hair new life and new color. You won't have any streaks to "touch up" or gray locks to hide. Pigmentation will slowly but surely revive the natural color of any hair not completely and permanently gray.

Start stimulation of those lazy glands tonight! The way to wake them is by massage. Use your fingertips, dipped in Danderine. The Danderine will cut through the pore filth and get at the gummed glands. One treatment will dissolve every particle of dandruff. The first week will give you a healthy, wholesome scalp. But keep the treatments up until the very feel of your hair tells you it is in perfect condition.

You can get Danderine at any drugstore. It is a marvelous medicine for sick scalps.

WATCH YOUR GLANDS!
WHEN lazy glands won't open, the hair is starved and faded. [illegible]
ANY dandruff is a sign the hair glands need stimulating.

Adopted Child Has Easy Life in Hollywood

Fortunate Waifs Given Every Advantage in Film Star's Home.

By Rosalind Shaffer.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special.]—All Hollywood people are not the carefree selfish egotists that one might think. The same instinct for a hearthstone with happy children's faces exists in the film capital that exists anywhere else in the world. In addition to the children born in Hollywood homes, there are many happy little folks who have been adopted by film stars when an eccentric stork refused to favor the family chimney.

This last year several charming children have been lucky enough to enter film homes where they were eagerly awaited. The most recent adoption was that of little Patricia Hamilton by a new papa and mama, Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hamilton. Patricia was seven weeks old when she was brought to her new home. Next year the Hamiltons plan to find a brother for Patricia.

Before that it was Harold Lloyd and his wife, Mildred, who, tired of the dilatory long legged bird, went out and found a lovely little girl, Peggy, as a playmate for Mildred Gloria. It brought good luck, for not many months later Mr. Stork hustled along with a baby brother, and now the Lloyds have three shining little faces about the table.

Brother for Little Gloria.

Gloria Swanson adopted a little brother for her daughter, Gloria; and Joseph at two became part of the Swanson household when Gloria II. was about four. Gloria did not believe that one child would be happy alone, and chose a boy because she loves the romping play the little fellow brings to the home.

Cecil de Mille has a whole family of adopted children in his home in addition to his own child. From the eldest to the youngest, love and care and advantages have been shared equally, and a family circle of youth and gayety and childish problems and serious character building welcome home the famous director when his day's work is done.

De Mille forbids the word "adopted" in reference to his children as he feels them too close to his heart to use any word suggesting that they are not wholly his.

Zazu Pitts has the small son left by Barbara Lamarr, whom she is raising with her own little girl. Barbara had adopted the little fellow herself when she lost her heart to him when she visited an orphanage in Texas.

Lead a Royal Life.

Mary Pickford long ago adopted her niece Gwendolyn, the daughter of her sister, Lottie. Wyn is Mary's constant companion and enjoys the sort of a room at Pickfair that most girls only dream of. At present, she is away at school.

Constance Bennett is the proud foster mother of a little four year old son, whom she brought back from one of her European trips. Peter is the constant playmate of little Adrienne Fox, sister Joan's baby by Joan's former husband.

Then there is Philippe de Lacey, the child-actor. His foster mother, Edith de Lacey, a nurse in France during the war, found the little orphaned fellow and brought him to America with her.

Polly Moran boasts a little son, also adopted. Of Italian ancestry, John Michael is Polly's joy and pride, and all the M-G-M lot rings with the tales Polly tells of his achievements at the military school which he attends.

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuri Aoki, last August adopted a little American-Japanese boy from a poor mother in Los Angeles' "Little Tokio." They will take the tot back to Japan with them and rear him there as a true son of the rising sun with all the advantages in Japanese life.

Conway Tearle Is Back.

Conway Tearle, who left Hollywood in a huff a couple of years ago, claiming he was being boycotted because he refused a salary cut, is back again and will play a prominent role in "The False Madonna." Kay Francis and William Boyd are the leads in the story.

Herbert Somborn [Mr. Gloria Swanson II.] has opened a fourth Brown Derby restaurant in Beverly Hills, and is doing well with it.

Gilbert Roland, formerly leading man for Norma Talmadge, is playing in a local stage production of "Camille," with Jane Cowl. It is his first stage experience, and he says it fussed him more than facing crowds as a bull fighter in Mexico in his boyhood days. He comes from a family noted for several generations for its matadors.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

United States Misrepresented.

Dear Miss Tinée: Despite the fact that I cannot allow myself the time to sit to write such a letter as this, I feel that what I should like to tell you needs telling so much that other things will have to wait.

I have noticed from time to time your kindly reviews of the German movies here, and when one considers that you admit ignorance of the language you are surprisingly tolerant and fair. I cannot believe that what the Germans are sending us is the best of what they can do, for most of the German talkies I have seen and heard were not one step above most of the mediocre ones concocted in Hollywood.

But all this does not get me to the point. A German talkie now current in Chicago, under the title of "Zwei Kravatten" (A Pair of Neckties), is thus far one of the most maudlin, the most stupid, the most imbecilic and the most effusively sentimental mush that has ever been grafted on a gullible public. Anything more emotionally silly has never been seen. It transcends in actual childish impossibility anything the most heroic in Hollywood have ever done. The scenes which the picture intends to be of the United States are, perhaps, the most impossible of all.

Imagine a wealthy home in America, such as the one presented in the picture, with a hundred or so servants in gaudy livery; the hostess and her dressing room with the thousand electric lights, which reminded one of nothing more than a lighting fixture store. Also, notice how the dining room table is set: the girls seated around in a circle with their legs bared up to the hips; the two American women bidding for the hand of the handsome German, one offering him twenty million and the other thirty million dollars.

Then, the absolutely impossible incident of the German girl suddenly inheriting forty million dollars. There is a lot more, equally silly. And the fact that there was a bit of good singing does not excuse the picture.

J. E. LORING.

Editor's note: I take it you didn't care for "Zwei Kravatten."

Ways that Mystify.

Dear Mae Tinée: For years the critics have said it in print and the public has said it with admission tickets, yet the producers go merrily on. So do not think that I expect this private protest to avail, but it may relieve my mind.

Some time ago Mary Roberts Rinehart wrote a story of Wyoming called "Lost Ecstasy," told with the tenderness of one who knows and loves that country. Our own haunt is not far from the ranch where she spends her summers. So, when we saw the story released under the title of "I Take This Woman," we made a special trip down to see the film. We were prepared to spend a happily miserable evening viewing the familiar beloved panorama of the range, the corrals, bunkhouse, and the little lonely cabins on the high plains.

Well, we were miserable, all right, without any qualifications. Doubtless we should have been warned by the change in title and by your faint praise. For it had not one thing in common with the book except the names of the principal characters; the minor ones were wholly omitted from the film. Not one incident remained unchanged.

The worst was first—the explanation of Kay's presence on the ranch. A worse miscast for the part could not be imagined. This jazz baby could never have portrayed the steadfast Kay of the story, and doubtless this hideous change was made to fit her personality. Gary acted as if he were ashamed to play the part of Tom, yet had the original been reproduced he would have been ideal.

The whole thing was so astounding that we searched for an explanation and found one. With economy in keeping with the times, they bought the story, used the names of the characters for this atrocity. Later they expect to produce the plot under the title of "Lost Ecstasy" and thus get double value. But here are two people who will not be there to see it. In fact, we have not attended a movie since.

TENSLEEP.

Editor's Note: For ways that are dark the heathen Chinee has little on the movie producer. (Sometimes.)

Likes "The Last Flight."

Dear Miss Tinée: I saw the picture "The Last Flight" and thought it delightful and touching, and this morning read your review of it, which expresses my reaction so perfectly I wanted to thank you. You have put into words just what I felt about the picture and think Helen Chandler was, as you say, "intuitive" in her rendition of the whimsical, gay but unsmiling Nikki.

I am sending this appreciation because from remarks made by several persons who sat near me in the audience that "it was the worst show they had ever seen," I have no doubt you will receive plenty of knocks from the undiscerning persons who are not the kind that would understand and value the underlying quality you describe so neatly as "vague, eerie, Alice in Wonderland-ish."

Here is one who was moved and charmed beyond measure, and I am sure there are many more who will likewise love this film, but may not tell you so. Sincerely, MARY CULP.

Editor's Note: It was a lovely picture, wasn't it! You were thoughtful to write.

A Kindly Letter.

Dear Miss Tinée: I'm right behind you when it comes to giving Lowell Sherman a big hand. I have my favorite screen actors and actresses who play excellently, but I'd walk across the city, if necessary, to see Lowell Sherman on the screen. I hardly know what it is, the play does not have to boast much of a plot, the dialogue can be as dull reading as so and so's expedition in the Far East, but when the curtain goes up and Sherman takes the center of the stage it's sure to be the best show in town.

He looks like a million dollars in his clothes, he has an A-1 stage presence, and when he speaks, no matter how dull and ordinary the lines, he puts them over with a bang; everything is done smoothly, well turned, polished, an eyebrow lifted here, a shrug of the shoulders, a wink, all done with a finesse and the perfection of a fine actor.

There, thank you for your "verie kind attention." I never miss your column and, though I've never written you before and perhaps won't again, I want to say that the World's Greatest Newspaper would lose some of its greatness if your column was left out.

Again I offer my profound admiration. It goes for all our house.

E. G. M.

Editor's Note: Mr. Sherman thanks you, THE TRIBUNE thanks you, and I thank you.

October Stirs Stage Season to Full Bloom

By Charles Collins.

tory, and some faint glimmering of intelligence in regard to the period in which its story has been placed is required of the playgoer.

The Italian Renaissance is the scene for "The Venetian." It corresponds to the Elizabethan period in England; and it implies, so far as the stage is concerned, a large amount of base conduct, frequent back-stabbings and wine poisonings, and a bustling activity in artistic, intellectual and political affairs. In other words, it is an excellent background for a romantic play—a time of hot passions and gay pageantry in which every one burned the candle at both ends and had a high old time.

This play, handsomely staged by Maurice Browne, is a satisfactory treatment of its material from a modern point of view. It avoids the sawdust theatricalism which curses costume drama. Its characters are thoroughly alive, and they speak a forthright, lucid English which is as frank, at times, as the talk of comedians in a lively Broadway revue. If romance with historical trimmings is ever to make a fresh start on the American stage, it will be with plays like "The Venetian."

Romantic Acting.

But if you remain cold to the fascinations of the flamboyant years when the city of Florence was preparing itself as an objective point for future generations of American tourists, you will certainly respond to the acting of Margaret Rawlings as the alluring Bianca, and Wilfrid Walter as her princely paramour. Here are players of high skill and personalities of winning address. Miss Rawlings I have tagged as a little, unsentimentalized Jane Cowl. Mr. Walter has the gifts for leadership in robust romantic rôles.

When the accidental closing of a door caused a change in the destiny of "The Venetian's" heroine, I found myself skeptical about the existence of spring locks at the time of the Italian Renaissance. The author of this play may be an authority on antique door-locks, but I shall demand confirmation from the Chicago Museum of History before I believe in this episode.

Showboat Ahoy!

This column's outcry for showboats last summer seems to have started something. Ralph T. Kettering, manager of the Adelphi theater, says that he is rebuilding an ancient hulk, discovered in the shipyards of Sheboygan, and hopes to have a floating theater of 1,500 in the Chicago river before winter sets in.

Commodore Billy Bryant, now showboating in Cincinnati, is preparing to bring his company here to show us how his deck-end troupe can play Shakespeare. Instigated by George E. Wintz, known as "the king of the one-night stands," he hopes to secure a Chicago theater and turn his crew loose in it.

The showboat atmosphere, aside from the rough-and-ready acting, will be supplied by decorations in the lobby. There are at least three theaters available for this adventure—the Civic, the Princess, and the Cort. Rialto gossips are naming the Civic as the place where Commodore Bryant will hoist his ensign—possibly because that playhouse is on the river front.

New Plays for Gotham Stage; Five Openings

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—Broadway will see five premieres next week, including three dramas and two musical shows. Here are the announcements:

"Church Mouse"—Opens tomorrow night at the Playhouse. A comedy from the Hungarian which has been extensively produced abroad. William A. Brady is bringing forth the adaptation by the Hattons of the Paul Frank-Laszlo Fodor original. In the leading rôles will be Ruth Gordon and Bert Lytle.

"Lean Harvest"—Opens Tuesday night at the Forrest. A play by Ronald Jeans which ran during the summer in London. Leslie Banks and Nigel Bruce will be in the cast along with Vera Allen, Leonard Mudie, Patricia Calvert, Charles Esdale, and Molly Pearson.

"Everybody's Welcome"—Opens Tuesday night at the Shubert. The season's first musical comedy from the Shubert workshops. Harold Atteridge has prepared the libretto, Sam Fain the music, and Irving Kahal the lyrics. The players will include Frances Williams, Oscar Shaw, Harriette Lake, and Ann Pennington.

"Pillars of Society"—Opens Wednesday night at the 48th Street. The Ibsen play is the second production of Laurence Langner's repertory group. Among the actors will be Moffat Johnston, Armina Marshall, Dorothy Gish, Rollo Peters, Romney Brent, Fania Marinoff, Edgar Stehli, Jessie Busley, and Knowles Entrikin.

"The Cat and the Fiddle"—Opens Thursday night at the Globe. A romantic musical show by Jerome Kern and Otto Harbach. The large company will include Georges Metaxa, Bettina Hall, Eddie Foy Jr., Lawrence Grossmith, Dorothy Debenham, George F. Meader, Doris Carson, Odette Myrtil, and Jose Ruben.

Unknown Warrior

MAURICE BROWNE will appear in his London success, "The Unknown Warrior," at the Selwyn theater in four matinée performances, starting Sunday, Nov. 8 and closing the afternoon of Armistice day. Rosalinde Fuller is coming from London to play her original part. The play is from the pen of M. Paul Raynal.

After this engagement Mr. Browne will make an eight weeks' tour in "The Unknown Warrior" under the management of James B. Pond.

STAR IN "PRIVATE LIVES"

EDITH TALIAFERRO.

SHE has been leading ingenue and star of dozens of plays, of which "Polly of the Circus" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" are the most easily remembered. Now, as a full blown, fascinating woman of the world, she co-stars with Donald Brian in Noel Coward's comedy, "Private Lives," at the Erlanger theater.

Eugene O'Neill Ends Ten Year Solitude Hunt

Finds Content and Rest from City's Turmoil in Skyscraper.

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Eugene O'Neill has ended a ten year search for solitude. This isolation he has found in a luxurious apartment high above Park avenue's noisy taxicabs and hurrying throngs.

It is an ironic paradox that O'Neill should discover this escape from the crowds where he could work in peace right in the heart of the city.

He experimented with a half dozen other environments before he was won over as a hermit in the metropolis.

Lived in Lighthouse.

His first workshop was in a lonely lighthouse on the seacoast at Provincetown, Mass. Then he took a cottage amid the quiet of Bermuda, and from there slipped away to Shanghai, where he hoped to remain incognito.

Finally, he moved into an out-of-the-way chateau in Tours, France and stayed there for two years. He became weary of the place, and returned last summer with the announced intention of living on a plantation in Virginia.

He came to New York first, and fell in love once again with his old home town. He walked along the waterfront streets where, as a youth, he had mingled with sailors in the old-time saloons. He visited the old haunts he had frequented with his father, when the latter was a star in "Monte Cristo."

* *

Found City Best.

For ten years, O'Neill, weary of his wanderings, has been seeking a haven where he could settle down and work. And, like the prodigal son, he has returned home to find what he sought here in the city.

"I'm glad I spent those years abroad because it gave me a new perspective on my country and its people," he explained. "I think any writer must live abroad to get a true objective view of his native scene."

New Lady Teazle

ETHEL BARRYMORE will come to the Grand Opera House Oct. 19 in her revival of "The School for Scandal," in which she has just completed a tour of the Pacific coast and the northwest. She first acted the rôle of Lady Teazle in 1924 to the Sir Peter of her late uncle, John Drew, in a week's revival of Sheridan's comedy by the Players' club of New York.

This will be the first Chicago performances of the classic since Mrs. Insull's revival in June of 1925 in the Illinois theater.

Miss Barrymore is the third member of her family in direct descent to act Lady Teazle. Her grandmother, Mrs. John Drew, was a famed Lady Teazle, while it was the rôle in which her mother, Georgia Drew Barrymore, made her first appearance as the leading woman of Mrs. Drew's company in Philadelphia. Maurice Barrymore, Miss Barrymore's father, played not fewer than six rôles in "The School for Scandal" in his younger days on the English stage, while John Drew was a matinée idol forty years ago vis-à-vis with Ada Rehan and got his vogue largely on his performance as Charles Surface.

Miss Barrymore's company includes Walter Gilbert as Charles, McKay Morris as Joseph, C. H. Croker-King as Sir Peter, Henry Plimmer as Sir Oliver, A. G. Andrews as Moses, and Beatrice Terry as Mrs. Candour.

The engagement will be for two weeks, after which Miss Barrymore will take the play into New York.

Miss Cornell Wants to Act Roman Matron

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Katharine Cornell, who has become one of Broadway's foremost acting managers in her first year as a producer, already is planning her new play for next season. It is to be "The Rape of Lucrece," a French dramatization based upon Shakespeare's poem.

Miss Cornell sailed this week for a month's vacation in Bermuda. She will return Nov. 16 to reopen in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." This story of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's romance has been one of New York's leading hits since it opened last February, and its popularity forecasts that it will remain on Broadway all winter.

Miss Cornell's rôle requires her to be upon the stage every moment from the time the first curtain rises until a few seconds before the end. She found the task exhausting and decided upon a six weeks' rest.

Although there was no extraordinary success among the new plays of the past week, several of them offer diverting evenings. "Payment Deferred" is an English murder melodrama of novel aspects. In addition to its unusual plot it is distinguished by the performance of Charles Laughton from London.

"The Good Companions," another English importation, is a gigantic picturesque show of character parts. It is a dramatization of J. B. Priestley's novel. Elmer Rice, who revealed a panorama of New York life in his "Street Scene," does the same for Paris in "Left Bank." In this drama he chides the American expatriates who prefer a French Bohemia to the comforts of their native land.

"Cherries Are Ripe," which has been headed for Broadway for more than a year, again has been sidetracked. This is the Anita Loos and John Emerson comedy which was given on tour all last year by Rod La Rocque and Vilma Banky.

Several weeks ago these two were replaced by Basil Sydney and Mary Ellis, but a manager, Arch Selwyn, still was not satisfied with his cast. So the comedy has been temporarily withdrawn and will be brought forth later with two other stars.

Elmer Rice has already written a new drama called "Counsellor-at-Law," and it will have Paul Muni in the lead. . . . Jed Harris opens his season with "Wonder Boy," another satire on movie producers. Hazel Dawn is to be the star. . . . Nikita Balieff of "Chauve Souris" is back to stage a new show on Broadway.

VIOLA ROACHE of the Chicago Civic Shakespeare society's company, began her career with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in London. Following several tours with Sir Charles Wyndham, she accepted an engagement in Johannesburg, South Africa, where she played in "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," "As You like It," "Twelfth Night," and "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

As leading woman at the Copley theater in Boston she was seen in the plays of Shaw, Galsworthy, Milne, Barrie, and Shakespeare. A season with Milton Rosner in England followed, after which she returned to America for an engagement in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," with Ina Claire, and "The Woman Disputed," with Lowell Sherman and Ann Harding.

She has also appeared in many films for the M. G. M. and Paramount firms.

Noel Coward's Plays Popular; B'way Gossip

"Improper Duchess," with Irene Bordoni as Star, to Be Withdrawn.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—[Special.]—The prevalence of Noel Coward's works on the American stage—he wrote "Private Lives," you may remember, and some of the numbers in "The Third Little Show"—arouses interest in a project to revive his comedy called "Hay Fever." Constance Collier will have the rôle that Laura Hopes Crews acted at Maxine Elliott's theater several years ago. The most recent staging of "Hay Fever" was by the Goodman repertory theater of Chicago last winter, with Margaret Wycherly as the featured player.

Maurice Browne's production of "The Improper Duchess," by Bernard Fagan, will have only a brief life on the American stage, although it was a sizable hit in London. It will be offered next week in Hartford and Providence, but will go no farther. It was intended for the Shubert circuit of subscription theaters, including Chicago. Irene Bordoni has the leading rôle.

Sidney Howard's new play, called "Yellow Jacket," deals with the efforts to eradicate yellow fever from the Caribbean ports which followed the Spanish-American war. It derives, more or less, from a chapter of Paul De Kruif's interesting book called "Microbe Hunters." Arthur Hopkins has a lien on "Yellow Jacket."

"A Modern Virgin" closes its tour in Detroit tonight. Roger Pryor and Margaret Sullavan are probable members of the cast of "Blessed Event," a comedy that the Shuberts now have on their shelves.

Florence Nightingale, whose name will always be associated with women's relief work for armies in the field—she started in the Crimean war—will be the heroine of a play called "The Lady with a Lamp." Leslie Banks, the English actor now in "Lean Harvest," will stage the play for Managers McGowan and Reed, and Edith Evans will come from London to play the famous nurse. Rehearsals will begin Oct. 21. Reginald Berkeley is the author.

Queenie Smith's new operetta will be called "The Little Racketeer." It comes from the German stage, where it bore the same title—a fact which suggests that Berlin has gone in for rackets. Paul Ash and his band will figure in the entertainment.

An English actress rejoicing in the name of Lady George Cholmondeley will soon begin a Canadian tour in a series of plays and dance programs. Galsworthy's "The Silver Box" is on her list. The dance programs will include something called "a play by Rabelais."

Helen Hayes has returned to New York from Hollywood to begin rehearsals for Molnar's "The Good Fairy," which Gilbert Miller will stage. The first performance will be given in Washington Nov. 9, and a week in Pittsburgh will follow.

Irving Berlin and Moss Hart are writing a musical show which will employ a revolving stage and other elaborate mechanical devices. If nothing happens it will appear in New York before the Christmas holidays. The boys haven't agreed upon a title as yet. . . . Frank Craven has written a new play, variously described as a melodrama and a dramatic comedy. John Golden will produce it.

English Actor Wins Cheers on Gotham Stage

Charles Laughton, in "Payment Deferred," Plays Character Role.

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The English actor who played Tony Perelli, gangster, in the London production of "On the Spot" has been brought to America by Gilbert Miller in a murder play called "Payment Deferred," which was done at the Lyceum last week.

His name is Charles Laughton, and he has had the somewhat unique experience at home of coming late to the theater and topping the list of character actors in five or six seasons. He was 27 when he made his first stage appearance in 1926, after winning a gold medal at a dramatic school. Since then he has played many parts, and his popularity with the crowd has increased with each of them.

In "Payment Deferred" he is given opportunity of running the gamut of the emotions about which less is heard these days than formerly. His character is that of William Marble, a flabby, beady eyed bank clerk, down on his luck and resentful. Living a lower middle class life in a lower middle class neighborhood, he is much in need of funds.

One evening, when he is fearing the collectors, there comes a young man to call on him. He is a nephew from Australia, has just arrived in London. He has no other relatives on that side of the world and, the estate of his parents having been recently settled, he is well supplied with money. He is also a cagey young man and refuses to loan uncle any of his money. So uncle poisons him and buries his body in the garden.

Haunted by Conscience.

Thereafter, for three tortured acts, William Marble, murderer, is haunted by his conscience as relentlessly as was Matthias in "The Bells." He fears the slamming of doors, the sound of bells, the chatter of people passing in the street, the shouts of children. If any one is seen even so much as raking the garden, he is threatened with hysteria.

He profits from his crime to the extent of some thirty thousand pounds and is able to set his wondering wife and daughter up in style. But disaster follows every move he makes.

He buys a new set of garish furniture, and riding into the house with it comes a little French shopkeeper from just around the corner who proceeds to seduce and blackmail him out of thousands.

He sends his daughter to a fine school in France, where she is promptly lifted out of her natural class and becomes so disgusted with her old home and her old father that when she comes back she takes to being a hostess in a night club.

He buys his wife a new outfit of clothes and a holiday at Bournemouth [so he may have his way with the French girl], but she comes back to him distressed in mind and suspicious. Finally, she has his secrets from him and the shock is so great that she herself drinks poison and is dead on the second floor when the doctor comes—dead of poison she had not the strength to come downstairs to get for herself, the doctor says, which makes it likely at the play's end that William Marble will swing for a murder he did not commit, even though the body buried in the garden is never discovered.

Heavy and Cheerless.

It is a heavy and cheerless play, but fascinating in the way mysteries are. Mr. Laughton, of course, acts Marble to the hilt, the picture of misery incarnate, a sensitive register for all the emotions haunted men are prey to.

For my own part, this type of acting leaves me cold. Character actors are bound to be stage conscious. Laughton is noticeably so, being deliberate in reaching for effects and toying with them. Too frequently it is possible to catch him working at his trade, and that is devastating to illusion and story. But that he is technical master of that trade there is no doubt. He has many believable and impressive moments in repose.

An actress in his company, Cicely Oates by name, outplayed her star in the quiet realities she brought to the rôle of the suspicious wife. She, too, started with fright, blanched with fear, trembled with apprehension, stood stark and staring at the realization of horrible truths, wept with sympathy, and comforted with understanding—and never once were you conscious of a single actress' trick.

"Payment Deferred" is the type of melodrama that makes theater going an exciting business for the young and for those of their elders who are open minded and susceptible. These have been standing to cheer Mr. Laughton at the close of each performance.

Merits High Praise.

I think there is more real drama, more depth of feeling, more sound artistry in the production of Paul Green's "The House of Connelly" by a Theater Guild subsidiary than in any other play of the new season, to date. This play, incidentally, has been in the Guild's possession for two seasons. Whether the managers lacked courage to do it, or were doubtful of its appeal, I do not know. In any event, last summer they turned it over to a group of their younger members with the promise that they could put it in rehearsal if they liked and see what would come of it.

The young people took the script and several others and went away into a sort of artists' camp in Connecticut. There they turned a barn into a theater and rehearsed their plays all summer. When they had "The House of Connelly" ready they asked Mr. Green and the Guild executives to see them play it. The result was so greatly in their favor that the Guild financed a production for the play.

Mr. Green's drama is the story of a disintegrating family, proud in its memory of happier days in the old south. The house of Connelly is a decaying house. Its men, down to the current generation represented by young Will Connelly, are lustful, lazy, washed out, through. Its women are led by a proud mother standing [with the aid of a crutch] firmly by her traditions and her memories, still leaning on the glory of old General Connelly, who fought the war and begat illegitimate offspring, and include a pair of spinster sisters crushed and anemic, but also loyal.

* *

Fates Move In.

A family of poor whites, named Fate, move in as tenant farmers and the daughter, Patsy, hungry for land, plans to seduce Will for his, and Will, hungry for love, takes it from Patsy.

The result is cataclysmic in the Connelly family. Will's uncle Robert, lecherous and modestly alcoholic, shoots himself through his poor weak old head to preserve his pride, Mother Connelly dies of a stroke, and the sisters desert and flee to Atlanta.

But Will holds true, marries Patsy, and she, come to honor and believe in their true love, takes her place as mistress of the house of Connelly with her common blood surging exultantly through her veins. The Guild juniors are not all suited as a type to the rôles the aristocratic south suggests, but they are fine players. Franchot Tone gives a magnificent performance as Will, and Margaret Baker plays well as Patsy. Mary Morris is distinguished and fine as the mother.

"Good Companions" Staged.

Most of the characters, but little of the spirit of high adventure that endeared the story of "The Good Companions" to its public, have come to the stage in a dramatization of the J. B. Priestley novel, which is a common enough report with dramatized novels. Nothing the theater folk can do can preserve the bloom the imagination puts on book characters.

There is good entertainment in "The Good Companions" for perhaps half its length. The gathering of the various parties to the adventure is promising.

Jess Oakroyd, the robust Yorkshireman, quarrels with the nagging missus, takes his kit of tools and his bag and starts off down the road. The gallant spinster, Elizabeth Trant, bowls along the motor ways and breaks down twixt Tumbleby and Rawsley, where Oakroyd manages to set her engine going again.

The disgusted Inigo Jollifant tosses up his job as a submaster in the Taverns' school, bundles his wisps of songs into his bag, collects his fifty-two pounds sterling and is off with Susie Dean and Morton Mitcham, show folk looking for a job.

They all meet at Rawsley, and there it is they come upon the concert party that was the dinky-dos, stranded and unhappy. There the Good Companions company is organized, with the aid of Miss Trant's money, and the great adventure is started.

Six Months Later.

They're still going six months later, which is the second division of the play. Much the same as to personnel. Mr. Jollifant is in love with Susie Dean, which provides a thread of romance, but Susie is fearfully afraid a husband would interfere with her career and will have none of him.

It is at Gatford that the crash comes. Mr. Wimpers, the cinema man, hires his thugs to break up the show and they do it successfully, tossing vegetables at the warbling pierrots and finally setting fire to the theater.

As a play I think the weakness of "The Good Companions" is its failure to concentrate interest on the adventures of the honest Oakroyd and Miss Trant. In a book story an author can be as diffuse and rambling as he pleases, so long as he is interesting. But in a play he has no time to ramble, and the thinner he spreads his story the less interesting it is.

An English cast has been imported or picked up from the local English colony for the playing of "The Good Companions." Valerie Taylor, who was the lovely Gainsborough lady in "Berkeley Square," is the Miss Trant, and her young husband, Hugh Sinclair, is playing Jollifant. They are the strength of the company. George Carney is the Oakroyd and Vera Lennox a fairly rough and ready Susie Dean. Edward Knoblock helped Priestley with the dramatization.

Week's Plays Not So Good.

The rest of our drama this last week, though there was plenty of it, is not much worth talking about. A Vincent Lawrence play, "Washington Nights," was vicious in its nastiness and, praise be, lasted but a few days.

"Nikki," a musical comedy made from the John Monk Saunders stories, has found some friends, but hardly enough to keep it with us long. The musical hits of the town are the Aborn revivals of the older light operas. "The Chocolate Soldier" has just finished two big weeks, and "The Geisha" is to follow, with good old Jimmy Powers in his old rôle of Mun Hi, keeper of the teahouse.

IN MUSICAL COMEDY

FLORIA WEST.

SHE is one of the principal entertainers in "Girl Crazy," the musical comedy now at the Garrick theater. Miss West is the brisk soubrette who leads a song now and then while Benny Rubin and Blossom Seeley are changing costumes.

The Armchair Playgoer

By Fanny Butcher.

IN NEW YORK.

The only openings in New York which armchair playgoers could attend last week were the revivals of two plays which have been revived often before, Dion Boucicault's "Streets of New York" and August Strindberg's "The Father." They will lure readers into the literature of their time, perhaps, and into the biographies of their authors.

AUGUST STRINDBERG.

Dion Boucicault was one of the most spectacular actor-playwrights of his day. His success began before he was 20 in a play called "London Assurance," which was produced in 1841. He died in New York in 1890, where he had made his home since 1875 and where as much of his reputation had been made as in London.

He was born in Dublin, the son of a French refugee and an Irish mother, and he was said to be the greatest stage Irishman of his day. Perhaps his most famous play was not an original play at all, but an adaptation of a novel by Gerald Griffin, called "The Collegians." The play was given the title "The Colleen Bawn." It was played in almost every city in the United Kingdom and the United States, and it made its author a handsome fortune.

August Strindberg, author of "The Father," was quite another sort of person. Born a generation later than Boucicault and in poverty, he lived his life long in suffering—physical privation as a child, mental turmoil as a youth, and hysterical spiritual disintegration as a man. He made two marriages, both of which were disastrous and both of which led him almost to insanity. There are many who think that he actually was insane.

"The Father" was written in 1887 during the stress of his first marital fiasco and shows the depressing effect of his persecution mania. It concerns the deliberate deluding by a wife of her husband into the belief that he is not the father of his much loved daughter. Insanity, always so near to the author himself, seizes the father and he is finally tricked into a strait-jacket by his old nurse. Only death solves his problem.

When the play appeared it naturally created a furor. It was a landmark of importance in the history of European realism. "Lady Julia" followed it in 1888, and other similar plays, most of which centered in the author's own marital tragedy. In those years [the years when Boucicault was living his last] Strindberg was writing his greatest novels, "The People of Hemso," which was published the same year as "The Father," and "In the Outer Skerries," which appeared in 1890, the year of Boucicault's death.

Strindberg's marriage was dissolved in 1891. His misery was accentuated by financial difficulties and insanity touched him more nearly than ever. He lived twenty-one years after that, however, piling up volumes. He is considered Sweden's greatest modern writer according to critics, and his work has exerted a deep and lasting influence on the European novel and drama.

In "Little Show"

WALTER O'KEEFE, who appears as master of ceremonies in the "Third Little Show" at the Great Northern, was a newspaper, advertising, and vaudeville writer up to 1928, when he authored his first show, "Just a Minute." The next spring, in Hollywood, he wrote his first song hit, "Little by Little," with Bobby Dolan.

Three seasons as master of ceremonies at the Club Gallant, New York, prepared him for the "Third Little Show." Notre Dame is his alma mater.

Critics Often Too Severe with Cinema Epics

By Tom Pettey.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—The old days of poking fun at the movies have gone, but a lot of people still like to pick flaws in the celluloid epics. Among the favorite subjects for highbrow magazines and Sunday supplements alike are:

"What is wrong with the talking pictures?"

"Censorship, or the purification of the films."

"Wastefulness in making pictures."

"The dearth of good, original material."

"The lack of art among the film artists."

One could go on and on, filling the page with these topics and still not scratch the surface of what has been written. For the most part the deluge of words has been filled with criticism. Few write in defense of the movies; it just is not profitable. The talkies need no defense, according to their makers, and whatever is written about them is just so much publicity for the old publicity mill. Nevertheless, this column is written in defense of the movies.

No Basic Mistake.

To begin with, there is nothing wrong with the movies. That is, nothing wrong in the sense of a fundamental, basic mistake. On the contrary, the talkies have made magnificent strides this season. The producers have produced the best of pictures, the players have grown in fame and ability, the industry has managed to hold up its head in the midst of depression. When the talkie houses show such pictures as "Street Scene," "Alexander Hamilton," and "Five Star Final" it is foolish to speak ill of the industry.

When such actors as George Arliss, the Barrymore brothers, and others of great skill find their greatest roles in the movies, why should we search for minor flaws?

A second popular topic is censorship. From time to time some highly misinformed writer predicts the downfall of the entire motion picture structure through this evil of evils. Certainly censorship becomes ridiculous at times, but it is necessary and has contributed a great deal to the industry. Without some form of censorship the movies would have hit a burlesque house level and remained there until doomsday.

I have seen just about as many raw scenes in the movies as I ever saw on the stage. It is to the credit of the censor that the films are washing up while the stage is reeking more strongly than ever. No one in a normal frame of mind would wish to see the talkies filled with dirt. For every goofy job of censoring such as putting dresses on Micky Mouse, clothing statues, or making all mothers married women, there have been constructive jobs such as the elimination of the pictures that glorify gangsters, the cutting of shots featuring scenes that might upset the digestive functions and the ban on profanity, except where it is essential to the plot of the picture.

Wastefulness Exaggerated.

Wastefulness in making pictures has been too highly exploited. It is true that there has been and possibly still is a lot of waste about the studios. For that matter, there is a lot of waste about newspaper offices, and banks have been known to fail because of "overhead." One of last season's film hits, "Hell's Angels," has demonstrated that gigantic expenditures running into the millions of dollars is not always money thrown away. If I am informed correctly, the above mentioned picture has paid a tidy profit to young Mr. Hughes, the "spendthrift."

Those producers who hire "talent" at fancy salaries and then make no use of the "talent" are not always dumb-bells. They have learned from experience that it is cheaper to keep a herd of "brains" on the scenario pay roll and pick off the real "ideas," if any, than it is to try to make pictures out of every "masterpiece" that is turned in. The movie folks are not the only ones who go in for "talent" in a big way.

I recall several stories in which high powered "talent" entered into competition with the working press. The publishers spent a lot of money, but they put the staff man's story in the lead. The "talent" provided the filler stuff. In one case I remember a one dollar a word man who arrived on the scene too befuddled to get into action. The local correspondent wired his agency to "sober up another genius." I call that extravagance.

Plenty of Good Material.

As for the dearth of good, original material, why look for original material when the libraries are full of unpictured masterpieces? The classics still offer an almost untouched mine of film material. In case present day literary compositions still are to be desired, the market is good. I saw Louis Bromfield's "Twenty-Four Hours" after the novel had been made into a play. It was as good as one could hope for. And as for original products, just give Eddie Cantor or any one of the four Marx brothers a cameraman and a stage and they will produce original matter in quantity and frequently quality.

The lack of art among the artists needs little explanation. There is no lack. The movie actors and actresses are giving as finished performances as the stage stars.

Week's Films Pepless.

Now, to tell you about a current picture. Ann Harding is on Broadway again. Her picture is called "Devotion" and deals in a charming manner with romance in an English barrister's home. Miss Harding plays the part of a girl grown tired of the humdrum life in her household. She goes out into the world disguised as a middle aged governess and gets employment in the lawyer's home.

Ann Harding in wig and spectacles loses an indefinable something. I like her better as Ann Harding. Nevertheless, the picture will get you.

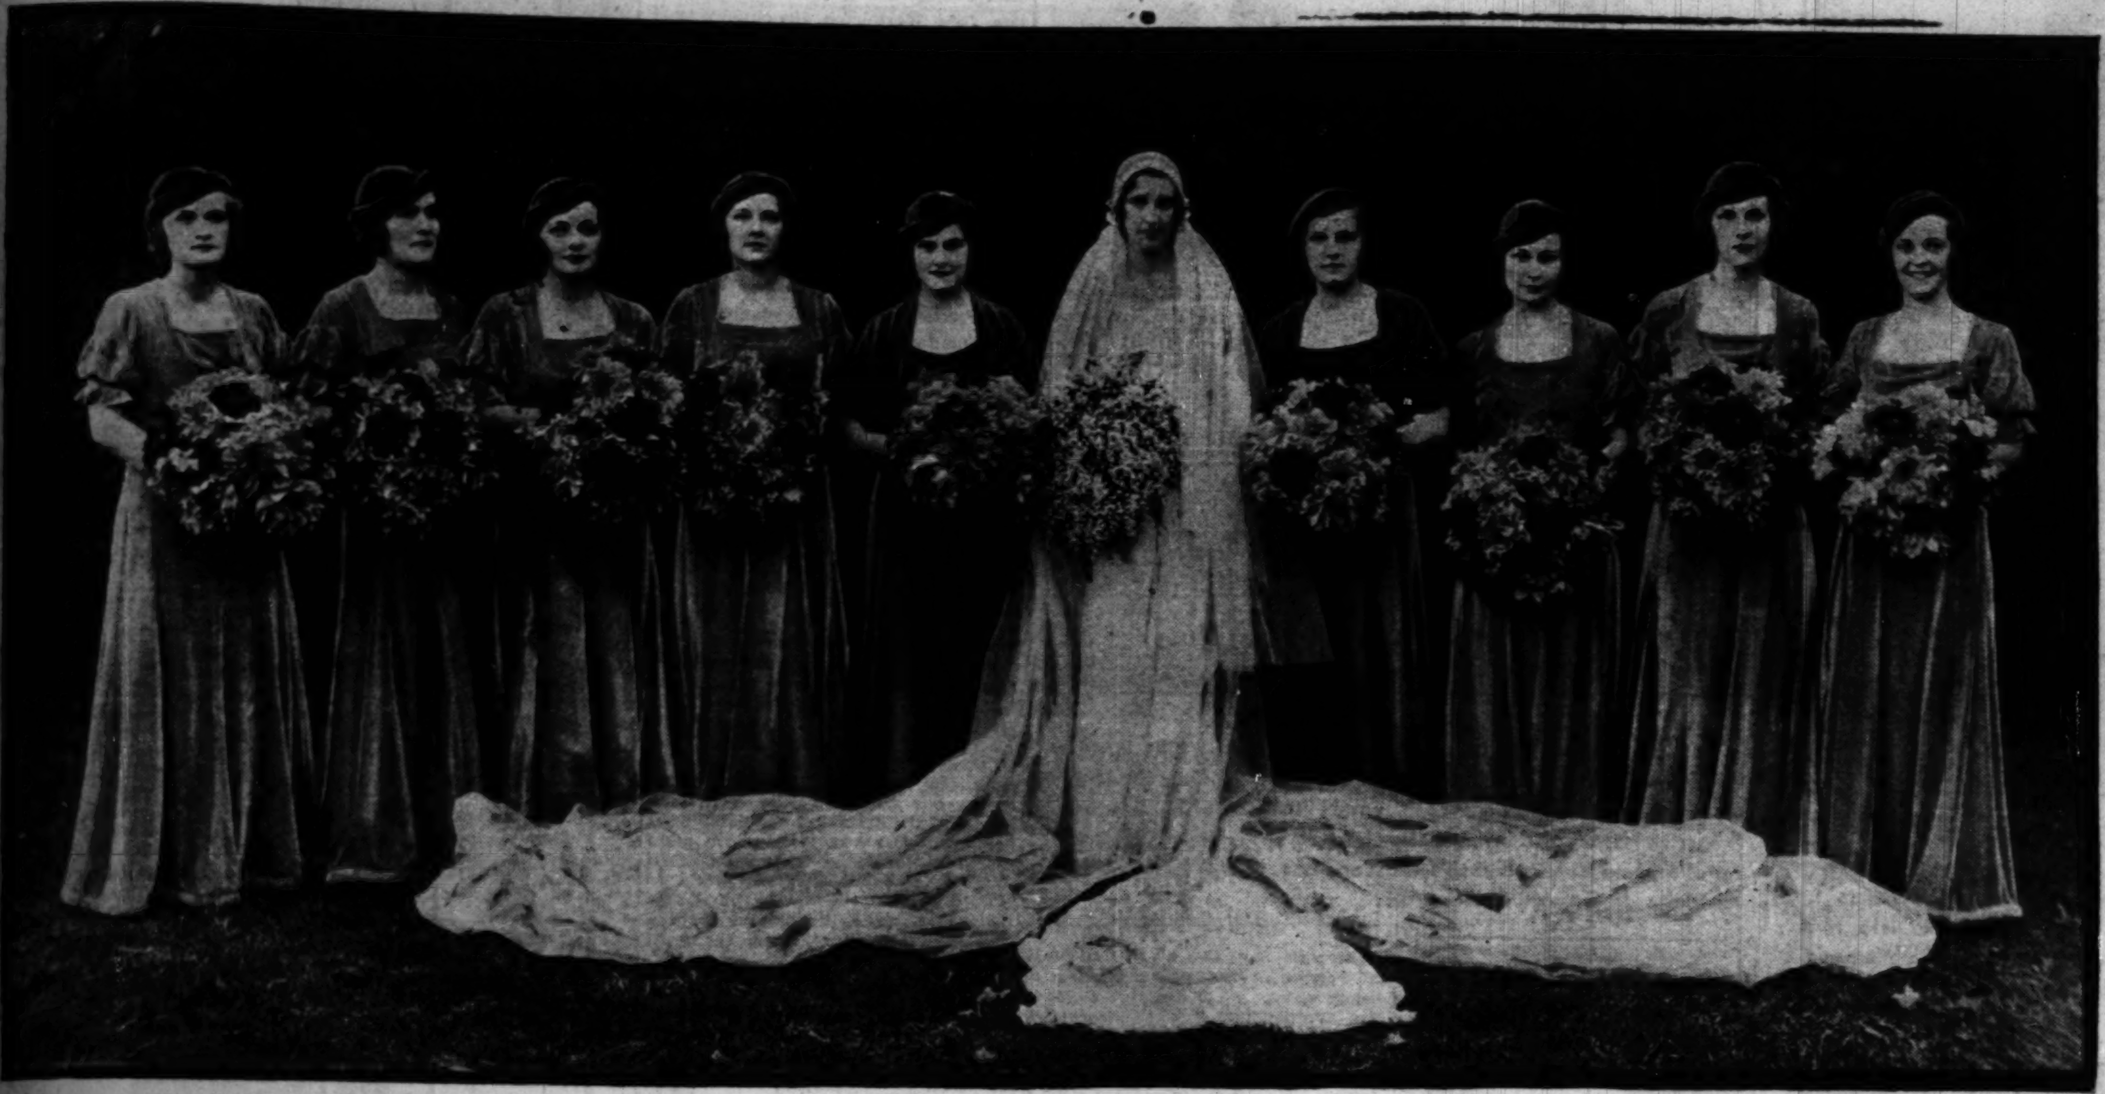
caught by the camera in the social limelight



One of the largest of the autumn weddings was that of Miss Frances Wood, daughter of Gen. and Mrs. Robert E. Wood, and Calvin Fentress Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Fentress of Hubbard Woods, which took place in Highland Park on Oct. 3. The bride and her attendants, as pictured left to right, were Miss Janet Kirk, Miss Rosemary Baur, Miss Christabel Wheeler, Mrs. Joseph B. Terbell Jr., Mrs. Edwin E. Tullis, Mrs. Fentress, Mrs. James R. Addington, Miss Ruth Card, Miss Virginia Thurman of Baltimore, and Miss Louise Day Smith of Memphis. The bridal gown was of white chiffon, overlaid with a white velvet leaf design, and the attendants were in costumes of brown and russet tones and carried round bouquets of dahlias.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Phelps Dunham on their way to Trinity Episcopal church in Highland Park to attend the wedding of Miss Frances Wood and Calvin Fentress Jr. were spied by the cameraman.

Russian Grand Duke to Visit New York Soon

His Wife, the Former Audrey Emery, and Son, Will Accompany Him.

By Nancy Randolph.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—It is a feather in the cap of New York when members of the ancient régime who are well-off come to visit us. For many a decade now, only the penniless scion of nobility has made his or her way to these metropolitan shores in quest of the golden pavements.

Seemingly that era is gone. New York's social season has a great importance for the members of Parisian, London and continental society. The haut noblesse is quite as concerned about the occasional visit to Gotham as to London or the Faubourgs of Paris.

When the Grand Duchess Marie returned, recently, she made known the fact that she was completely enamored of social existence here and that, furthermore, she was becoming so Americanized that she contemplated becoming a citizen. Evidently, Marie's description of the delights of New York had an effect on her brother, the Grand Duke Dmitri, first cousin of the late czar, grandson of the late czar Alexander III., and head of the widely dispersed Russian imperial family, and also, lest one forget, husband of the onetime Audrey Emery, daughter of the Hon. Mrs. Alfred Anson of our New York.

Looking Into the Future.

Though the Romanoff crown is but history now, the ancient customs and traditions persevere. Because of her lack of royal birth, the former Audrey Emery is not the Grand Duchess Audrey, but is known as Princess Ilyinsky. Abroad, Princess Audrey receives all the homage due a grand duchess of all the Russias, but since Dmitri is the logical pretender to the throne of Peter the Great, Gotham wonders if Audrey would ever become empress of Russia in the event of the return of the Romanoffs.

The heiress to the Emery millions, however, has not been bothering much about her royal prerogatives. Since her marriage at Biarritz some four years ago she and Dmitri have lived abroad. Their son, Prince Paul Dmitri Romanoff Ilyinsky, is a lad of 3 now and will be the object of much interest on his arrival on the 22d.

The Russian colony is greatly excited at the coming of the grand duke, but the Emery connections are no less elated. The princess' sister is Mrs. Benjamin Moore, the former Alexandra Emery, and her brother is John P. Emery, who married Irene Gibson, daughter of the Charles Dana Gibsons. Society is looking forward to seeing the princess and her royal husband at the opening of the "Met."

Mrs. Edward Hagey (Miss Elinor Whiting before her marriage this summer) and Miss Virginia Waller are members of the Junior league committee in charge of a second-hand sale to be held at 313 North Michigan avenue on Thursday. Mrs. Hagey is in charge of the selling; Miss Waller, of the wrapping.

The problems incident to engineering a second-hand sale, proceeds of which will augment the Junior league's charity budget, were under discussion by (left to right) Miss Jane Martin, Miss Barbara Senn, who is co-chairman for the sale with her sister, Miss Dorothy Senn, and Miss Katherine and Miss Jeanne Street at a recent tea-meeting.

Herman Gades Will Return to Chicago from Their French Villa

By May Birkhead.

PARIS.—[Special.]—A well known Chicago household here will soon transfer its "lares and penates" to the United States. On Nov. 4 Mr. and Mrs. Herman Gade and their daughter, Alice, will sail on the Ile de France with the intention of passing the winter in Chicago. For the last two years they have spent the summer at their charming château at Mesnil St. Denis, an historic section about thirty miles from Paris, beyond Versailles. Nearby is the celebrated Château de Dampierre which is filled with remarkable treasures, and gardens laid out by André le Notre, the landscape architect of Versailles. Mesnil St. Denis is also near Rambouillet, where Paul Doumer, president of the French republic, has his summer home and shooting estate.

The Gades are prominent figures in the American colony here and give luncheon parties and a reception every Sunday. Their delightful hospitality and delicious mint juleps serve as a lodestone for many of their compatriots. Their skill in making the celebrated Kentucky concoction has won for them a reputation, but they were recently shocked when looking over some barrels which they had had since pre-Volstead days to find that several were not filled with Bourbon, but with rye.

By the way, the present chatelain of the Château Dampierres is the Duc de Luynes, a nephew of the late Duc de Chaulnes, who married Theodora Shonts of Chicago about 20 years ago. She has just returned from America with her son and she recently visited Dampierre where the Duc de Chaulnes is buried.

When Chicago Was Young

By Herma Clark.

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend, Julia Boyd, of New York.

Chicago, July 28, 1878.

DEAR JULIA:

The summer is half over, yet it seems to have gone slowly for me. We are thinking it won't be too long now before our wanderers return. You will have a warm welcome in September.

I want to ask if you and Martha have seen Lily Langtry, as you have driven in Hyde Park. She has been so much noticed in dispatches from London that I am sure there must be a great deal said of her in the London papers. A western friend, writing from England, says of her: "Lily Langtry is the talk of London. She is said by some people to be vain, but I do not read this characteristic in her face. She 'makes up' well and looks very handsome when she is driving in the park." [My friend explains the expression "making up" by saying it is the art of improving on nature by blackening the eyebrows with some sort of cosmetic. There are many different kinds. Some, she says, use a burnt match for darkening the eyebrows; others use a small brush. The eyelashes, she says, are blackened, too, and a line of black or blue is put on around the edges of the eyelids, which is supposed to enlarge the appearance of the eyes.]

"To some," writes my friend, "it gives a soft, languishing expression. Others look like the devil's own." Excuse the words. They are my friend's vigorous ones. She describes Lily Langtry thus: "She is of medium size, and has regular features, rosebud mouth, large blue eyes, low forehead, creamy complexion, dark brown hair, squarish shoulders, and long classical arms. She has very artistic manners. All this makes up a personality which has set the fashionable world of London chattering of the 'Jersey Lily.' She first came into notice when the prince of Wales paid her marked attention, and this has set her on a pinnacle which has made her a sort of goddess in the eyes of the people. Wherever she goes she is mobbed by crowds trying to get a glimpse of the famous beauty."

I saw a description of the gown she wore at Cowes—all white, with a hat on which there was a white feather. But she carried a black parasol, on every section of which were embroidered in gold the letters "L. L." So no one could mistake the fact that here was the celebrated Lily Langtry.

Well, one couldn't wonder if she were vain. Who wouldn't be, if she had Oscar Wilde [the apostle of the Too-Utterly-Too-Too, as

One of the most important of the fall charitable and social events is the St. Luke's fashion show, to be held on Tuesday afternoon and evening, Oct. 20, at the Stevens hotel. Mrs. William L. Fentress-Wood Wedding Calls Bishop Stires Back to Old Parish

By Cousin Eve.

BISHOP STIRES was standing on the bluff in Gen. Wood's Highland Park garden, silhouetted against Lake Michigan which, for the moment, was a blue gray pastel, pink on the horizon. The handsomest and most delightful of bishops, surrounded by an admiring crowd of his former Chicago parishioners, had but a few minutes before uttered the words that wedded his young niece, Frances Wood, to Calvin Fentress Jr., son of an old Chicago family.

The wedding was a lovely one, in Trinity church, with lilies, and a full choir going out to meet the bride; tiny, chubby choir boys in crisp white jackets, singing like angels against the deep boom of the men, marching ahead of the celebrated bishop of New York. The bishop, his flowing black and white robes doubled with the rich red of his high office, with red at the throat, is even handsomer, I am told, than in the days when he was rector of Grace church at Wabash avenue and 14th street.

As this neighborhood changed, Dr. Stires listened to a call from St. Thomas church in New York, a glorious tabernacle with a vast congregation of the wealthiest and greatest in the land. Here his popularity only increased, and recently he was made a bishop of New York state in residence at the cathedral town of Garden City. Mrs. Wood and Mrs. Stires are sisters. Mrs. Stires has four splendid sons, and Mrs. Wood four beautiful daughters, the third being Saturday's bride.

A Charming Bride.

The central figure at the wedding was Frances, exquisite in white figured chiffon velvet and more tulle veil than I ever saw assembled before, clasped to her head with a tiny wreath. She carried a great round bouquet of lilies of the valley, which Rosemary Baur caught at the moment of departure and passed on to another bridesmaid who told me her own wedding was set, anyway, for December.

The girls wore velvet dresses of medieval cut with short puffed sleeves, in colors that varied from peach and apricot to dark brown. I think the idea was that they were Juliet dresses.

Their hats were tiny brown velvet caps. Their bouquets were of rosy dahlias. Gen. and Mrs. Wood's house is a very beautiful, recently built one on the lake. Of Caen stone, two storied and gabled after the English fashion, its living and dining room windows open on a terrace, and from this are steps to the lawn all along the bluff. Under various trees were buffets, on one a magnificent wedding cake smothered in yellow sugar roses. It was wonderful to be at such a pretty garden party in October.

An Al Fresco Reception.

At one end of the lawn were the maids clustered about the bride, and, as I said, the bishop of New York standing with Lake Michigan for a background. He was counting up all the people he could see thereabouts whom he had married. Nearby was Mrs. Victor Elting. He had married her twice: first, he said, when as Marie Winston she became Mrs. Wirt Walker, and then when as a young widow she became Mrs. Victor Elting. Now her son, Victor Jr., is soon to marry Helen Stanley. Bishop Stires will have to commute, he says, if any more Wood girls marry.

I thought it was a charming wedding, with the married daughters and the sons-in-law, and the tiny children with their nou-nous and all the movement of a large and happy family. There is a nice portrait of Gen. Wood, painted in all the panoply of war, khaki and decorations, I mean, in the dining room.

We did not see the wedding gifts, which were said to be lovely. It did seem as if looking at so much silver to be polished, and so many valuable possessions to be safeguarded by the young bride, would only make us feel warmer, and it was a very hot day.

I saw Admiral and Mrs. Crosley in the garden, the Ayres Boals, George Masons, the Eltings, William Greenlees, Cuthbert Adams, Mrs. Charles Boynton, and from town, Mrs. Eugene and Mrs. Robert Wheeler, Mrs. William Waller, Mrs. Jacob Baur, Mrs. Edward Litsinger, Mrs. William P. Conger and Mrs. Edward Breitung, the bride's godmother, a tall, beautiful woman who told me she lived in Chicago years ago and still loves the place.

I was glad to be back from Mediterranean wanderings in time for this al fresco wedding reception and a sight of the Woods' new house, their charming gardens, and the shimmering white sands of their beach below. Having missed a debut tea or two in Lake Forest earlier in the season, this was quite compensatory, but I am still sorry not to have been at Ragdale when Mrs. Howard Shaw introduced Theodora, the third and last of her charming and accomplished daughters.

German Doctor Plans Visit.

Lots of distinguished people are coming our way this season from Europe and a cablegram arrived this week from Baden Baden announcing the visit, the third week in October, of Dr. Eddy Schacht. I might as well at once confess that until recently I had never heard of Dr. Schacht. Not being a victim of high living, with gout and aching bones and all those awful things, there was really no reason why I should. I know Baden Baden only as a gay, pretty place. But I have a friend or two who have consulted Dr. Schacht and, according to their vivid yarns, his waiting room is a round table of all the celebrities in Europe.

Outside of his scientific reputation, the doctor has a brother, president of the greatest German bank, also holding at the moment high office in the German government. I do not keep the run of German politics, but I believe he is (or was until last week) head of the exchequer.

A friend who has just returned from Baden Baden tells me she talked daily with a quiet man in the great medic's office. He was the King of Bulgaria. The Duke and Duchess of York and the Duke of Gloucester were patients, and the Duke and Duchess of Buccleugh and their daughters. J. Pierpont Morgan came up from the Riviera and there was an uncountable number of English officers [the English suffer from the cold and damp of their country houses], and Anita Loos with John Emmerson, "Doug" and Mary, Edna Ferber, the Howard Brokaws of New York, the Stotesburys, and the King and Queen of the Belgians. Indeed, I am forgetting some crowned heads, the list of sufferers is so distinguished and long.

In November Dr. Schacht usually transfers his clinic to Assouan, where the even climate favors his patients. This year, however, he has accepted an invitation to visit in Hollywood. He reached New York Wednesday and he is the guest of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney for a week. His second week will be spent with J. Pierpont Morgan at his Long Island estate.

More Notable Guests.

In Chicago he will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Litsinger, who are arranging a series of luncheons and dinners for their distinguished friend and his wife. From Chicago the Schachts will fly to Hollywood in a private plane—I don't know whose.

A private letter tells me that the Duc and Duchesse de Noailles are on their way to this country in a French cruiser with Marechal Petain, to celebrate that historical affair at Yorktown. They will make a tour of the country before returning to France. What a pity for all of us that the good and charming Comte Charles Ferry de Fontnouvelle, consul general from France to Chicago, has been "promoted" to New York and will not be here to do the honors!

I went to see the Fontnouvelles last month in Paris, and they had no idea then of the change in store. They were staying in a pied-a-terre, on the Avenue Marceau, which the comtesse had taken in her husband's absence in Chicago and were preparing for a motor trip to Antibes to visit Lady Guernsey, and from there, soon after, the consul expected to set sail for his Chicago post, while his wife was going to Switzerland with the little boys.

Mme. de Fontnouvelle is an Englishwoman, tall, slender and most attractive, while her husband has a most distinguished and rather un-French personality and mentality. Looking not at all like a Frenchman, and even less like one in manner, nobody could well be more French. He comes of an unbroken line of French people who have lived in one part of France for a thousand years or more, and of aristocratic ancestry. At the same time he is a most complete democrat, and his detached and impersonal attitude towards life win for him many young, gay and charming friends.

His little Chicago circle of "The Innocents" will die a natural death, I fear, a darling little French-speaking society which was to have begun this winter season with an opening dance in a beautiful Chicago ballroom. The good die young, and "The Innocents" could not survive without their leader. And while we shall all miss the witty Charles, we must wish him Godspeed on his careering and wonder who his successor will be.

Travel Talks Announced.

Perhaps this is as good a time as any to spill a bean. On top of the moving picture shows of Alicia Patterson and Libby Chase, which were a huge success, and which, by the way, are to be given in town during the winter—there are to be still other travel talks. And these sound very, very good.

Mrs. Baur and Mrs. Chadwick have had their trusty little moving picture camera along with them this summer, and many are the reels they have spun off of Riviera celebrities. Off to Corsica with them went the camera, and that was an amazing jaunt, with bandits, and Mary Garden, and what not. And later, when the two ladies went on a visit to the superb place of Baron Maurice de Rothschild at Geneva, the camera was likewise on the spot, also the Prince of Monaco, who owns the Casino at Monte Carlo and was a member of the house party.

The Rothschild place adjoins Ferney, the famously beautiful estate of Voltaire. I understand that Mrs. Chadwick is to exhibit the pictures while Mrs. Baur lectures, and the Illinois Woman's Republican club is to get the proceeds.

Spears Sell London House.

While I was at Cannes, a fortnight or so ago, among the many familiar faces in the Croisette were Gen. and Mrs. Spears [Mary Borden] of London. And I was more than sorry to hear at that time that their fortunes had been seriously affected by the British situation, and that they had been forced to sell that charming little house of theirs in Westminster, in a quiet street abutting on the Thames and back of Westminster abbey.

I had never been in that house, which was modernistic within. The dining room had a polished steel floor, which sounds alarming, but they say it was, in effect, beautiful. Mary Borden had at one time a large fortune and she's the author of much fiction, popular and mondain. In Cannes she and her husband were having a holiday and living on a small motor boat, on which they were exploring the blue coast and keeping altogether in the open air with cheeful faces. In fact, a change of fortune need not mean much to Mary Borden with her gifted pen and wonderful spirit behind it. She has been under fire before—German guns at Zeebrugge, where her own hospital unit carried on for many months.

A Series of Lectures.

The Town Hall series of lectures, which opens next Saturday at eleven at the Palmer house, sounds good to me. In the first place, it reminds me of a delightful club in West 43d street, Manhattan, called the Town Hall, to which many of my friends belong.

William Lyons Phelps, professor of literature at Yale, opens the Town Hall season in Chicago with a discussion of contemporary writings. He is a brilliant man and speaks at the Yale dinner that evening. Mrs. John V. Farwell will act as hostess on this occasion and will introduce patrons who wish to meet Dr. Phelps after his lecture.

And the week after I see the name of Evangaline Adams listed. Most people would crawl over burning plowshares [whatever they may be] to hear Miss Adams, at the present moment, for she is the mystic who knows what the stars are up to in their courses and what the prospects are for a few good stars in the heavens in these times, chaotic but, in all probability, most salutary. At least, so the philosophers tell us. If the seeress will commit herself, it ought to be a momentous meeting.

Views on England.

In order to hear what Sir Alexander Lawrence had to say about the crisis of England, 300 people ate mutton chops in the Red Lacquer room of the Palmer house on Tuesday. It was the English Speaking union. Personally, I came away not much enlightened. Horace Bridges introduced the speaker, who read his talk and let his voice fall at the end of every sentence, in the good old English fashion. I heard something of Liberals, Laborites and Conservatives, and at the end concluded that the British, like ourselves, are suffering from too much politics and not enough statesmen. Sir Alexander did say, however, that MacDonald, Baldwin and the other great men had put duty above their careers and had voted for measures that will be their political ruin. And that the Sunday preceding the gold standard matter, the shouts of the men gathered in No. 10 Downing street could be heard for many blocks.

Sir Alexander quoted a remark of André Siegfried, whose well known books on England and America have given him authority. It was in Paris before a notable audience: "That England's difficulties were insurmountable, but that England would surmount them." Great applause. Of the navy mutiny Sir Alexander remarked that the British sailors considered mutiny one of their prerogatives and once, before the battle of Camperdown, agreed to fight if they could go on with their mutiny afterwards. They fought, won a great victory, and forgot to mutiny.

Questions Asked.

Many questions were asked, and one that made everybody laugh, including the speaker, was: "What could we in the United States do to make it easier for England and all the other European countries less fortunately set than ourselves?" This was, of course, pie à la mode for Sir Alexander. I think he must have had a confederate in the audience.

In any case, he replied—[you all know what he replied]: "Cancellation of war debts would redistribute the gold supply and start up the world's business again." And, of course, Sir Alexander assumed that England would return to gold speedily as may be.

I saw many people: Mrs. John Farwell, Mrs. Brewer, Mrs. Walter Brewster, Mrs. Senior, Mrs. Arthur Meeker, Mrs. Freeman Hinckley, Mrs. Joseph M. Patterson, Mrs. John Winterbotham, Mrs. Le Roy Fuller, Mrs. James Hutchins, Mrs. Bruce Borland, Mrs. Philco Otis, Mrs. Chadwick, Mrs. Jacob Baur, Miss Conger, Henry Patten, Arthur Bradley Campbell, Arthur Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Alanson Follansbee, Mrs. W. G. Hibbard, and Mrs. Mitchell Follansbee.

England wins another Chicago girl. Phyllis Radford, second daughter of Mrs. Hughes Radford of the Ambassador East, announced this week that her wedding date was set for March and that her fiancé was George J. B. Furness of Roundwood House, Willisden, London. Young Furness is in politics and during the great strike drove a locomotive for some months. He sounds like a coming man in England's future. The bride-to-be is charming, pretty, and a graduate of Vassar and of Columbia. Maybe she will follow in Lady Astor's footsteps.

Planning a Fashion Show.

St. Luke's Fashion show will be held in a few days now, and they were sorting over the buds at a tea in Mrs. Newton Perry's lovely triplex apartment in Astor street, on Tuesday. Perhaps Mrs. Walter Wolf was the Ziegfeld or George Carroll of the occasion, for when the debbies were all got together in the French dressing room, sitting all over the floor and draped about the furniture, the roll call was read, and each stood up and the committee noted her points and graces.

It was a lovely setting, probably the most admired apartment in Chicago. Out of the gray drawing room with its walls outlined in gold and its delicate Aubusson carpets, a terrace looks westward over the setting sun.

Polly Perry and Betty Brown poured tea for the future mannikins and the women of this St. Luke's committee which included Mrs. Pierce, Mrs. John Gary, Mrs. Fourot, Mrs. Charles Stone, Mrs. John Drake III., Mrs. A. Watson Armour, Mrs. Frank Hibbard, and Mrs. Sterling Martin.

Tennis Matches at Virginia Resort

HOT SPRINGS, Va.—[Special.]—The annual fall tennis tournament has been a feature of the week. Many noted players arrived for the matches and luncheons have been given all week in their honor at the Homestead. Mr. and Mrs. T. Philip Swift were among the hosts this week.

Others entertaining included Baron and Baroness Rosenkrantz, Mr. and Mrs. Beauford Porter, Mr. and Mrs. George F. McLaughlin, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Pirie Jr., Mary Roberts Rhinehart, Mrs. Albert S. Ingalls, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Crocker of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. De Forest, Mrs. Philip Rhinelander, Mrs. Edward de Rose, and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va.—[Special.]—With the tennis tournament a matter of the past, riding and golf are the chief pursuits of the moment. An arrival this week was Audrey Davies, who has been in Canada all summer as the guest of Col. and Mrs. Horace Chase Stebbins.

Others here include Lammot Du Pont, Junius C. Bush, F. C. Goodwin Jr., and Mrs. Schuyler Coe.

ing their engagements. One of the most interesting of the week is that of Ruth Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles LaFayette Jones, to William John Warburton, the chubby and genial Jack, who is no connection of the Philadelphia Warburtons of Palm Beach fame.

Since his marriage in '20 to lovely Edna Hoyt, Jack Warburton has been a figure in the younger social life of the town. When Jack and Edna parted and Edna subsequently married André Lord, we all thought Jack took things a bit to heart. However, now he has captured one of the prettiest and most sought after post-debutantes.

Ruth made her debut some three years ago after leaving Miss Porter's school at Farmington. Jack, who is the son of Mrs. Elisha Carson Fenal and the late William John Warburton, was a member of the Princeton class of '18, but departed to serve in the naval aviation forces during the war. His clubs are the Racquet and Tennis, Nassau County, Italian Royal Yacht, and the Aviation Country.

Lady Mendl to Return.

One sure sign of the imminent arrival of the winter season is the news that Lady Mendl, the former Elsie De Wolfe, will sail for town from Paris on the 24th accompanied by—guess—none other than the one and only Elsa Maxwell. Not only Sutton place, but all social New York will sit up at the arrival of the noted pair.

First nights will take on an additional glitter when Elsie goes down the line, and hostesses will begin to plan for parties with the hope that jolly Elsa Maxwell will give them a few good ideas for setting the town on its ear.

Young People Leave Newport for Schools

NEWPORT, R. I.—[Special.]—Many of the young people are leaving for school. Natalie and Mimi Kountze, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Herman D. Kountze, left here early this week and sailed yesterday for Rome to continue their studies.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Eaton Cromwell are at their Rhode Island avenue villa and Mrs. James Laurens Van Alen has returned to Wakehurst after having attended the christening of her grandson, the son of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Van Alen at Roslyn, L. I.

James Lenox Banks Jr. has ended his stay here and has returned to town together with his daughters, the Misses Cynthia, Maud, and Vieva Banks. Mr. and Mrs. Harold A. Sands will be at the Winthrop cottage until next week.

Others still here include Mr. and Mrs. Henry Delafield Phipps, Mr. and Mrs. R. Livingston Beekman, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard M. Thomas, Princess Miguel de Braganza, Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. Wyeth Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ogden Bacon.

Atlanta Diners Give Penny Tips to Help Jobless

ATLANTA.—(AP)—Pennies, smallest of American coins, may become an important factor in relief work this winter.

In five days 98,000 of these coppers poured into a fund started by Mrs. Thomas K. Glenn, Atlanta society woman, to relieve distress due to unemployment.

"A penny a meal" has become Atlanta's slogan for taking care of jobless men and women.

Formation of the "Penny club" resulted from a desire to provide an outlet for relief efforts by persons unable to do something big.

Members were asked to sign a pledge to put aside a penny for each meal. Within less than a week $980 in pennies was the result.

Mayor James L. Key of Atlanta has commended the plan and there have been inquiries from widely scattered cities.

A New York man, writing to her, estimated that a penny club in New York City would raise $50,000 daily for the unemployed.

bilities from both sides of the channel, this particular race being almost as important as the June Grand Prix. In two other races Mrs. Honoré Palmer had two entries, one of which, Tchangti, came in second. The owner, herself, witnessed the race.

She was smartly dressed in a black cloth coat with a white ermine collar and a small black hat of a new Scotch highlander shape. She was warmly congratulated. Her stable, which she began to develop only two years ago, is rapidly becoming important.

Mrs. Palmer was accompanied by another former Chicagoan owning a French stable, Mrs. Eliot Rogers, born Constance Coolidge of Boston. She first married Ray Atherton, whom she divorced. She then married Comte Pierre de Jumilhac, a well known turf figure here. This marriage also ended in a divorce. She married Eliot Rogers of San Francisco some months ago, and they now have a home in Paris.

Chicagoans in Paris.

Chicago girls who recently have been visitors here include Miss Lydia Swift, daughter of Alden B. Swift, and her cousin, Marie Swift, daughter of Gustavus F. Swift, and Elizabeth Baum, daughter of James Baum. All three now have left for Florence, where they will attend school for the winter.

A Presentation of Sports Furs

by Saks-Fifth Avenue

. . . which bear it brightly in mind that "economy is now smart socially"

IN this beautiful collection of sports fur fashions we call your attention to the interesting new "cloth-coat" manners of our furs. The sports coat, for instance, with the scarf collar that ties as casually as a kerchief . . . the short coat of caracul that fits so snugly and becomingly at the waistline . . . the kidskin coat with the new little Eton collar and array of modern buttons. But, most appealing of all, is the fact that our sports furs of today, at their new low prices, cost no more than cloth coats of other seasons.

The short fur coat of black kid caracul, fitted as trimly as a suit coat, is decidedly smart. Can be worn with a dozen different costumes. (Above)

Another sports fur to be reckoned with this season is leopard cat—lined and scarfed with smart woolen. (Above)

Kenwood Social Service Plans Theater Party

Proceeds from Benefit Will Be Used to Give Hundreds of Infants a Healthy Start in Life.

By Roberta Nangle.

ON Monday, Oct. 19—a week from tomorrow night—the Kenwood Social Service club will be hostess at its annual theater party. The attraction will be "The Third Little Show," and the place, the Great Northern theater. The guests [here's hoping they'll fill the house] will be taxed a small sum above the regular admission price and the proceeds will help to give hundreds of infants a healthy start in life.

The Kenwood Social Service club is the oldest branch of the Infant Welfare society of Chicago, which now carries on its invaluable work in twenty-one senior centers and six junior centers, organized as the Women's Auxiliary of the Infant Welfare and established in the more poverty stricken districts of Chicago and its suburbs. The present presiding officer of the women's auxiliary, Miss Helen Wilkins, is a member of the Kenwood Social Service group.

Supports Providence Station.

The Kenwood Social Service club supports the Providence station at 29th and Halsted streets. This station's work, like that of the other Infant Welfare centers, consists of regular medical supervision of expectant mothers, infants, and children from 2 to 6 years old by a staff doctor. Conferences with the doctor at the station are followed by house visits of nurses and nutritionists. Thus the mother gains a knowledge of sanitation, proper diet, recreation, and child training.

Last year calls for help from Infant Welfare stations were particularly heavy, and this year the society is commandeering its forces in anticipation of even greater need during the predicted depression of the coming winter. The cost of maintaining the Providence station is annually more than $10,000, the sum which the Kenwood Social Service club pledges annually to Infant Welfare. That amount permits the club to carry on pre-natal, infant, and pre-school work.

Lower Baby Death Rate.

Probably the most pertinent proof of the Kenwood Social Service club's need for assistance lies in the fact that its station has cared for 834 infants during the first nine months of 1931—an increase of 50 per cent over the entire twelve months of 1930. The Infant Welfare is the only agency that gives cod liver oil free, and there has been a 90 per cent increase in the demand for it in these last nine months over the twelve previous months.

Still another eloquent testimonial to its good work is the death rate of babies, which has been only ½ of 1 per cent so far this year, and last year was 5.3 per cent for the whole city.

The following is a typical "case" history showing the permanently beneficial work to which the society is dedicated: A father of Polish birth, out of work last winter, broke into a grocery store to get food for his hungry family and was shot and killed by the proprietor. The mother was left with three children, 2, 3½, and 6 years of age. Through the Infant Welfare, the mother got some help from the charities and now earns a little money. The society's nurse made a budget for her and advises her on how to buy the most nourishing food. The two small children get the benefit of the Infant Welfare treatments and free cod liver oil, and the mother is managing to keep her family intact.

Operates Thrift Shop.

Besides having a theater benefit each fall and a fashion show in the spring to raise its pledge of $10,000, the Kenwood Social Service group runs jointly with the Hyde Park center the Infant Welfare Thrift shop at 1461 East 55th street. The shop offers a daily rummage sale of second hand clothing, furniture, and novelties. Two paid workers manage the store, with the assistance of volunteer work by members.

Mrs. Kenath Sponsel, Mrs. Harold J. Gordon, and Miss Madeline Magerstadt compose the committee in charge of the play on Oct. 19, Mrs. Albert S. Cummins is in charge of tickets, Mrs. Dorothy Tillinghast, flowers, and Mrs. Percival G. Hart, cigarets.

Club Ethics

By Maude Swalm Evans.

"CHAIRMEN are funny things," commented the new member who was eating her luncheon at the club table. "I've attended two committee meetings this morning and experienced two entirely different brands."

"I rather think you'll find as many different brands as there are chairmen," voiced the long time member.

"That may be," admitted the new member, "but these two were certainly outstanding. The first was one of the weak kind. She let the members of her committee talk as they pleased—one or many at a time, and address whom they pleased—seldom the chair. The other conducted her meeting as would a proverbial stiff backed school teacher. There were no side conversations, no spontaneous remarks. Each member addressed the chair, one at a time, and in order of asking."

"That's the only way to get anywhere with what you're trying to do," remarked the parliamentarian, "especially in a large meeting. A small meeting may be more informal."

"The chairman of a committee to which I belong is one of the tackle and rush kind," reported the suburban member. "She's always in a hurry to get through with the meetings because she must be somewhere at such and such a time. She goes so fast I don't know what I'm voting for half the time."

"You should sit under my chairman," suggested the west side member. "She states every motion two or three times. It always takes much more time than it should to attend her meetings, but you certainly know what they're all about."

"Acting as chairman certainly puts a woman in the limelight," observed the long time member.

"And be sure of this," advised the parliamentarian, "that some of the members of your committee like the way your chairman presides or she wouldn't be given the job—more than once, anyway."

Question: "A single member of our club insisted on having a long letter read through the second time. Had the chairman a right to allow this when none of the others wanted it?

IRRITATED MEMBER."

Reply: It is only by general consent that the second reading of a paper can be dispensed with. Your chairman was right.

Food Considered Good as Gold by German Villagers

LUNDEN NEAR HAMBURG, Germany.—(AP)—This community has made up its mind to accept taxes in farm produce, and in return to hand to its unemployed flour, bread, and potatoes as part of the dole.

This measure, it was explained, was necessitated by the scarcity of ready money among farmers plus the ever increasing number of jobless.

The community must support its unemployed after a period of 26 weeks when the state unemployment dole expires.

Decalog Gives Young Fascists Duce's Orders

ROME.—(AP)—A new decalog for the Young Fascists, an organization embracing 500,000 of the dictator's suporters between 18 and 21 years of age, shows plainly what is expected of them. The code, issued by the Fascist party, reads:

1. God and country. Any other affection, any other duty comes afterward.
2. He who is not ready to give body and soul to the country and to serve the Duce without discussion is not worthy to put on the black shirt. Fascism rejects lukewarm faith and weak character.
3. Use all your intelligence to understand the orders you receive and all your enthusiasm to obey them.
4. Discipline is not only a virtue for the soldier in the ranks; it should be practiced every day and in all circumstances.
5. A bad son and a poor student are not Fascists.
6. Arrange your time in such manner that your work is a pleasure and your play is work.
7. Learn to suffer without complaint, to give yourself without being asked and to serve without hope of reward.
8. Good actions, like deeds of war, must not be half done. Do them to the limit.
9. In grave situations remember that safety lies in daring.
10. And every day devoutly thank God for having made you an Italian and a Fascist.

Sparrows' Liking for Grapes Brings on Death Sentence

MENDOZA, Argentina.—(AP)—English sparrows, indicted for damaging the grapes from which Argentina's choicest wines are made, have been condemned to destruction here-abouts.

Provincial authorities have started a campaign against the feathered thieves and say they expect it will save farmers and orchardists $15,000.

An Exhibit of English Portraits

Fine Examples of Work of Gainsborough, Reynolds, Lawrence, and Cotes on View at Anderson Galleries.

By Eleanor Jewett.

PROBABLY the most important exhibition of the year is that of eighteenth and early nineteenth century English portraits which will open tomorrow in the Anderson galleries. The exhibition is unique in as much as it will show authentic paintings of rare historic and artistic value which it would be difficult to duplicate. Marvellous examples of Gainsborough that have not been seen before in a public exhibit may be found in this show. But it might be as well to give in some detail the significant facts concerning a number of these canvases.

We might start with Gainsborough because in any company of which he makes one his is the first name deferred to. In addition to the boy's portrait, reproduced today, there are the portraits of Margaret Gainsborough and of Lady Mary Thorpe of Clevedon. The Lady Mary is from the collection of Prince Johannes of Liechtenstein. The portrait is painted in Gainsborough's "loose" manner, a manner that differs from the coldly careful treatment he gave the little Philip Stanhope. It is a later portrait than that of the boy. Against a romantic summer landscape Lady Mary, in a dress of white and light blue [the blue a favorite shade of the artist's in this period] sits, exquisite, charming, sentimental and very beautiful.

Margaret Gainsborough is the famous "Peggy" Gainsborough, the painter's daughter. She became the executrix of her father's estate. Her resemblance to her celebrated father is remarkable. Another superb portrait of her is in the National gallery in London.

Portraits by Sir Joshua.

Among the pictures by Sir Joshua Reynolds is a portrait of Dr. Charles Burney, the father of Fannie Burney and an intimate friend of Reynolds, Dr. Johnson, and other famous men of that time. Dr. Burney is shown in his robe of doctor of music of Oxford university. This portrait has been engraved several times, once by Bartolozzi. Another interesting man's portrait is that of the Rev. William Mason of Pembroke college.

Reynolds, it will be remembered, painted a number of delightful studies of children. There are the "Age of Innocence" and the "Strawberry Girl," for example. He also painted little girls holding birds. One of these with a robin held up to her cheek is in the National gallery in London. Another of this famous "Robinetta" series, with the child holding the bird between her hands in her lap, is in the current exhibition. It is perfectly charming.

Reynolds used as a model for this picture Magdalena Lewis, afterwards the Hon Mrs. Tollemache.

From Noted Collection.

One of the highlights of the exhibition is the magnificently serene and simple "Knitting Girl," by George Romney. The picture comes from the collection of the earl of Shrewsbury and has been shown by him or his ancestors in several of the most important exhibitions of English paintings in Great Britain, notably the "Century of British Art" in the Grosvenor gallery in 1888.

Two stunning portraits of men are seen in the painting of the Rt. Hon. George Canning, M. P., by Sir Thomas Lawrence [Canning was the famous British statesman of his time and held the folio of chancellor of the exchequer] and the Hon Frederick Maitland, by John Hoppner, R. A. This last, a decorative picture, is a portrait of a famous British military general who came from a long line of British military men. He served in the Royal American regiment and he is painted here in the brilliant red coat uniform of that service. Maitland commanded the Anglo-Sicilian army which went to the relief of Wellington in 1812. It is interesting to note that he married an American lady and lived for several years in this country.

Work of Sir Francis Cotes.

In the exhibit, too, there are fine examples of the work of Sir Francis Cotes, R. A., one of them the portrait of Lady Norwood and the other the portrait of Penelope Cotes, the artist's sister, who was herself a well known miniature painter in her day.

Turning from the portraits, you will find an important example of Turner in "Bligh Sands," a rather dramatic marine. The painting is a fully recorded one in all the works on Turner and comes to the exhibit from the Sanderson collection of Scotland. There are, also, two landscapes by Gainsborough and two classical English landscapes by the Italian, Zuccarelli, who was one of the founders of the Royal academy.

The Zuccarelli landscapes came from the collection of Queen Victoria and were presented by her to Sir Richard Broadbent. Two paintings by Morland, "Fagot Gatherers" and "Rest by the Wayside," must not be forgotten. A "Self Portrait," by Beechey, is another highlight in an exhibition that is so fine it is difficult to know where to draw the line in commenting upon its several parts. It is one of those few shows which will not bear missing.

Purchase of Etchings.

The Illinois Academy of Fine Arts has sent out word that the following etchings have been purchased by the Library Extension division of the state of Illinois at Springfield: "Winter," by Karl C. Brandner; "Midsummer," by Oscar B. Erickson; "Illinois in June," by Eugenie F. Glamen; "Lake County Idyll," by O. E. Hake; "Sea Gulls and Sails," by Othmar Hoffler; "Hindu," by Edward Jan Krasa; "Rufus Choate," by Frank Raymond; "Primroses," by Elizabeth Colwell and "Gargoyle Gate—Entrance to Hull Court," by Bertha E. Jaques.

The exhibition which went to Springfield last June has been returned and disbanded. Mr. Cornelius has been reappointed by Gov. Emmerson for another term as a member of the advisory board of the state museum.

Rare Books Exhibited.

There is now at the Lakeside Press galleries, 350 East 22d street, a most interesting exhibit of illustrated books. Shown is, for instance, "Theuerdank," printed in Nurnberg in 1519, second edition, the most distinguished German example of typography of the 16th century. It is a poem written in honor of the Emperor Maximilian, for whom and at whose expense it was printed for private distribution in 1517. After the death of Maximilian in 1519 the second edition was issued by the printer of the first edition in the same types, illustrations and format.

The name "Theuerdank" was given Maximilian because all his thoughts were said to be noble. He was a liberal patron of the more distinguished engravers and printers of his reign—Durer, for one, and Burgkmair and others. The types with their extraordinary flourishes were cut and cast specially at the emperor's expense by Jose Dienocher of Antwerp. The author was Melchoir Pfintzing, secretary to the emperor. The book contains 118 masterly illustrations engraved on wood in the "golden age" of engraving in Germany by a group eminent in that art: Beck, Schaufelein, Burgkmair and others.

Then, there is the copy of "The Grave," a poem, illustrated with twelve etchings from the original designs of William Blake, executed by Louis Schiavonetti, who also engraved the artist's portrait after T. Phillips, as the frontispiece. This was published in London in 1808.

The exhibition is well worth seeing.

Paintings by Emile Zoir.

There is now in the lounge of the Midland club a comprehensive showing of paintings by Emile Zoir, who first exhibited at the Swedish-American club on North Dearborn street, a year or so ago, and who for the last year has been living on the north shore, painting and conducting painting classes. Zoir is the holder of fourteen medals and European titles.

He is an individualist and a modernist, with his flair for modernism grounded on the bedrock of a faithful apprenticeship to academic teachings. It will be long before we forget our first view of his first exhibit, when out of the dusk of the long hall as the lights were severally turned high we saw slowly emerge giant paintings of the creation. Symbolic his work was, and vigorous, romantic in some of its impulses, yet in a last analysis its realism, its Zornlike brusqueness, must distinguish it from other contemporary modernism.

At the Midland club you will see the series of seven panels of "The Creation." It is said that this work is valued at $75,000. It has been presented by M. Zoir to St. Stephen's Episcopal church of which the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker is pastor. There are other powerful canvases besides these in the exhibit and a group of etchings which prove that Zoir's mastery of the needle is accurate, vigorous and inspired.

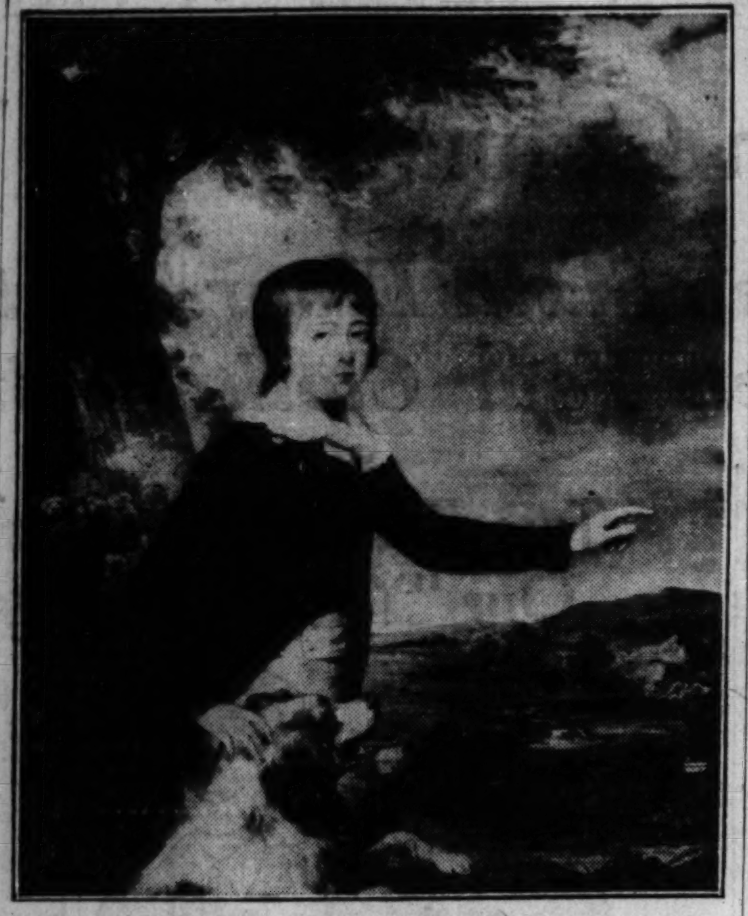
Ancient Earrings on View.

The four gold earrings recently received at the Field Museum of Natural History as the result of excavations on the site of the ancient city of Kish by the Field Museum-Oxford University Joint Expedition to Mesopotamia, are now on exhibition in Stanley Field hall of the museum. The rings were found in Babylon graves belonging to the period of Nebuchadnezzar who ruled over Kish and Babylon about 2,500 years ago.

According to Henry Field, assistant curator of physical anthropology and a former member of the expedition at Kish, it can be suggested with some degree of veracic certainty that these earrings were once worn by ladies of the court of Nebuchadnezzar. They are intricately designed and the artistic workmanship on them would do credit to the best goldsmiths of later times.



"THE HONORABLE PHILIP STANHOPE," by Sir Thomas Gainsborough, to be seen in the exhibition of 18th century paintings which opens tomorrow in the Anderson galleries, 536 South Michigan avenue. Gainsborough made a beautiful picture of this portrait of a 10 year old lad. The boy was the godson of the famous fourth earl of Chesterfield and succeeded him as the fifth earl.

Lunch Has Come to Mean Hearty Repast in Riviera

CANNES, France.—(AP)—"Lunch" means having only a bite to eat in the United States, but on the fashionable Riviera it has taken on the sense of a sumptuous repast.

The French have Gallicised the word into "luncher," pronounced "lonshay" and use it in all the forms of French grammar. It appears in the social columns of the local newspapers as "Prince So and So lunchait yesterday" or Duke Such and Such lunchera tomorrow."

"Luncher" is the smart verb to use when speaking in French of a smart luncheon.

Noises Get on Nerves.

For years, loud protests have been raised against the harmful effects of noise in large cities on the nervous system of the inhabitants, according to the Paris correspondent of the Journal of American Medical association.

Little Season Is Gayest Ever in London Town

By Ann Whittingham.

LONDON.—[Special.]—With events of great magnitude occurring almost daily, it is not to be wondered that there was a rush back to town weeks before schedule this fall. And so we have had the unusual spectacle of society in full swing and the court still in Scotland and nearly all the royal family absent.

In general, people are far from sorry for the early resumption of London gayety. Nearly all social centers and social activities have been marred during the summer by the weather, and now affairs under cover are doubly enjoyable.

First nights have given most people the chance to announce their presence back in town and to wear the latest creations from the couturiers. We have had eleven premieres, including "Grand Hotel," and the revival of Noel Coward's "The Young Idea." Noel Coward always manages to have the most brilliant of openings, sort of a slice out of "Who's Who."

At the first night of the "Grand Hotel," among equally discriminating and prominent folk, were the Princess Bibesco, Lady Portarlington, Lady Colfax, Lord Inverclyde (who seems to bear exceedingly well all the unpleasant advertising his late wife, the darling June, has given him), and the Laverys.

Back from Ireland.

Wherever smart society gathers one finds the Laverys. They have spent considerable time in Ireland this summer, which island, preversely enough, seems to have good weather. They were guests for some weeks at the viceregal lodge in Dublin and then went north as the guests of Lord and Lady Londonderry at Mount Stewart, where the Spanish Infantas were also guests. Sir John is now doing a portrait of a remarkably interesting man, Dr. White, the former moderator of the council of the Church of Scotland. Lady Lavery's portrait as an Irish colleen in shawl, complete, is now on the new Irish currency.

Speaking of artists, Augustus John's son, Teddy, has taken up boxing as a career and seems to be doing very well. His first fight was a decisive win after fifteen rounds. He is an unassuming young man, and after so many rounds of buffeting he was said to have been as cool as a cucumber. He says he is not in boxing for a lark.

"In Paris I couldn't earn a crust of bread as a painter, and I've got to live." But painting is in his veins, and the money he earns from boxing is being used to continue his art studies. He trains for five hours of boxing and three hours each evening for painting. "As soon as my first picture is sold," he is said to have declared, "it's good-by to boxing."

At Covent Garden.

Besides new cabarets and ice skating, the opera season at Covent Garden has attracted music lovers back to London. The royal box on the opening night was occupied by the lord mayor and Lady Neal and other city officials in full dress. This makes the royal box a scene more brilliant even than when the royal family are present. The lord mayor in full uniform of flowing robes and brilliant colors and huge jewels and the gold discs that make up his chains of office is a dazzling picture. After all, it is his robes of office that represent the king, but his majesty wears conventional evening dress.

One of the latest recruits to commerce is, I hear, the Hon. Phyllis Astor, Lord and Lady Astor's daughter. She has taken Lady Margaret Bingham's place in an estate agency. Her cousin, Reginald Wynne, has recently joined a travel bureau and is a most enthusiastic worker. It will be remembered that the young Lord Carisbrooke, brother to the ex-queen of Spain, recently joined the estate office of Leigh & Co. and is working with Mrs. Claude Leigh on the social service end of the management of several large estates.

The first of the charity balls seems to be coming early. This is the Three C's ball and is in aid of the Mothercraft Training society, of which the Duke and Duchess of York are the patrons. Lady Galway is interested, and so is Mrs. Wellington Hay, the niece of Graham Taylor of the Chicago Commons.

Mrs. Hay is following the English custom of sending her small sons to boarding school at an age when they seem to be hardly out of the cradle. The outfitting of sons for school is one of the major occupations of mothers during the weeks just past.

Christened in Jordan Water.

From Ireland comes the account of the christening of the baby daughter of Lord and Lady Dufferin, she who was a year ago Miss Maureen Guinness. The christening ceremony was in the private chapel at Clandeboyne, Lord Dufferin's home in Ireland. It is a tiny chapel which hardly held the number of godparents, which was considerably in excess of three. Her sponsors are the Duchess of Abercorn, Lady Chetwode, Mrs. Patrick Davison, Miss Baby Jungman, Mrs. Drury Lowe, another one of society's brides, the young Lord Birkenhead, and Mr. Sheftel.

Lady Caroline Blackwood, as the baby will be officially known, has Maureen for her second name, and she was christened in Jordan water brought to England earlier in the year by her grandmother, Mrs. Ernest Guinness. Family christening robes of exquisite Carrickmacross lace were worn by the baby's mother and by her aunts, Mrs. Brinsley Plunket and Mrs. Philip Kindersley.

The big society wedding of the season will, of course, be the wedding of Lady May Cambridge, niece of the queen, to Capt. Henry Abel Smith of the royal horse guards. Capt. Abel Smith as a lieutenant served as A. D. C. to Lady May's father, the earl of Athlone, who was governor general of South Africa.

Lady May is a great favorite of the queen's and it was in her honor that the royal ball was given this summer, the first in a number of years. She is also a favorite niece of the queen mother of the Netherlands, to whom she makes frequent visits. Whether the wedding is in the guards' chapel, Windsor chapel, or St. Margaret's, it will be the biggest event of the season.

Louis XIV. Hunt Custom Revived by President Doumer

MARLY-LE-ROI, France.—(AP)—M. Paul Doumer, France's republican president, has just revived a custom dear to the "grand monarch," Louis XIV.

He inaugurated the autumn hunting season here, instead of at Rambouillet as in the past, bringing distinguished guests, color, life, and movement to this otherwise quiet suburb of Paris.

Marly was a favorite haunt of the "Sun-King," who used to come here often with all his courtiers and their ladies, to hunt.

Louis had his château, built by the famous Mansard, hard by his hunting preserve. As at Versailles, he improved upon the natural surroundings, creating harmonious formal gardens, artificial lakes, and fountains.

The château and its dependent buildings were destroyed soon after the French revolution. It was not until the reign of President Fallieres, who beat M. Doumer for the presidency a quarter of a century ago, that a chief of the French state returned here for the autumnal sport.

President Doumer does not wield a shotgun and has no regular hunting permit. That, however, does not prevent his entertaining his friends, and presiding at the hunt breakfasts—luncheons, they are known in France—that he offers them.

Neglect of children's temporary teeth, orthodontists agree, may result in serious malformation of the later, permanent teeth forming beneath the gum surfaces. Beauty may be marred, health impaired.

At the age of two

Dental authorities therefore urge a systematic cleansing of baby teeth after the child has reached the age of two years. For this purpose they suggest a tooth paste free from harsh abrasives; safe and swift in action, and pleasant to taste. Though the last seems unimportant, it really is important. Children welcome tooth brushing time if it is a pleasure.

A great many thousands of mothers have found Listerine Tooth Paste ideal for cleansing and protecting children's teeth, as well as their own. Here is the reason for this preference:

Protects precious enamel

Listerine Tooth Paste contains amazing new cleansing and polishing agents. They are softer than enamel. Therefore they cannot harm it. But they are harder than tartar. Consequently they remove it. The teeth are left brilliant, clean, unmarred.

Because of these amazing results, Listerine Tooth Paste has won more than three million users. Old favorites costing in the neighborhood of 50¢ have been discarded in favor of this modern one at 25¢.

Such a paste can be offered at such a price only because of marked economies (passed on to you), effected by cost-cutting methods of manufacture and distribution.

We ask you to try Listerine Tooth Paste for a week. Disregard, if you will, the saving it affords, and judge by cleansing results alone. Lambert Pharmacal Company, St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.

When Chicago Was Young

the young people call him] languishing on her doorstep; Gladstone reading Shakespeare to her and the prince of Wales riding with her in the park? Do you suppose the story of her putting a piece of ice down his royal highness' back is true?

I was reading in today's paper of the death of Abby Smith, who has made so many sacrifices for women's rights. What a contrast her life is to that of the English beauty! She has been active in every reform, in anti-slavery and temperance work especially. I suppose the most striking feature of her efforts in behalf of women's rights has been her refusal to pay the taxes assessed on her and her sister on the ground that taxation without representation is tyranny. It seems rather futile to me, yet I know many members of the suffragist group who think it has been of real service to women in calling the attention of legislators to the injustice of such taxation. Just think, her house was sold for taxes, in her old age, but this did not weaken her in her stand.

Will has had a call this evening from our neighbor and friend, George C. Walker, one of Chicago's fine citizens. He was telling us some of his experiences in early Chicago. His father, Charles Walker, had come here in the thirties and was one of that memorable group which included William B. Ogden, Judge Drummond, George Armour, Julian Rumsey, Tuthill King and J. Young Scammon. The elder Walker was the largest shipper of grain at that time in the United States.

Young George Walker [our caller of this evening], whose mother had died when he was but 3 years old, had been kept by his grandparents in the east, but when he became 12 his father sent for him to come out to Chicago. He told us how much a part of the wilderness the city was at that time [1848]. Fort Dearborn was still standing, just north of the Walker house, and he often visited it. The population was less than 17,000. There were no railroads east or west, though his father [Charles Walker] was planning, with other influential Chicagoans, for the Galena and Chicago Union railroad. THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE had just been founded.

When he was about 15 his father furnished him with a canal boat and a cargo of hard coal and dressed flooring and he started for St. Louis by way of the newly completed Illinois and Michigan canal and the Illinois and Mississippi rivers. The journey was made in safety through the canal and the Illinois river, but just above St. Louis a Mississippi river steamboat ran into his canal boat and almost wrecked it, carrying away the cabin. The cargo was saved, however, and sold in St. Louis for almost, or quite, twice what it had cost in Chicago. Imagine a 15 year old boy being sent in those days on such a perilous journey alone! They must have been more mature then.

The boat was repaired and the young merchant invested the proceeds of his sale in a full cargo of sugar and New Orleans molasses, which sold in Chicago for twice what they had cost in St. Louis! With such a talent for business, I needn't tell you that Mr. Walker has become a rich man. But he is so generous no one begrudges it to him. I really think he is one of the most tender hearted men I ever knew. He was one of the organizers of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals here, and I have heard Will say that his benevolence is almost unbounded. He is interested in a dozen families, some of which he entirely supports. Any one who is struggling to get along can get help from him.

Will was talking with Mr. Walker this evening about his important enterprise, known as the Blue Island Land and Building company, which has been one of Chicago's largest real estate projects. This company, in which he holds a large interest, bought 1,000 acres of land south of the city, paying for it about $100 an acre, he said. They have subdivided this large tract, planted thousands of trees, and made it an attractive suburb, which they call Blue Island. West of this the village of Morgan Park has grown up, fostered by Mr. Walker. It was his ambition to make this village an educational center and he encouraged the building of Morgan Park Military academy, which has been attended by many of our young men.

He founded a library there, too, I believe, and has helped bring other educational institutions to that town. He has been a widower for many years, and, as he has no children, his work has been his chief interest.

I must not write more now. It is a warm evening here.

Love to you and Martha.
Your friend,
MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

Footnotes.

Lily Langtry, famous beauty of the seventies and eighties, was born on the Island of Jersey, one of the channel islands, in 1858, and though her Christian name was Emilie Charlotte, she became known as "the Jersey Lily" because of her creamy complexion, and the name of "Lily Langtry" stuck to her always. She came to the United States in the eighties with a theatrical company, and, as in England, was mobbed by curious crowds. Freddy Gebhard, a man of powerful social influence in New York and Baltimore, was one of her admirers. In 1898, Mrs. Langtry, who had been divorced from Edward Langtry, married Hugo Gerald de Bathe, 25 years her junior. She died Feb. 12, 1929.

George C. Walker, who called on Will in 1878, was one of Chicago's most successful men. Martha writes of him as a childless widower, and so he was in 1878, but he remarried in 1880, his second wife being Mrs. Mary M. Keen, to whose children he was devoted. Walker museum, for which he gave one hundred thousand dollars, was one of the early buildings of the University of Chicago. He died in 1905.

"Beloved Little Home Town."

The present day motorist, speeding along the Rock River highway from Rockford, Ill., with a glimpse of the stunning statue of Blackhawk on the rocky ledge, as he nears Oregon; crossing the high bridge spanning the river at Grand Detour; on to the old tavern at Dixon, famous because Lincoln once spent a night there, misses the primitive wildness and romantic beauty of earlier days.

In the family surrey, behind the children's favorite white horse, we used to drive from Dixon up the river road, under the overhanging cliffs [all now only a memory, sacrificed to modern commercialism—a cement factory], passing the old spring house and Fuller's cave, our destination the historic old village of Grand Detour.

What a thrill it gave the youngest member of the family to pull the rope attached to the bell, the clang of which summoned the sleeping ferryman. Soon we had driven on board the ancient craft and, with the creaking of the cable, were floating toward the opposite shore. A quarter of a dollar was the charge for the trip over, with promise of return, payment in advance, emphasized by the placard tacked to the side of the boat:

"Since man to man is so unjust,
I cannot tell which man to trust.
I've trusted many to my sorrow.
Pay today. I'll trust tomorrow."

The history of this section of northern Illinois, rich in Indian lore, cannot be written without reference to the little hamlet nestling in the "grand detour" of the Rock river, called by many travelers "the little Hudson of the west."

JESSIE HARDING,
Winnetka, Ill.

The question about Chicago's early days milliner has brought many letters, even the sterner sex being well represented, for many correspondents remember when mother's bonnet from Mrs. Hopson was greatly admired.

Answer to question No. 13: Mrs. Kate Newell Doggett, cultured and progressive woman of her day, founded the Fortnightly of Chicago.

Question No. 14: What Chicagoan, well known in the musical circles of his day, wrote many civil war songs? One of these stirred the nation in its darkest days, and is said to have "won the war."

Send Victorian wise cracks, proverbs of your family, or a few lines about your "beloved little home town" to Herma Clark, care of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

Herriot Offers Noted Havre Cats Work in Lyons

LYONS, France.—(AP)—French mayors should be Pied Pipers and rid their city of rats, says Mayor Edouard Herriot, former premier who has also had twenty-five years' experience in running Lyons.

M. Herriot thinks rodents are a greater curse than unemployment, and he has invited the rat catching cat breeder of Havre, Dr. A. Loir, to bring his pets here.

King Alfonso Lives Quietly in French Hotel

Queen and Children Play Golf and Walk While former Ruler Cogitates.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

FONTAINEBLEAU.—Safely tucked away from political troubles, King, or ex-King, Alfonso of Spain—he has not yet announced whether he really did abdicate or not—otherwise known as the duke of Toledo, is living quietly in exile in a first class hotel at Fontainebleau, facing the historic château where Napoleon took his leave for the inhospitable island of St. Helena.

With a flock of courtiers and a few faithful friends such as the duchess of Victoria, the duke and duchess of Lecera, the duchess of Santonia, and the marquess de Torres, Alfonso is living here peacefully, like an ordinary French "bourgeois," in this quiet suburban town. However, he has kept twenty Spanish domestics who followed him in exile, including six chauffeurs who drive his luxurious automobiles.

In De Luxe Apartments.

The members of the royal family are occupying several de luxe apartments on the first floor of the Hotel Savoy. The queen receives her visitors in a large salon beautifully decorated in pure Louis XVI. style. In her spare time she reads the latest books or takes long walks in the forest. She also goes to Paris occasionally in an automobile to visit the couturiers and do a little shopping on the Rue de la Paix with her ladies of honor.

Like the young infantas, Maria-Cristina and Beatrix, she has a weakness for golf. These royal golf addicts can be seen on their private green practically every morning if the weather permits, and, according to popular gossip, the queen is not easily beaten.

Reads Many Letters.

The king devotes most of his time with his secretary to the reading of hundreds of letters which he receives every day from all parts of the world. He gets up very early and takes a walk in the forest with his children. Once in a while they take long automobile rides in the country. They recently visited Rheims, Chartres, and Nemours.

The dinner of the royal family seems to be the only act of their life which has remained a complicated affair. According to the rigid protocol, the infantas, clad in austere evening gowns, walk ceremoniously into the dining room, followed by the infants, dressed in their smokings. They stand around the table silently, waiting patiently until their parents sit down to commence their dinner. After dinner the usual recreation of these royal exiles is to play mah-jong, which is the favorite game of the queen.

NANKING.—(AP)—Presentation of 10,000 Chinese plum trees to the United States in connection with next year's bi-centenary of George Washington has been suggested by the Chinese legation at Washington.

The plum blossom was recently adopted as China's national flower because its five petals symbolize the five groups—Chinese, Manchus, Mongolians, Mohammedans, and Tibetans—of which the republic is composed.

The flower also represents the five power constitution devised by Sun Yat-Sen.

221,000 Visit Yellowstone in 1931 Season

Attendance Shows a Drop of 6,000 Persons from Last Year's Total.

YELLOWSTONE PARK, Wyo.—The 1931 travel statistics, just compiled for Yellowstone National park, disclose that the depression of the country had its effect on the tourist travel. However, this year's travel was only a few thousand less than last year and is the second decrease in thirteen years, the last decrease being in 1930.

The total travel this year was 221,248 persons, as compared with 227,901 last year, and 260,697 in 1929, the high record. There was a decrease of 6,653, or about 3 per cent below the figures of last year.

* *

Travel by Gateways.

The travel this year is classified as follows:

Rail visitors	18,929
Automobile visitors	180,380
Motorcycle visitors	219
Visitors on horseback and afoot	677
Pre-season visitors	21,043
Total	221,248

Two hundred one thousand four hundred and twenty-three automobile visitors toured the park in 63,636 cars, as compared with 199,914 visitors in 63,408 cars last year. There were also 219 visitors on 159 motorcycles, as compared with 255 visitors on 180 motorcycles last year.

Rail and motor travel, both entrance and exit, favored the western gateway this year. There were 70,229 entrance auto visitors traveling in 21,463 cars at the west gate, as compared with 67,968 traveling in 21,892 cars admitted at the Cody or eastern gateway, which was the favorite entrance auto gateway prior to 1927. Forty-one thousand three hundred and four people traveling in 13,334 cars were admitted at the Gardiner, or northern gateway, and 22,141 visitors in 7,106 cars were admitted via the Snake river, or southern gateway.

Illinois Second.

The entrance rail travel shows West Yellowstone well in the lead. The rail visitors accredited to this gateway consist of 6,657, plus 623 temporary employés of the government and park operators; 1,261 via the Gallatin gateway, and 331 via the Bozeman gate. There were 6,693 rail visitors who entered the park via the Gardiner gateway; 3,203 via the Cody or eastern gateway; 121 via the southern gateway from Lander, and 40 for Victor, Idaho.

The automobile travel includes 21,045 visitors traveling in 7,141 cars who entered the park more than once during the season, as compared with 14,116 visitors traveling in 4,439 cars during 1930.

Visitors were registered this year from every state in the Union, and Alaska, Philippine islands, Hawaii, Cuba, Canal Zone, and 21 foreign countries. The classification of rail travel by states ranks: New York, first, with 2,687 visitors; Illinois, second, with 2,434 visitors; Ohio, third, with 1,451 visitors, and Pennsylvania, fourth, with 1,445 visitors.

Last year New York and Illinois ranked in the same order, Pennsylvania third, and Ohio fourth.

Tending Bar Is Flourishing Trade in Reno

RENO, Nev.—[U. P.]—There is one professio nthat may have become passé in other cities, but still flourishes in true tradition in "the biggest little city in the world." It is the profession of tending bar.

This city, with possibly 50 so-called "clubs," night cabarets and rendezvous, is the capital and mecca for purveyors of "Mickey Finns," "Tom Collins," "Rye-highs" and all the other concoctions so dear to the memories of those who didn't care for the arrival of the eighteenth amendment.

Bartenders are drawing what amounts to union wages, too. Their earnings are increased by the extent of their popularity with the patrons who visit the various liquor establishment. In the high class establishments a good "barkeep's" salary combined with tips will run on the average of $100 to $125 a week. The lowest that any of the profession receives is about $40.

Like the butcher, the cabinet maker and the bricklayer, who learned their profession over a period of years, good bartenders with personality are hard to find.

New American Liner Is Electric in Every Detail

WITH the introduction into service Oct. 15 at New York, the Dollar liner President Coolidge will take its place as the ultimate in the modern express liner, a ship peculiarly the product of American engineering.

The President Coolidge is a giant twin-screw vessel of nine decks, displacing 33,800 tons, equipped with the latest devices of science for safety and comfort at sea, and has accommodations for 1,260 passengers and a crew of 300.

Long the pioneer in the turbo-electric method of steamship propulsion, American shipping sees in the ultramodern liner the fullest development of this type of drive.

The President Coolidge is electric in almost every particular and detail. The motors, from the giant Westinghouse induction synchronous machines which drive its twin propellers, down to the tiny fan motors that contribute to the comfort of a passenger's stateroom, run the scale from more than 13,000 to a fraction of a horsepower.

The ship functions electrically throughout. More than 40 items electrically operated contribute to clean cuisine in the passengers' galley, and nine electric ranges consuming 200 horsepower cook the food. Dough and cake are mixed electrically and baked electrically in two huge ovens. Large refrigerating spaces for the carrying of perishable cargo in the tropics and supplies for the ship's tables are kept cold electrically.

Soviets Plan Celebration of 15th Birthday

MOSCOW.—[U. P.]—Preparations already have been begun here to make the 15th anniversary of the bolshevik revolution in November, 1932, memorable in Russian history.

The celebration of the first decade of the revolution in 1927, when representatives from all over the world participated, will be thrown into the shade by next year's jubilation.

If the present slogan calling for the completion of the five year plan in four years will be carried out, the anniversary would coincide with an announcement of a successfully fulfilled plan and would invest the occasion with additional glamor.

Labor organizations, scientific and cultural societies in all countries will doubtless be invited to send delegations to take part in the celebration.

Travel Trade in Berlin Is Hit by Depression

BERLIN.—[U. P.]—Estimates for the number of American travelers in Berlin during the last two months place the figure at anywhere between 30 and 50 per cent below the total for the same period last year.

The 1930 period was naturally an unusual one, because of the fact that the Passion play in Oberammergau had a great attraction for tourists, but this by no means makes up for the difference in numbers. The decrease was even more marked in travelers from other nations.

This condition is easily traceable, first to the world-wide economic crisis, and second to a particular uneasiness on the part of travelers as to possible developments in Germany during the summer months. News of the bank difficulties and of the emergency decrees kept many from vacationing in the reich who would otherwise have done so. As a matter of fact, foreigners experienced no discomfort whatever due to the financial crisis.

Difficult to Figure.

It is a rather difficult job to reach an accurate total for American travelers, because of their habit of going through a country making one night stands and registering with the police at each point. The most accurate figures possible place the number at 230,000 in 1929 and 300,000 for 1930. The figures for this year are naturally as yet incomplete.

The effects of the decreased tourist traffic have been severe on the important hotels. One of the largest in Berlin has closed a whole floor. At many others all over the reich one can name his price and receive good accommodations.

The large hotels in south Germany, notably in Munich, which last year maintained a high price level, due to the large number of visitors attracted to Bavaria, are now pricing at $1.50 rooms which formerly brought at least twice as much. Pensions [boarding houses] are for the most part only a quarter filled.

Artists Are Scarce.

Their largest patronage has always been among artists, singers and students, and these groups in particular have found it impossible to come abroad this summer. There are many places in the university towns where a student this year can get bed and breakfast for less than $7.50.

The scarcity of foreigners, coupled with the hundred mark fee required of all Germans leaving the country, which was in force during July and August, the two vacation months, so cut down traffic on the railroads and air lines that some services were entirely canceled and others greatly curtailed.

French Cities Preparing for Attack of Gas

They Must Shift for Themselves When Attacked in Wars of the Future.

By Egbert Swenson.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—Cities will have to shift largely for themselves when attacked by poison gas and incendiary bombs in future wars.

They must not fall into the habit of relying on the military. The latter can give them help in repelling peacetime mock attacks and thus give them needed training. But in wartime the army air defense corps will be too busy defending strategic points in the general scheme of defense to have time to look out for civilian populations threatened with extinction by gas and fire.

This general conclusion is found in a report just issued as a result of the recent air defense maneuvers at Nancy when Marshal Henri Petain, who last winter was made first chief of the newly created department of air defense, assisted by a half dozen generals and a large body of air defense troops and engineers, coached the citizenry in "passive resistance" to air attack. The report is issued by Prof. Jacques Parisot of the medical college of the University of Nancy, who is perhaps France's chief civilian specialist in the subject.

Prepare for Future.

France has become active in preparing passive resistance by civilian populations only within the last few months. Prof. Parisot last February returned from a long trip abroad studying methods of foreign cities in defending themselves against air attacks. His report following that trip at last aroused France, rather tardily, to the need of doing something, and several towns, notably Nancy, have since then taken the initiative, backed and counseled by Marshal Petain, to prepare for eventualities.

Discussing the personnel and equipment needed by a city for passive resistance, Prof. Parisot enumerates: Fire department for extinguishing ordinary fires but furnished with gas masks; special section of fire department for rescue work and for clearing areas of gas equipped with "filtering and isolating apparatus" and oiled clothes; police all furnished with masks and a portion or them with even more thorough protection.

Need Thorough Training.

These corps ought to be very thoroughly trained. But since eight out of every ten of firemen and policemen are liable to mobilization in war time, some arrangement ought to be found for having a suitable proportion of these municipal bodies remain at their post, even with the advent of war.

In the Nancy experiment Prof. Parisot reports, the military stretcher bearers were supplemented by volunteer stretcher bearers furnished by the local Boy Scouts. They were lads all over 16, equipped with army stretchers and with specially constructed carts for carrying wounded.

Two hundred nurses at Nancy have been receiving instruction from Prof. Parisot and his aids in the care of casualties resulting from gas and incendiary attacks. Thirty-two have pledged themselves formally to serve the city in case of war.

However, the Parisot report—only the first part of which has appeared so far—declares that specially trained firemen, policemen, stretcher bearers, and nurses are only a part of the measures which must be taken for the protection of cities against air attacks. The second part of his report will deal with the other methods.

Financiers Draft Plans for Easing German Payments

BERLIN.—(AP)—With the countries having short term credits in Germany definitely concluding not to withdraw those credits before March 1, 1932, representatives of American banking houses in Germany are casting about for a solution of the problem which will be presented on the expiration date.

Called the "stillhalte," or "freezing commission," the procedure merely automatically renews all existing short term credits until next spring.

Students of the problem believe the period will be extended for 75 per cent of the present credits. American financial houses, they believe, will insist on at least one-fourth of the debts being met.

An American banker here said it was the consensus of financial representatives that the freezing order would achieve its best results only if extended for two or three years, thus giving German banking, agriculture and industry a chance to regain their feet.

Chicago Sunday Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

October 11, 1931

• THE RULES •

1. Every Sunday for 14 Sundays, starting today, the Chicago Tribune will print on the front page of the Picture Section, color reproductions of famous paintings and other interesting pictures. One or more pictures will appear each Sunday. The public is invited to cut out these pictures, mount them or frame them and submit an appropriate name or title for each picture.

   The Chicago Tribune will pay $10,000.00 in Cash Prizes for the best entries submitted. See prize list below.

2. The pictures may be mounted on paper, cardboard, cloth or any other material. They may be mounted in scrap books if desired. They may be framed if desired. You may draw or paint a frame on each picture if you wish. The pictures may be mounted individually or grouped—as you choose. With each picture must be submitted an appropriate name or title. Each title must be the sender's original thought. In writing your suggestion endeavor to tell what the picture means. Try to be clever and brief. A short title is better than a long one. Be humorous or serious as you wish.

3. Hold all pictures until you have the complete set which will have appeared during the 14 consecutive Sundays starting today. Then send them in. Address your entry "Pictures," Chicago Tribune, Post Office Box 1539, Chicago, Illinois.

4. This contest is open to everyone—men, women, boys and girls—except employes of the Chicago Tribune and their families. It does not matter where you live.

5. You pay nothing. Just prove your skill. Titles or names for the pictures may be handwritten, typewritten or lettered. Style of writing will not count. Only the meaning of the titles will be considered.

6. All entries must be in by midnight 21 days after the fourteenth Sunday of publication. Entries may be sent by mail, postage prepaid, by express prepaid or may be delivered in person. If you send your entry by mail, be sure to use sufficient postage or it will be returned by the Post Office Department. If you wish your entry returned enclose sufficient postage and it will be returned to you after the judging has been completed. The Tribune will not be responsible for entries lost in transit or in any other manner.

7. The judging will be based upon the following:
   (a) The cleverest, most original names or titles.
   (b) The best appearing mountings.

8. You need not purchase the Chicago Tribune to compete. You may copy or trace the pictures from the Tribune and send in your copies. The Tribune may be examined at any of its offices or at Public Libraries free of charge.

9. The judges will be a committee appointed by the Chicago Tribune. Entrants agree to accept their decision as final. In case of ties a duplicate award will be paid to each tying contestant. Due to the wide interest, the Tribune cannot engage in correspondence on this subject.

14 "Budget-Saving" Menus developed by

THE KROGER FOOD FOUNDATION

to help you add healthful variety to your meals... make fewer food dollars go farther... help you practice thrift with pleasure and with pride

NOW, at this timeliest of times, THE KROGER FOOD FOUNDATION comes to you with the welcome news of a new service—two specially developed groups of "Budget-Saving" Menus, for breakfasts, luncheons and dinners, for fourteen days. Menus selected by experts of THE KROGER FOOD FOUNDATION for proper balance and health-giving nutrients. Menus approved by domestic scientists as having the greatest appetite appeal for the most families. Menus that you will approve, too, because they will show you how to spend less, and get more for every food dollar that you do spend.

To give you a "sample" of this new service, one group of "Budget-Saving" Dinner Menus is printed here. Fourteen of them—planned to appeal to your sense of thrift, and, at the same time, help you keep up the food standards on your table.

To fit in with these dinner menus, THE KROGER FOOD FOUNDATION has also developed breakfast and luncheon menus for each of these fourteen days—all overlapping, one dependent on the other, so you can do your planning and your marketing for days in advance. And that's another sure way to save, you know. This first group of menus can be served to a family of four at a cost of $30, or less, for the two weeks (based on the prevailing prices in a large midwestern city).

For those whose food budget is less than $15 a week, THE KROGER FOOD FOUNDATION offers a second group of menus—three a day for fourteen days—which can be served to a family of four for $10 (or less) a week.

Both groups of "Budget-Saving" Menus are offered to you in THE KROGER FOOD FOUNDATION'S latest bulletin, "Budget-Saving Menus for 14 Days." This bulletin also gives weekly shopping orders, with exact quantities, together with recipes and such helpful suggestions as how to serve left-overs disguised in new and appetizing dishes . . . how to save back vegetables and fruits to combine in salads . . . how to cook tomorrow's luncheon with tonight's dinner.

Of course, you will want a copy of this bulletin, and you can get it at your neighborhood Kroger Store tomorrow morning. But better go in early, as there is always a big demand for these Foundation Bulletins. Or, if you prefer, write direct to The Kroger Food Foundation, Cincinnati, O.

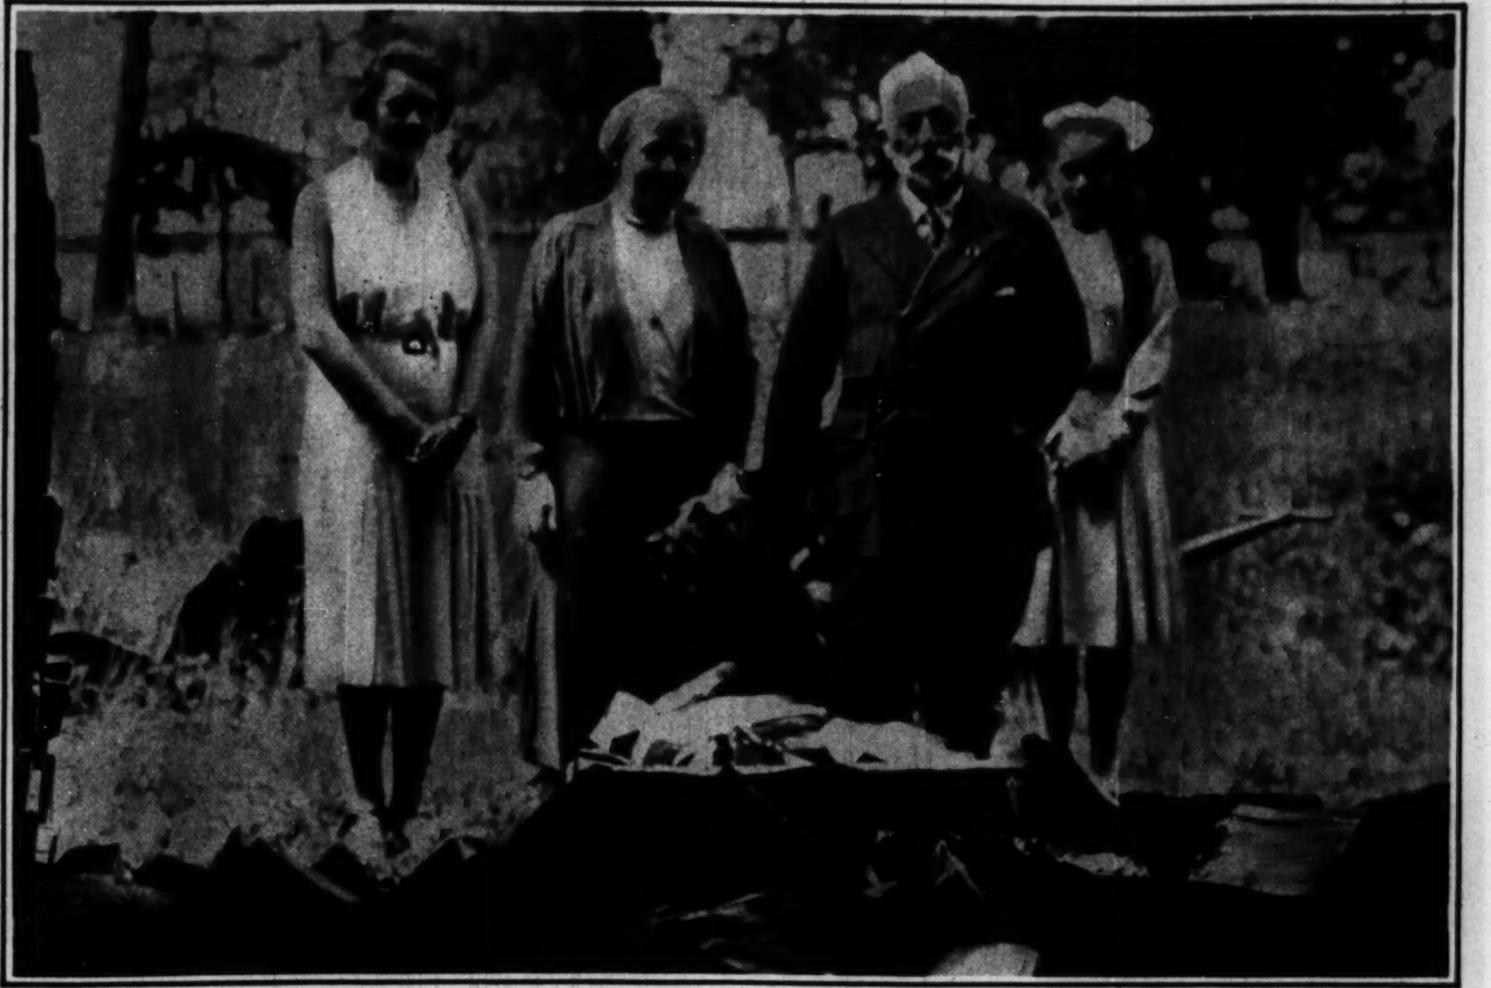
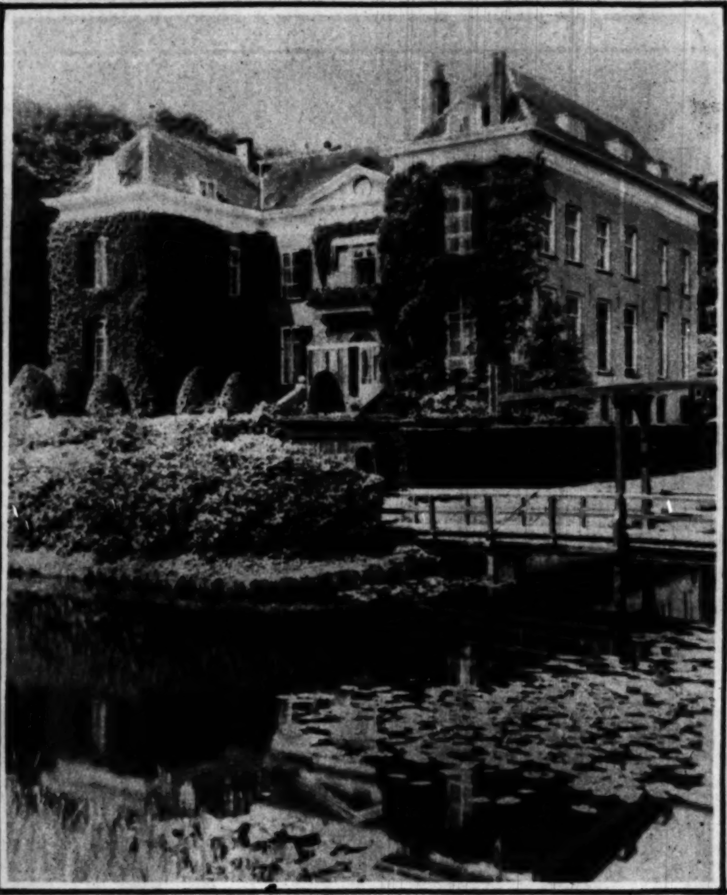
THE FORMER KAISER'S STUDY—The student's escritoire in the foreground is the present throne of the former German war lord. Adorned with photographs of his present wife, his spectacles, a match safe and the impediments and paraphernalia of the inveterate marginal annotator is this writing desk where William Hohenzollern spends many of his hours each day. On the wall hang battle pictures and other images reminiscent of his imperial days, surmounted by a girlhood painting and the last camera portrait of his first wife, the former Kaiserin Augusta-Victoria, who died at Doorn after his abdication. (Associated Press photo.)



AS FRIEDRICH WILHELM VICTOR ALBERT, EMPEROR AND KING, the mild and placid man in this group led his nation to disaster and incurred the enmity of the world. As Mynheer Hohenzollern of Doorn House, Holland, he devotes his time in exile to religious study, and at seventy-two has become greatly interested in aviation. The former kaiser is pictured above on the grounds at Doorn, with his wife, Hermine, and her daughters, Hermine, at the left, and Henriette. (Associated Press photo.)



DOORN HOUSE, the exiled former kaiser's home in Holland, is rarely pictured. Surrounded by high walls and set in spacious grounds, it is inaccessible to tourists and photographers. This comparatively tiny house is the castle of the former tenant of the huge palaces of Potsdam, of Sans Souci and of the host of other residences of the one-time overlord of a great nation. (Associated Press photo.)

UNVEILING A BUST OF THE MAN WHO INDUCTED LINCOLN INTO THE PRESIDENCY—Chief Justice and Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes are pictured at the left and Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland and Joseph D. Baker are shown at the right of the bust of Roger Brooke Taney, chief justice from 1836 to 1864, which memorial was dedicated at Frederick, Md., by Mr. Hughes. A Dog in the City

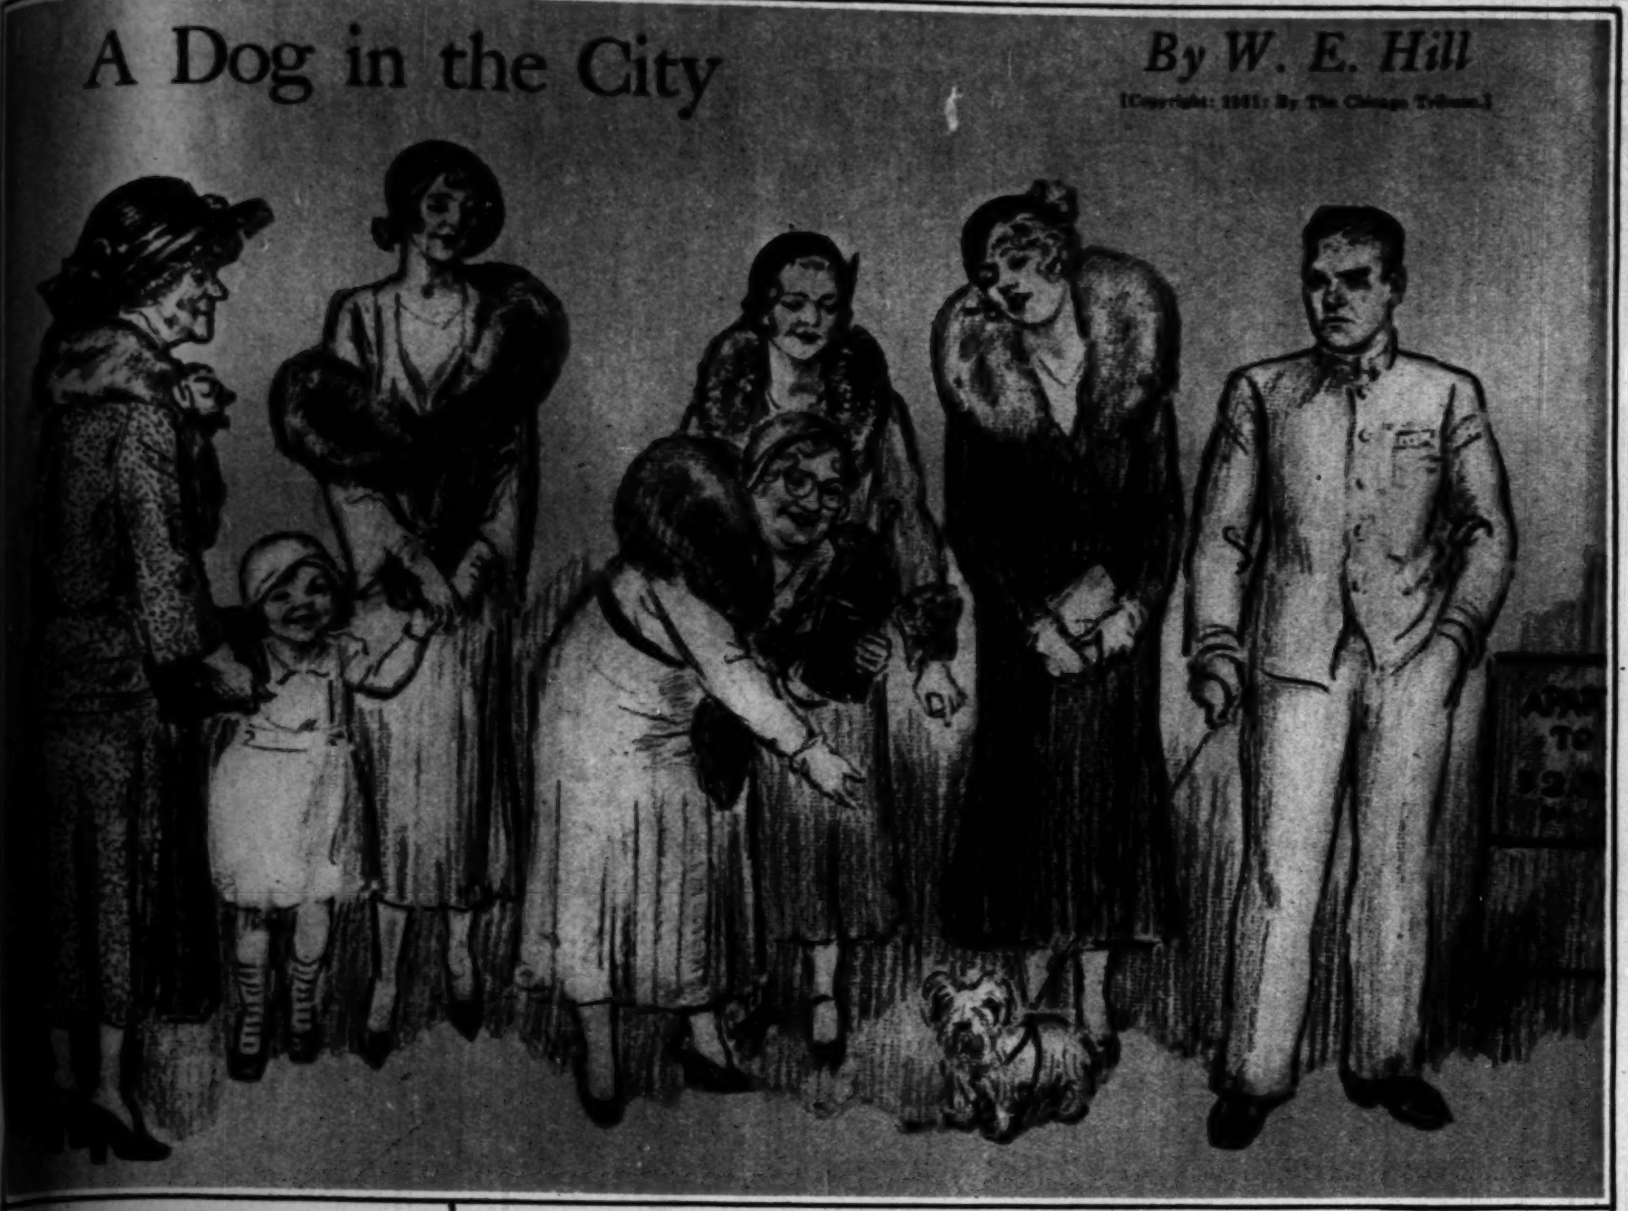
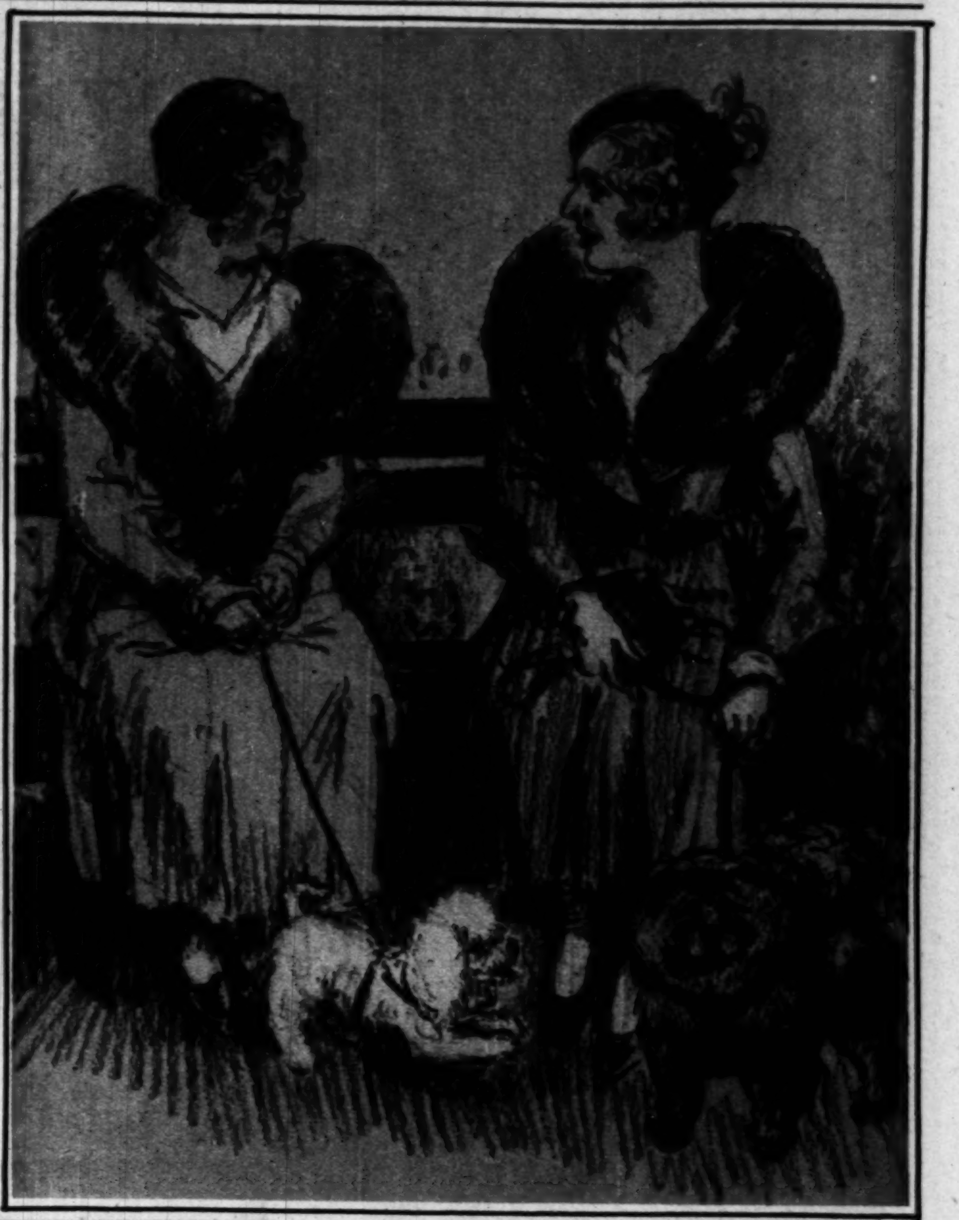
By W. E. Hill

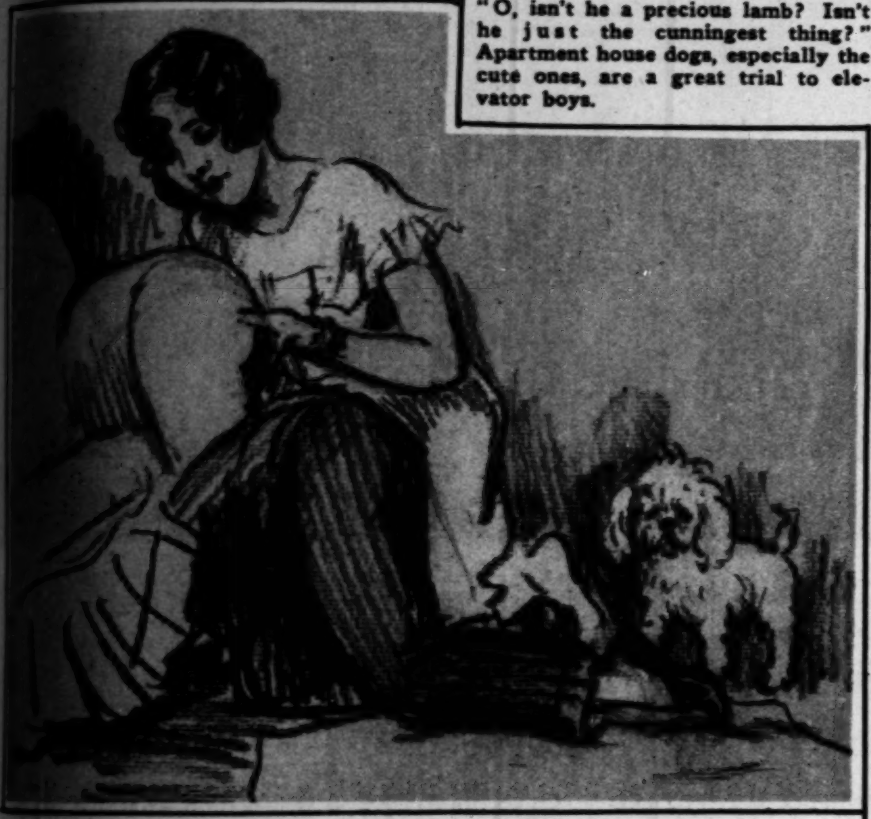
[Copyright: 1931: By The Chicago Tribune.]



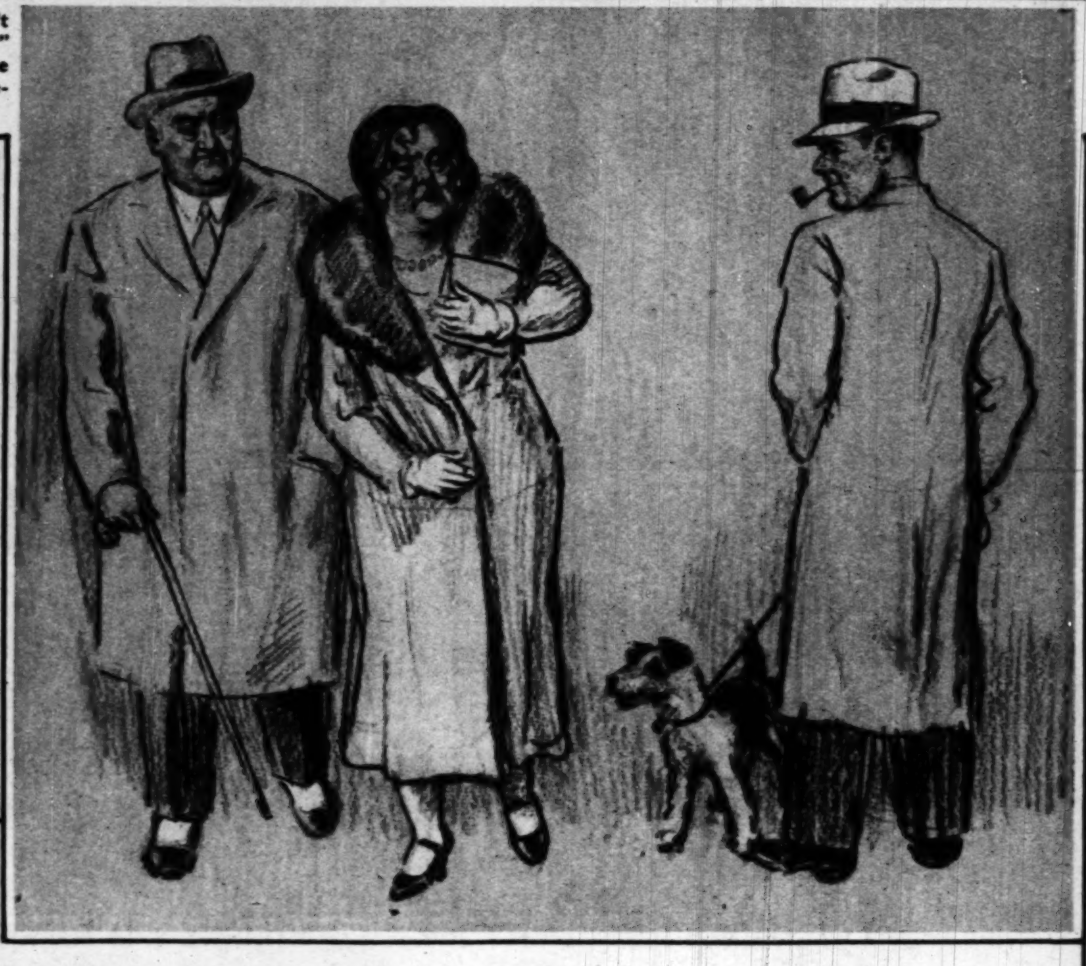
"O, isn't he a precious lamb? Isn't he just the cunningest thing?" Apartment house dogs, especially the cute ones, are a great trial to elevator boys.



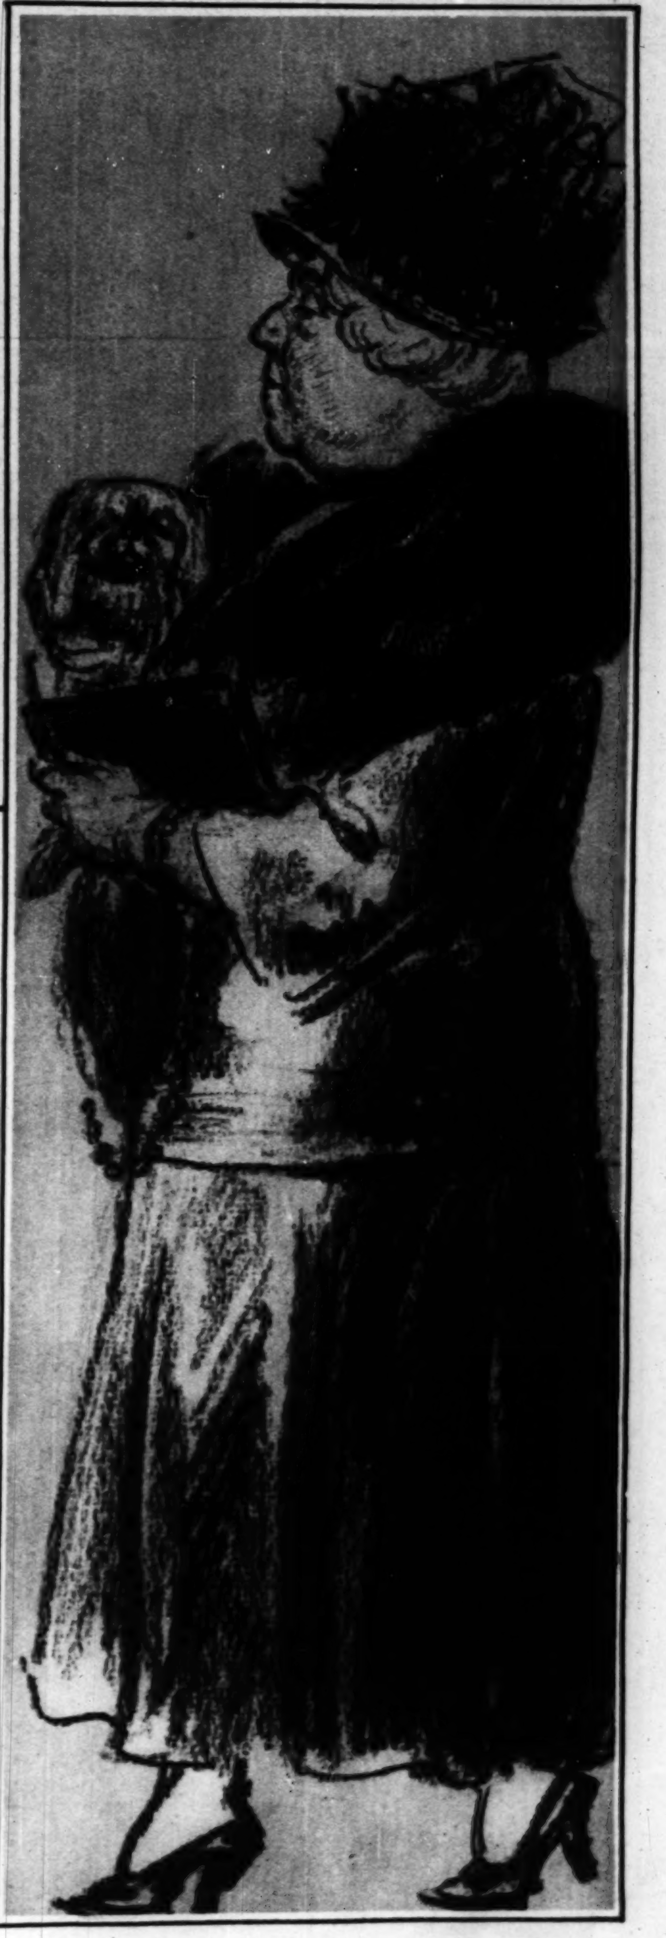
"Just a plate of hamburger night and morning and sometimes a beef bone, but I can't get her to care for vegetables."



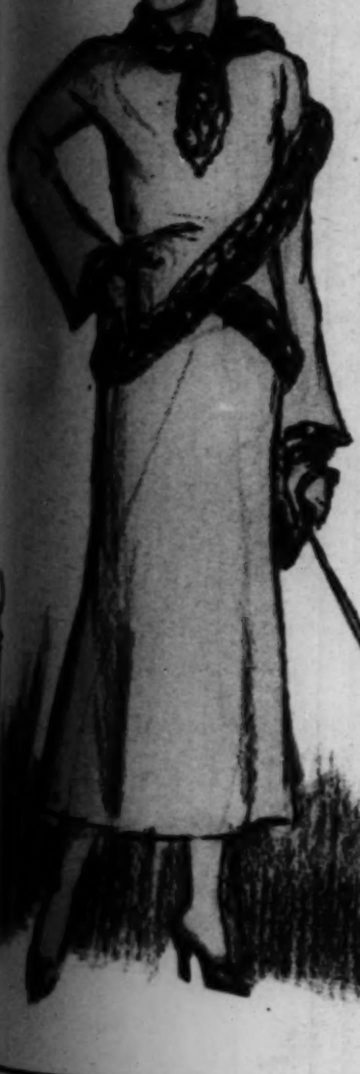
This is an everyday scene in a city apartment where a dog is an important member of the family circle. So few dogs are willing to retrieve a ball that rolls under the furniture, you know.



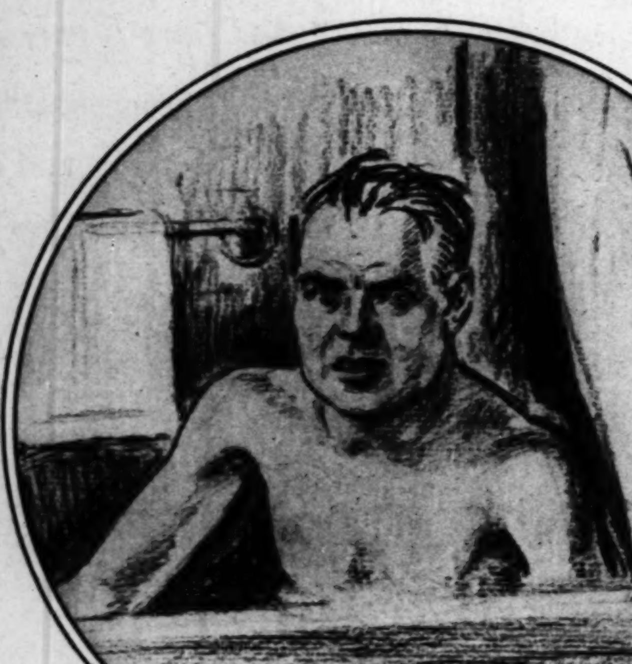
Dog owners divide human beings into two classes — those who like dogs and those who do not. Dogs do pretty much the same thing and know right away which humans are to be played with and which are to be barked at.



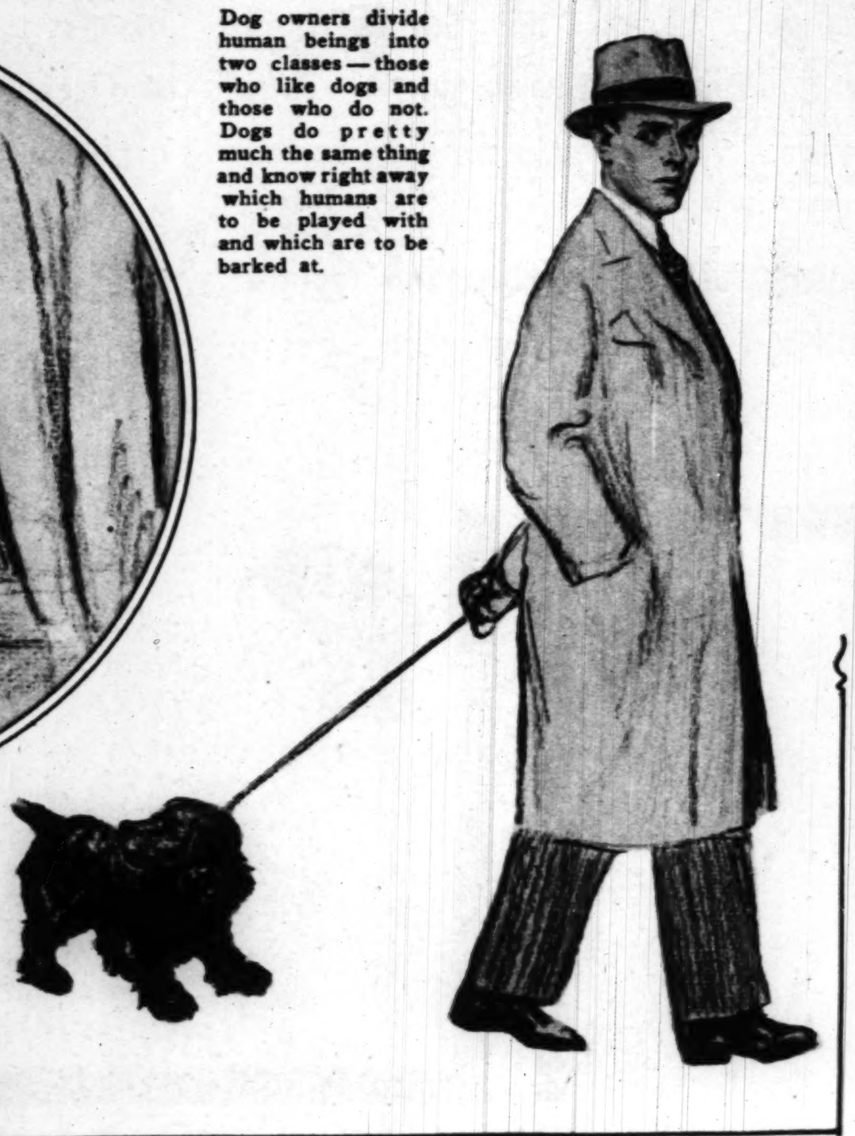
Francie, the Peke, leads a very expensive life, a almost never gets away from her mistress long enoug to sniff at things in the gutter, which is a great sorrow to Francie. She is off for her daily motor ride.



Katherine is generally one lap ahead of the common herd, whether it's dogs or interior decorators. She's gone intensely Victorian this year and has bought a pug. O, yes; they're breeding them again.



"Gosh, Dorothy; this tub is full of dog hairs. Have you been giving Patrick another bath?"



Blackie hasn't her muzzle on this bright October morning, and her master is giving the corner cop a wide berth.

SALESPEOPLE EVERYWHERE told me: "IVORY is safest for washing fine things"

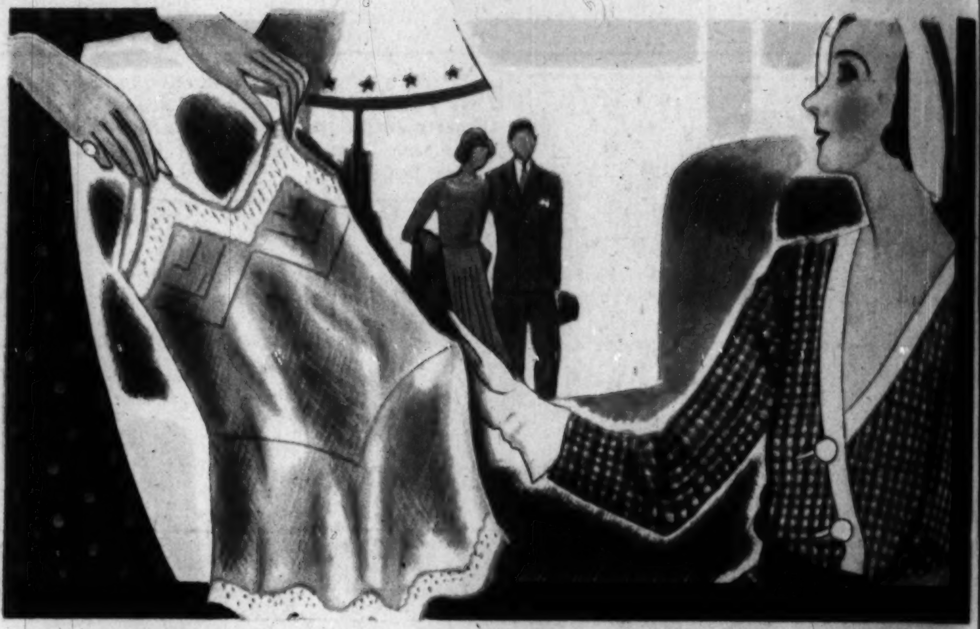
Whether you live in the East or the West, you can learn in the fine shops of your own city what I traveled 4500 miles to learn.



In New York or San Francisco, salespeople recommended Ivory for silks oftener than all other soaps together.

MILES and miles of traveling . . . hundreds of smart shops to visit . . . So many lovely garments to admire . . . and thousands of interviews with expert saleswomen. That's been my life for several months!

Interesting, yes. And very informative. For I confirmed again one very important fact. Fashions may change . . . Lovely new fabrics appear . . . And new soaps make their bow . . . But salespeople in the finest shops say more enthusiastically than ever . . . "Ivory gives the safest care to all fine things."

"Use Ivory to wash fine silks, woolens, delicate cottons and rayons." I heard this not only in one city. And not only in a few stores. But in every store, in every one of 30 leading cities.

Salespeople in every city I visited advised Ivory oftener than all other soaps together. Ivory in one of its various forms—in the cake, or in the flake form, or in the new instant-dissolving form—Ivory Snow.

And isn't it natural? The most important virtue a fine-fabric soap can have is purity—gentleness. And Ivory is pure and safe without question. Pure and gentle enough to protect the rosy-posy skins of the five or six millions of babies it bathes every day. So pure and safe that salespeople recommend it above all other soaps for your finest and most delicate fabrics.

HOPE ANDREWS

- ● News! Ivory Flakes are now chiffon-thin! Dissolve instantly in lukewarm water!

. . . kind to everything it touches
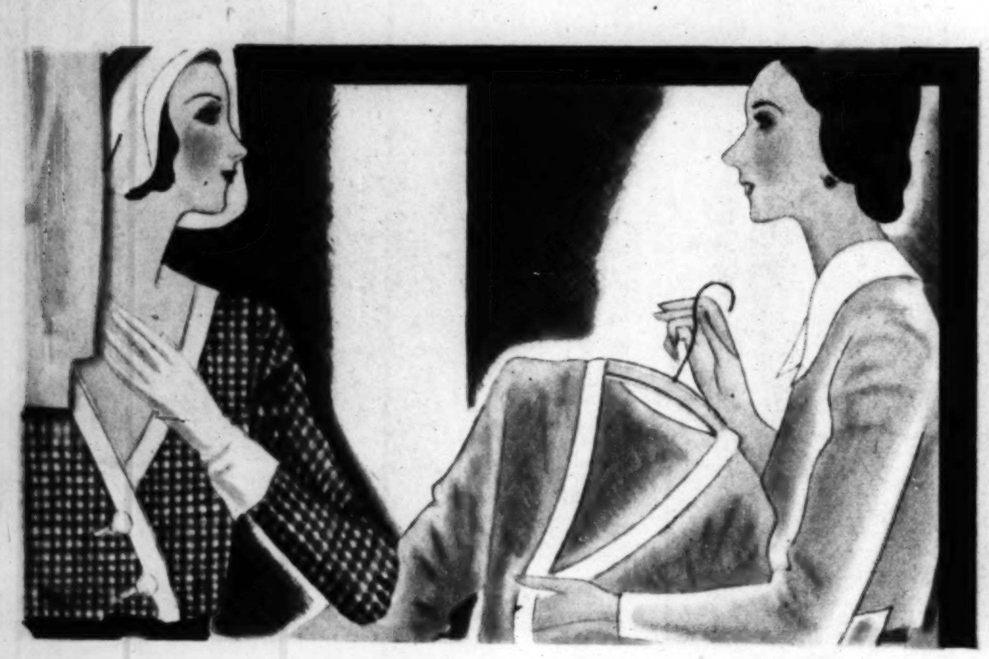
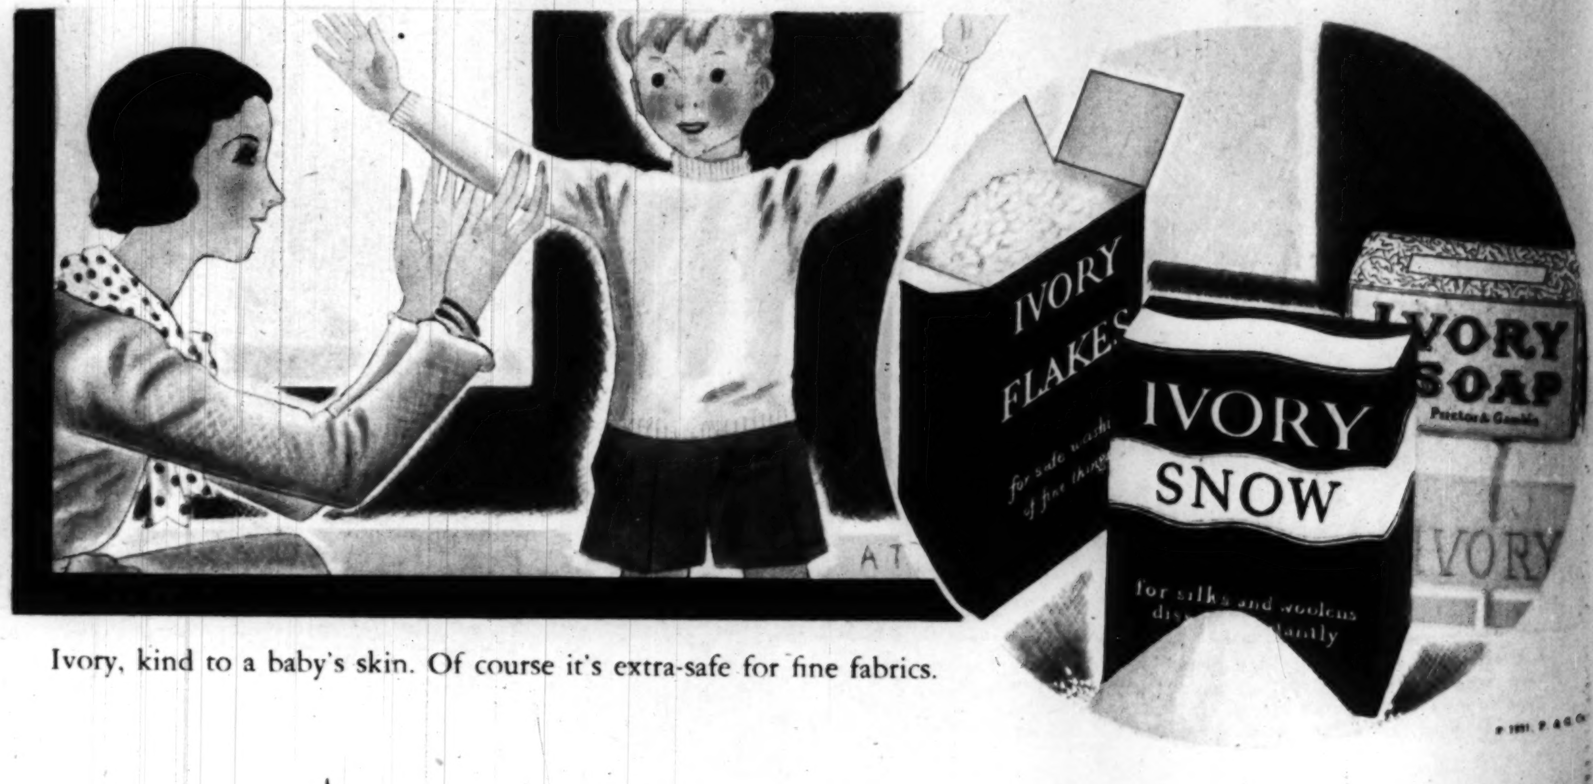
99 44/100 % Pure



In Minneapolis or Memphis—"Ivory is safest for wool."



Ivory, kind to a baby's skin. Of course it's extra-safe for fine fabrics.

THEY GUARD THE BEAUTY OF YOUR SMILE

YOUR DENTIST . . . and this safe, effective dental cream

MANY things may contribute to your charm: lovely hair—lustrous eyes—good features—a fine complexion. But it is the flash of white teeth in your smile that makes you irresistible!

Teeth that are cleaned safely and thoroughly twice a day, and kept in order by regular visits to the dentist, stay sound and retain their beauty far longer. Protect them! Keep the radiance of your smile!

For twenty-five years dentists everywhere have used Milk of Magnesia and recognized its value in the care of the teeth. That is one reason why so many dentists recommend Squibb Dental Cream. It is made with more than 50% Squibb Milk of Magnesia—velvet-smooth, pure and palatable. Squibb's not only cleans beautifully, but its gentle polishing action brings out all the natural luster of the teeth.

Dentifrices that contain harsh abrasives or powerful bleaches can be positively harmful. You can use Squibb's with the certainty that it is safe. It contains no grit—no astringent—nothing which might injure your teeth or the tender tissues of your gums.

You'll like Squibb's. It's so pleasant to the taste and so refreshing! It leaves such a clean, invigorated feeling in your mouth! Get a tube from your druggist today.

A Master Shoe Man Discovers the Secret of Fitting the Foot in Motion!

FOOT SAVER'S NEW "FREE-WALKING" LASTS
now solve the problem of perfect fit at arch and heel

HOW to fit the foot in motion was a problem with which expert shoe men struggled for years. It remained for this master designer to create an entirely new type of last.

Today FOOT SAVER SHOES, made on these new "Free-Walking" lasts, are acclaimed everywhere as the final word in shoe fashion and comfort. Now, FOOT SAVER SHOES achieve perfect fit at arch and heel—not only while your feet are in repose but while in motion!

FOOT SAVER'S patented inbuilt construction offers firm support to the arch, holding it always in balance. By virtue of the "Free-Walking" lasts, FOOT SAVERS hug the heel (no matter how narrow) and prevent slipping or bulging at any point.

IN THE SOUTH AMERICAN JUNGLE—Dr. Herbert Spencer Dickey and his party portage their supply canoe over rocks in the headwaters of the Orinoco river, on the boundary of Venezuela and Brazil. The first white man to view the source of this second largest river of the continent, Dr. Dickey returned to civilization with topographical observations which, it is claimed, will alter the boundary lines of the two countries. TOMMIES' BABY PARADE—Men of the hussars saw their families off for Egypt at Feltham station, Middlesex, England, and held this impromptu baby parade with their children. The soldiers themselves will soon leave on troopships to rejoin their families at their foreign post. (Acme photo.)

Round the world thrills the bright Challenge of Beauty

Switzerland

The Marquise de Polignac says, "I spend the winter months at St. Moritz and take part in all the winter sports. The cold dry air draws and chaps my skin unless protected with Pond's Vanishing Cream and kept soft and supple with Pond's Cold Cream ... In fact, I have got the Pond's habit completely!"

Italy

Mrs. John Davis Lodge, well known as Francesca Braggiotti, the dancer, was born in Florence, Italy. She says, "With all my heart I believe in beauty... and the perfect beauty of a clear fresh complexion lies within every woman's reach . . . thanks to the four Pond's preparations."

California

Mrs. Alister McCormick, of the Chicago family, whose Santa Barbara gardens are famous, is blonde with blue eyes, golden hair and exquisite complexion. "Keeping your skin nice is no occult secret," she says. "Pond's four simple preparations are delightfully quick and easy to use."

Argentina

Mrs. Potter d'Orsay Palmer, lovely young bride of a grandson of the late Mr. and Mrs. Potter Palmer, is a native of Argentina. "Elegance is the new watchword," she says. "Pond's makes it simple, for the four preparations are all one needs to keep one's complexion exquisite."

India

Lady Violet Astor, daughter of an Earl, has lived beneath the blazing sun of India, then amid the snows of Canada—yet preserved the dewy freshness of her rose-petal complexion. "Pond's have done a wonderful service to women," she says. "They've put in our hands the means of making our skin look younger and younger each year . . . Those Two Creams, Tissues and Freshener—They are practical, effectual, delightful."

Russia

Distinguished Mrs. Norman Ogden Whitehouse, of Newport and Melton Mowbray, England, is the Princess Tamara. "After all, what is so important as a beautiful skin?" she asks. "No wonder women prize Pond's four delightful preparations and follow the Pond's Method for home treatment faithfully."

England

Lady Buchanan-Jardine is the beautiful leader of the young English hunting set. "Is clear-skinned, radiant good health as much the fashion in America as it is in England?" she asks. "We think a woman's complexion is the index of her chic . . . Smart women follow a daily régime to keep their skin fine and clear. Like many others, I follow the Pond's Method of home treatment of the skin. It at once is easy, satisfactory, complete."

Spain

The Duquesa de Alba has the classic Spanish beauty —raven hair and olive skin like velvet. She says, "Our inherited wisdom and our modern sophistication bring us no aid more effective than Pond's Two Creams . . . In using them I have found my skin receiving refreshment, stimulation, protection."

France

Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt says, "I've lived so long abroad that people often ask if I still use Pond's... Indeed I do, for not even the beauty-wise French can make anything to compare with the famous Two Creams . . . And the new Tissues and the new Skin Freshener are charming!"

Florida

Mrs. Gifford Pinchot II is a vivid "October blonde" with lovely tea-rose complexion. "Just the four steps of Pond's, followed every day and never omitted," she says, "will keep one's skin exquisitely smooth and fresh and clear . . . In all the world, nothing is finer or purer than Pond's Cold Cream for cleansing, the dainty Tissues to remove the cream . . . Skin Freshener to tone and firm and delicious Vanishing Cream for powder base."

Morocco

The Duchesse de Nemours, a charming American by birth, says, "In Europe, women of title must fulfill their duty of being always lovely . . . I use Pond's Two Creams and the enchantingly soft Tissues and perfumed Skin Freshener whether in France . . . Morocco or America."

Ecuador

Mrs. Franklin Mott Gunther, beautiful wife of a distinguished American diplomat, lives in Ecuador. She says, "I have used Pond's ever since I was a young girl. For Pond's Creams are utterly wholesome, and I've always believed the skin should receive simple care. The new Skin Freshener and Tissues just complete this healthful Method of care . . . The Freshener tones the skin so gently, and the Tissues are so soft and fine."

A League of Nations for Beauty would be a sure success . . . with Pond's to lead the way!

For they are prized around the world, these four delightful preparations . . . the famous Two Creams, the softer Cleansing Tissues, and the youth-giving Skin Freshener.

In every land beautiful women follow the easy Pond's way to keep their skin enchantingly young and lovely.

Swift, infallible, these marvelous beauty aids assure the pore-deep cleansing, the gentle bracing and toning, the exquisite protection that every woman's skin must have.

Read what the twelve world-famous beauties pictured above say of Pond's. These distinguished women are but a few of the countless devotees of this easy way to personal loveliness!

The Duchess of Marlborough in her historic castle at Blenheim, England, says Pond's Two Creams "keep her skin exquisitely cared for."

And the distinguished Duchesse de Vendôme and the Duchesse de Guise also praise these favorite beauty aids.

Aristocratic American society leaders like Mrs. Alfred Victor du Pont, Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, Jr. and Mrs. Adrian Iselin II, are users of Pond's. Miss Anne Morgan, who is famous as president of the American Woman's Association, says, "Pond's helps women achieve an attractive appearance through providing such excellent products so inexpensively."

Use Pond's yourself! It is the royal road to a lovely clear skin, glowing with health and youth. Apply the four products in this order:

For pore-deep cleansing Pond's Cold Cream

To wipe away the cream Pond's Cleansing Tissues

To tone and firm the skin Pond's Skin Freshener

For powder base, protection Pond's Vanishing Cream

1—Pat in generously Pond's Cold Cream for pore-deep cleansing of your face and neck several times daily, always after exposure. Let the fine oils sink into the pores and float all the clogged dirt, powder and make-up to the surface . . . At bedtime, repeat this important cleansing to remove the day's accumulation of grime.

2—Wipe away with Pond's Cleansing Tissues, better because softer, more absorbent. In white or peach color.

3—With Pond's Skin Freshener pat cleansed skin briskly to brace and tone, banish oiliness, close and refine pores, promote a lovely natural color.

4—Smooth on Pond's Vanishing Cream always before you powder, to make the powder go on more evenly and last longer. This disguises little blemishes and gives a velvety finish . . . Use this exquisite Vanishing Cream not only on your face, but wherever you powder—neck, shoulders, arms. And it is marvelous to keep your hands soft and white!
